Mr. REAGAN. Mr. Chairman, if all the members of this House had been here continuously for the last ten years I do not know that I should be called upon to say what I think it right I should say at this time. On the occasion of every effort which has been made within that period to protect and promote the interests of the people and to restrain and control the avarice of the bondholders and the bankers of this country we have had the same solemn warning, the same terrible prophecies from the gentleman from New York [Mr. HEWITT] that we have heard this morning. I think those warnings in their solemnity and terrific character were fully equal to what they are to-day when, in 1878, we were about to adopt measures to arrest the taking up and canceling of the legal-tender notes and were seeking to leave those notes in the hands of the people as a part of their currency. Again, sir, when during the same year we provided for the recoinage of silver the gentleman from New York warned us with all the solemnity of a seer that we would drive gold out of the country, would impoverish mercantile people, and starve labor. At every session since that time (unless possibly the last session was an exception) we have had the same solemn warnings from the same gentleman in regard to the terrible dangers threatening the finances of our country; and this, sir, in the face of some official facts to which the attention of almost every other person than himself has been called.

Has the coinage of silver driven gold out of the country? In 1878 the amount of gold goin in the country was $218,000,000, and of bullion, about $10,000,000. Since that time the gold in the country has steadily increased, year by year, until in 1885, as appeared by the Treasury reports, the amount of gold coin in the country was $563,000,000, and of bullion $63,422,646. These figures show the amount of gold in the country. The amount of gold in the Treasury in 1878 was $116,520,934 of gold coin and bullion, and $6,853,789 of silver coin and bullion. The very next year after this disastrous work of coining silver was begun the gold in the Treasury amounted to $135,382,639 of gold coin and bullion, and $30,557,533 of silver coin and bullion; and the amount continued to increase until 1885, when there was in the Treasury $234-975,851 in gold coin and bullion, and $181,362,978 in silver coin and bullion; and the increase has continued.

The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MORRISON] stated to us yesterday that the gold reserve had increased $26,000,000 since the introduction of this resolution by him last January. With these facts before us, and in the face of the steady growth of the country in prosperity and wealth, we are still treated to this deluge of woful prophecies year by year whenever the bondholders and the bankers conclude there is danger that justice may be done to the people, and their power to oppress the rest of the country for their own benefit is liable to be diminished.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. MORRISON. Mr. Chairman, I promised yesterday to yield ten minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HENDERSON]. I must keep faith; and I now yield to him for that time.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. Mr. Chairmon, I am no doctor in finance, and I do not know that I shall be able to add much to the information of the House, but as I am obliged to vote on this resolution I propose to give briefly my reasons for the vote I shall cast in favor of the resolution. I can not consent to consult the financial doctors of New York, as has been suggested by the able gentleman from that city, for the reason that when a man in New York city wants to get a whole dollar which a man in Dubuque is entitled to half of, the Dubuque man is not wise if he goes to the New Yorker to learn now to get his share of the dollar. Furthermore, Mr. Chairman, I feel that we would not to-day enjoy the safe and sound currency which this country has if we had always consulted the financial managers of that city.

I favor this resolution because it enforces a Republican proposition. The Republican party inaugurated the system of taking liberally from the amount that could be spared to pay off the bonded debt. It has been shown in this debate on both sides of the Chamber that the amount of money in the Treasury has increased; and in voting for this resolution I but insist that the present Executive shall follow the course marked out and pursued by Republican Executives.

I would not have been in favor of this resolution a few months ago, because I saw other places to put this money, where I think it ought to have gone in preference to paying off the public debt so rapidly. But having become convinced that the majority of this House and the President of the United States will not allow any more legislation looking to the doing of justice to the soldiers of this country—realizing that the money can not be taken for that purpose, because the majority here is opposed to that, I do want the money taken out of the Treasury and paid upon the public debt.

We have had our eyes opened here during yesterday and to-day. It was only in January last we were told there was no money to pay the pensions of the soldiers. That gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] whose voice sounded loud in this Chamber to-day, told us in January last we could not have money for that purpose because it was not in the Treasury. Now he is supporting a resolution and has admitted that there is $70,000,000 to spare for the purpose of buying the bonds of the country.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I will tell you frankly why I am not afraid to vote for this resolution. Even the bankers of New York, the financial giants and doctors, have told us you can safely carry on business with 33⅓ per cent. of the cash on hand. That is 33⅓ per cent. of your liabilities. Country bankers all over the nation work on 25 per cent. All admit that 40 per cent. is a safe margin even for times of "financial storm," to quote from the gentleman from New York [Mr. HEWITT].

Now, we find there are $652,000,000 in round numbers of presentable liabilities outstanding against the Government, including $346,000,-000 of greenbacks. Forty per cent. of that amounts to $262,000,000. Upon that rule, with $262,000,000 we could safely run this Government even if the storms of financial trouble were beating against us.

But we have $509,000,000 of available assets to-day within the check of the financial head of this Government. With $509,000,000 to meet and dispose of $652,000,000 of presentable liabilities I am not afraid to vote for this resolution.

One thought more, Mr. Chairman. I confess that this matter has been presented with an ability never before exhibited in this Chamber within my experience. No man can blindly say there are not unknown factors in the problem. I do not say there are not, but if any member here has a doubt we know the Secretary of the Treasury will not pay over $10,000,000 a month. We know in a short four months we will be reassembled here. I say let the thousands and tens of thousands of people who are demanding the money shall be taken out of the Treasury and paid on our debts, let their voices be heard and answered. We certainly have near at hand a speedy remedy. Forty million dollars paid off between this and the meeting of the next session of Congress can not certainly shake the foundations of the financial system of our Government. For one with a safety-valve within reach of my hand and with this available sum of money within the check of the Secretary of the Treasury, I shall vote for this resolution without fear. I trust it will give good results to the community at large.

It has been said that it countenanced repudiation, that it means paying off bonds in silver. I just want to say on that proposition I am perfectly willing to stand upon the same footing with every other man in the country for what the Government owes me, and if the bondholder is not content to take the coin which I have to take and which his contract gives him I will shed no tears over his distress. He has got to take in his investment the chances I take in receiving the coin of the country for my services. [Applause.]

Mr. MORRISON. Mr. Chairman, our friends on the other side of the Hall are apparently much disturbed at our divisions of opinion and purpose, what to them seems the unsatisfactory Democratic situation and our lack of support of the Democratic administration. In the confident belief that after the next election they will be less satisfied with the Democratic situation than they now are, I dismiss further consideration of the subject.

Neither will I stop to consider the question of motives. I do not in debate question the motives of other gentlemen, and never feel obliged to vindicate my own. Whoever questions them is likely to sustain greater loss than I, else I have lived to very little purpose.

This question of getting money out of the Treasury which serves no useful purpose there is not new with me. Four years ago I sought to accomplish this. Two years ago I again introduced it when a Republican administration was in power, and I had the co-operation of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL], as I now have. It was then opposed, as it is now, and by the same gentlemen, or so many of them as are still here. It was urged then as it is now on what was believed to be its merits, and with no relation to the fact of who was then in control of the Government, through its administration. We desired them to enact into law what had been left to discretion, which was as we believed liable to abuse.

This was prevented by what influences I need not say. Sufficient that it was not adopted. This should at least quiet the apprehensions of gentlemen over the way as well as the gentleman from New York about myself or anybody else showing a want of fidelity to the administration because we do not surrender our opinions as to legislation long ago entertained—entertained, urged before this administration came into power. I do not understand that fidelity to my party or its administration requires any such sacrifice as the surrender of opinion long entertained. Since the Republicans have come to support the administration such surrender or sacrifice is not needed. I trust we will have their help now in sustaining the President in all his vetoes, at least all of his vetoes that are good, and they are mostly good and well timed.

The gentleman from New York [Mr. HEWITT] expresses the belief that when we are sick and must look up a doctor we ought to have one skilled in medicine, and nobody questions the accuracy of this information. When we come to a question of finance we ought, he says, to go for advice to men skilled in finance, and that those most skilled in finance are to be found in New York.

This is probably all true; but when I look for a a financier or a physician or anybody to assist me in anything I will not go to New York, Illinois, or anywhere else to find a doctor who has no interest in my good health, or a financier whose interests are adverse to my own. Nor would we be wise in this matter to take counsel from financiers, however able and skilled, whose interests admonish them that dead capital and unused money better lie in the vaults of the Treasury than their own.

And now it is said that a vote in the House for this measure is the declaration of a want of confidence in the President and his administration. Such a vote, the gentleman from New York tells us, would in England dissolve the government or cabinet and necessitate the creation of a new one. In this the gentleman forgets how unlike this Government of ours is to that of England.

We have co-ordinate departments or separate departments or branches of the Government, each independent of the other: an Executive, who has duties to perform; the legislative, which has other duties to perform; and because they do not always agree it never before occurred to anybody, either from New York or anywhere else, that either the one or the other was condemned, censured, voted, or declared not entitled to the confidence of the one or the other or the people who make both.

Neither the Cabinet, this House, nor the country went to pieces only a few days ago when a measure as near to the administration as the one now being considered was voted upon and voted down in this House; at all events it was not voted up.

If the President has any great anxiety on or interest in this subject he has never communicated the fact to anybody in any public way, and certainly he has not communicated the fact to me at all.

This joint resolution, Mr. Chairman, leaves the question of the legal-tender reserve or redemption fund and its legal status just as we find it in the law to-day. It deals with what is in the Treasury over and above the liabilities including the reserve, and leaves, as I say, whatever legal rights this fund has just as now provided by law. The hundred million of reserve is left as we find it. Why should the gentleman from New York predict, as he does, that the country is to become a financial wreck and its Treasury a faithless bankrupt giving out dishonest (or silver) dollars if this measure shall become law and $70,000,000 of idle money be paid out? And gentlemen on the other side assume to believe with him and I therefore suppose do believe with him.

In 1881, but five years ago, as the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. MCKINLEY] told us a few moments ago, this surplus was reduced to $100,069,000, including the $100,000,000 Treasury-note reserve. Did any harm come to the country? Did anybody lose faith in the Government or in the Treasury to keep its engagements or in its ability to pay? Is the gentleman from New York here speaking for the Democratic party to tell me that it requires seventy millions more of money in the Treasury in order that the people may have confidence in its Treasury because this is a Democratic administration? [Laughter and applause.]

If the people all over the country had confidence in the Government, in its financial faith, and ability to pay in 1881, when we had a Republican administration and the surplus, including the reserves, was $100,000,000, in the name of all that is good, should they not have faith now, when that good man Cleveland, of whom we have heard so many fine things said to-day by men of both parties, is at the head of the Government? [Laughter and applause.] And none of you think more highly of him than I do; but I am not bound to accept all his views, whatever they may be, on this subject. The country, its credit, and its people ought to be at least as safe with a Democratic administration and one hundred millions in the Treasury for suplus and reserve as it was under a Republican administration with a like sum for the like purpose; and if it is not, then, Mr. Chairman, we ought not to be trying to get the money out, but ought to get out ourselves. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, I am very anxious for a vote and will detain the House no longer. I ask that the amendment offered by me may be adopted and made part of the resolution.

Mr. BRUMM. I suppose there will be debate upon the amendments? [Cries of "No!" and "Vote!" "Vote!"]

The CHAIRMAN. The joint resolution will be reported by the Clerk.

The joint resolution was read, as follows:

Joint resolution (H. Res. 126) directing payment of the surplus in the Treasury on the public debt.

Resolved, &c., That whenever the surplus or balance in the Treasury, including amount held for redemption of United States notes, shall exceed the sum of $100,000,000, it shall be, and is hereby made, the duty of the Secretary of the Treasury to apply such excess, in sums not less than ten millions per month, during the existence of any such surplus or excess, to the payment of the interest-bearing indebtedness of the United States payable at the option of the Government.

Mr. MORRISON. Is there objection to my amending the resolution, in order to make it a little more explicit, by adding the clause which was read from the desk this morning? I ask the Clerk again to report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

The surplus or balance herein referred to, shall be the available surplus ascertained, according to the form of statement of the United States Treasurer, of the assets and liabilities of the Treasury of the United States employed on June 30, 1886.

Mr. MORRISON. I desire to be allowed to perfect the resolution by adding to it that clause.

Mr. CANNON addressed the committee. [See Appendix.]

Mr. MORRISON. I have asked whether there is objection to modifying my resolution as I have proposed.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that the amendment proposed by him be made a part of the resolution. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. On yesterday a number of amendments were read for information, the resolution not then being at a stage when it could be amended. The Chair will now recognize gentlemen to offer amendments in the order in which they were read. The first offered was by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. MCKINLEY].

Mr. MCKINLEY. I ask that my amendment may be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add to the resolution the following:

"Provided, That said sum of $100,000,000 herein excepted and reserved, which amount was purchased by the sale of bonds to the extent of ninety-five and a half millions, and the balance by reservation from the revenue under authority of the act of January 14, 1875, entitled 'An act to provide for the resumption of specie payments,' shall be maintained, as provided by said act, and set apart for the purpose of redeeming the legal-tender notes of the United States when presented for payment, and said fund shall not be used for any other purpose."

Mr. REED, of Maine. I desire to offer an amendment to the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio, to come in at the end of it.

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided further, That the Secretary of the Treasury may at any time suspend action under this resolution until the balance shall equal $130,000,000 whenever in his judgment the condition of anticipated receipts and expenditures may require such suspension.

Mr. REED, of Maine. I desire to explain the effect of this amendment which I propose. As I understand it, the resolution which is now offered to the House, if unamended, will render it possible to diminish the $100,000,000 held as reserve to redeem the greenbacks, and even if the amendment of my friend from Ohio is adopted it will still leave it difficult for the Treasury to anticipate a possible state of receipts and expenditures.

Whoever has noticed the balances from month to month and from year to year will perceive that they have varied from $8,000,000, which was the balance at the time the Democrats came into possession of the Treasury, to twenty-five or thirty millions, I think. Now the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] contemplates a return to what he considers the halcyon days, when the Republicans used to pay out the surplus for the purchase of bonds; and I propose in this amendment to give to the Secretary the same discretion as was actually exercised by a Republican Secretary of the Treasury.

Of course this contemplates the giving up of the effort which the Treasury Department is now making to keep all the different kinds of dollars on a par with each other. But it accords with the practice of the Treasury Department prior to its transfer, and the practical limit of this will be, not thirty millions of working capital, because when it arrives at one hundred and thirty millions then ten millions of bonds are to be called. So it will practically give the Secretary discretion in regard to twenty or twenty-five millions. That is the practical effect of my amendment.

Mr. RANDALL. Will the gentleman allow me to say at this point that, if I remember correctly, every public utterance on this subject of every President of the United States, with one exception, since that great debt accumulated, has been in favor of its speedy payment. That exception was President Arthur, who in one of his messages expressed the opinion that we were paying the public debt too rapidly. I do not remember what was the occasion of that statement, but I remember the statement. All other expressions of public officials have been in favor of paying the debt as rapidly as possible. I suppose that President Arthur thought its payment ought to be left to the next generation.

Mr. REED, of Maine. I do not know what President Arthur thought about the matter.

Mr. RANDALL. I am telling the gentleman what President Arthur said.

Mr. REED, of Maine. I do not know what President Arthur thought, but I do know that the view which the present Secretary of the Treasury has taken of his duties was not necessarily imposed upon his predecessors, because the question of keeping all the different kinds of dollars of the same value was not then one which threatened an unpleasant solution.

Mr. RANDALL. I do not think that the passage of this resolution threatens the one hundred millions reserve held as such, nor do I believe that it is possible to approach in this way the necessity of paying out the standard dollar.

Mr. REED, of Maine. There is where the gentleman differs again from his administration.

Mr. RANDALL. It is an honest difference of opinion.

Mr. REED, of Maine. The gentleman from Pennsylvania and the present Democratic administration differ on that point. As to which Democrat is right and which wrong, that is none of my business. Neither is it my business to determine in what degree they are both wrong. [Laughter.]

Mr. MCKINLEY. Mr. Chairman, I have a single suggestion to make in addition to what I have already said in relation to the amendment which I have offered and which has just been read at the Clerk's desk. It is a singular fact, yet it is nevertheless the fact, that there is no positive provision of law setting aside $100,000,000 for the redemption of the United States legal-tender notes. That amount was fixed by the Secretary of the Treasury, who put in operation the resumption act in 1879, and has been maintained ever since by every succeeding Secretary. The present Secretary of the Treasury, unlike his predecessors, has set aside in his debt statement this sum specially for purposes of redemption. He has done it, as he says, under authority of the redemption act, and under what I believe is a forced construction of the banking act of 1882, which provides that gold certificates shall not be issued when the gold gets below $100,000,000 as a reserve. That, Mr. Chairman, is all the authority reposed in the Secretary of the Treasury for holding $100,000,000 for the purposes of redemption.

Mr. MORRISON. That is all there ought to be.

Mr. MCKINLEY. The gentleman from Illinois says that is all the authority there ought to be. In that particular again he differs from the President, and from the Secretary of the Treasury, who has set sacredly aside that sum for that purpose, notwithstanding there is no clearly defined power to do it.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I only propose to put in the form of positive law what has been the action of our Secretaries and the precedent set by all of them, and acquiesced in by the people, and there is more necessity for it now than there ever was before, because under the resolution of the gentleman from Illinois, upon his own confession, the one hundred millions can be trenched upon, and in the letter of the Secretary of the Treasury the same statement is made. If you take away all discretion, you should at least make this much secure. In connection with that I want to read a dispatch which I sent to the acting Secretary of the Treasury this morning and his reply. It will make clear the wisdom of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED]. I invite for it the serious consideration of members of this House and especially those of the party faith of the Secretary. It comes from the Democratic Secretary of the Treasury, whose means of knowledge can not be questioned and whose statements should have great weight with the majority:

Hon. C. S. FAIRCHILD, Acting Secretary of the Treasury:

If balance of seventy-five millions, as shown by Treasurer's report of June 30 last, should be used to pay bonds, what would the Treasury have left for working balance besides fractional silver coin? An immediate answer will oblige.

To that dispatch I received but a few moments ago the following reply:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, July 14.

Hon. WILLIAM MCKINLEY, Jr.,
House of Representatives:

In reply to your telegram of this date, asking what the Treasury would have left for working balance besides the fractional silver coin if the balance of seventy-five millions, as shown by the Treasurer's report of June 30 last, should be used in paying bonds, I beg to state that nothing would be left but trust funds, which it would be dishonorable and dishonest to use for that purpose.

C. S. FAIRCHILD, Acting Secretary.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Debate upon this amendment is exhausted.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Chairman, I do not propose that that amendment shall go before the committee unless it is properly understood.

The CHAIRMAN. An amendment to the amendment is now pending, and debate upon it is exhausted.

Mr. REED, of Maine. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BLAND] be allowed to speak for five minutes.

Several MEMBERS. That is right.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Chairman, I think we ought to understand these measures as we proceed. I have not spoken on this resolution, and did not intend to take up time in discussing it, for I want to see it passed promptly. But what is the effect of this amendment? It involves a covert, lingering, lurking principle which this Committee of the Whole ought not to sanction, that the greenbacks of this country shall be redeemable in gold and gold only. To that I believe this House will never assent. The effect of this proposition is simply that the gold received from the sale of bonds shall be held, to the exclusion of all other coin for the redemption of the greenbacks.

It is true that in the act of 1882 there lurked a proposition that after the gold in the Treasury for the redemption of greenbacks had run down to $100,000,000 no more of that form of money should be issued. But that is the only law which mentions gold as the fund for the redemption of greenbacks. I affirm that the greenback is redeemable in the coin of this country, be it gold or silver.

Here is a proposition to supplement the existing law by a provision declaring in indisputable terms that the greenback shall be redeemable in gold only—not in coin; because the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio specifically mentions the gold procured by the sale of bonds and proposes to set apart this fund for the redemption of the legal-tender notes.

Mr. Chairman, I am in favor of the adoption of the resolution of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MORRISON] without amendment; but if these amendments are to be adopted, then I wish to offer an amendment providing that the fund for the redemption of the greenbacks shall consist of coin, not of gold exclusively. I trust, however, that the Committee of the Whole will vote down these and all other amendments which bring in questions calculated to interfere with the great object of the resolution, which, letting matters of that sort alone, proposes simply that the surplus in the Treasury shall be paid out upon the public debt. I trust the members of the Committee of the Whole will see that unless they desire to have the object of this resolution defeated these amendments should be voted down, so as to leave the paper currency of this country redeemable in gold and silver, not in gold alone. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is first on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED] to the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. MCKINLEY].

Several MEMBERS. Let them be read.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, the Clerk will first read the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. MCKINLEY] and afterward the amendment of the gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED].

The amendment of Mr. MCKINLEY, of Ohio, was read, as follows:

Add to the resolution the following:

"Provided, That said sum of $100,000,000, herein excepted and reserved, which amount was purchased by the sale of bonds to the extent of ninety-five and one-half millions, and the balance by reservation from the revenues, under authority of the act of January 14, 1875, entitled "An act to provide for the resumption of specie payments," shall be maintained as provided by said act and set apart for the purpose of redeeming the legal-tender notes of the United States, when presented for payment, and said fund shall not be used for any other purpose.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED] proposes to amend the amendment just read by adding what the Clerk will now read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided, further, That the Secretary of the Treasury may at any time suspend action under this resolution until the balance shall equal $130,000,000, whenever in his judgment the condition of anticipated receipts and expenditures may require such suspension.

Mr. MORRISON. I hope the amendments will be voted down.

Mr. MCKINLEY. I hope they will be voted up.

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. REED, of Maine, to the amendment of Mr. MCKINLEY, it was not agreed to, there being—ayes 77, noes 140.

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. MCKINLEY, there were—ayes 91, noes 128.

Mr. MCKINLEY. I call for tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. MCKINLEY and Mr. MORRISON were appointed.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 104, noes 132.

So Mr. MCKINLEY'S amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the next amendment, an amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. HISCOCK].

The Clerk read as follows:

Add to the resolution the following:

"Provided, That nothing hereinbefore contained shall authorize the reduction of, or the payment of, any part of the $100,000,000 reserve set apart for the payment of United States notes upon the interest-bearing indebtedness of the United States.

Mr. HISCOCK. The difference between the amendment which I propose and that of the gentleman from Ohio which was just voted on is this: His amendment proposed by a positive provision of law to enact that the reserve of $100,000,000 should not be encroached upon. The amendment I now offer is in different form, and simply declares that it is not the intention of this resolution to interfere with that reserve. I hope the gentleman from Illinois will accept this amendment.

Mr. MORRISON. I do not want the gentleman from New York [Mr. HISCOCK] to interpret my intentions.

Mr. HISCOCK. I have not attempted to interpret the gentleman's intentions.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York will suspend a moment, in order that the Committee of the Whole may rise informally and a message from the Senate be received.

THE SURPLUS IN THE TREASURY.

The Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union resumed the consideration of the joint resolution (H. Res. 126) directing payment of the surplus in the Treasury on the public debt.

Mr. HISCOCK. Mr. Chairman, as I have understood in this discussion it has been declared that it was not the intention to interfere with the reserve set apart in the Treasury Department for the redemption of United States notes. I do not know that I have understood the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means expressly to declare that, and I have not understood it was his intention to interfere with that reserve.

Now, the amendment I have offered does not propose to enact a provision of law that they shall be kept there; but it is the declaration of the intention of the joint resolution that under that resolution the Secretary of the Treasury shall not be called upon to encroach upon the $100,000,000.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. Mr. Chairman, in regard to the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. HISCOCK] let us inquire for a moment as to the exact nature of that reserve. That reserve is not a trust fund except by implication. The Secretary who made the greenback reserve $100,000,000 had equal power to make it $200,000,000, or $50,000,000, or any other sum that seemed to him necessary for resumption of specie payment. What may have been necessary to begin resumption may not be necessary under better conditions to maintain it. The present Secretary of the Treasury has power to increase or to diminish this fund at his discretion. In truth, nobody proposes to compel him to trench upon it, as I will show; but as for its being a "trust fund" or a "sacred fund," it is clearly not such further than sound discretion may decree from time to time.

As for the proper amount of the reserve it is very well to view it in a comparative way. We find it is considered entirely adequate for the national banks of the country to maintain the following reserves—I read from section 5192 of the Revised Statutes:

SEC. 5191. Every national banking association in either of the following cities, Albany, Baltimore, Boston, Cincinnati, Chicago, Cleveland, Detroit, Louisville, Milwaukee, New Orleans, New York, Philadelphia, Pittsburgh, Saint Louis, San Francisco, and Washington, shall at all times have on hand, in lawful money of the United States, an amount equal to at least 25 per cent. of the aggregate amount of its notes in circulation and its deposits; and every other association shall at all times have on hand, in lawful money of the United States, an amount equal to at least 15 per cent. of the aggregate amount of its notes in circulation and of its deposits.

Section 5192 says:

Three-fifths of the reserve of 15 per cent. required by the preceding section to be kept may consist of balances due to an association, &c.—

Referring to the clearing-houses.

Now, sir, 25 per cent. is the maximum for national banks. That is considered ample security in addition to the bonds deposited with the Secretary of the Treasury, and with the exception of the banks of these cities 15 per cent. is adequate.

Mr. CUTCHEON. I hope order will be preserved in the Hall; it is impossible to hear the gentleman.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair appeals to members on the floor to preserve order.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. It was stated by the gentleman from New York [Mr. HEWITT] that the reserve we have in the Treasury to-day is 15 per cent. of the greenback circulation. That was evidently an inadvertence on the part of my accurate and learned friend from New York, because the reserve is within a small decimal of 29 per cent.

Mr. HEWITT. I will correct the gentleman. The reserve was 15 per cent. of greenback and national-bank circulation together.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. We have nothing to do with national-bank circulation now.

Mr. HEWITT. Yes, we have.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. I am talking about the reserve set aside to redeem the greenbacks.

Mr. HEWITT. My statement, whatever it is worth, applies to those too.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. That was not the gentleman's statement, as I think the Reporter's notes will show. That is what the gentleman meant to say, I now am certain. We will not dispute about it.

Mr. HEWITT. It is one-half.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. What reserve have we behind the greenback circulation? We have not 15 per cent., but we have in round nnmbers 29 per cent. and the unlimited amount of bonds that this country can float. In section 3 of the act of June 14, 1875, it is provided as follows:

And to enable the Secretary of the Treasury to prepare and provide for the redemption in this act authorized or required, he is authorized to use any surplus revenues from time to time in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, and to issue, sell, and dispose of, at not less than par in coin, either of the descriptions of bonds of the United States described in the act of Congress approved July 4, 1870, entitled, &c.

This shows that the Secretary of the Treasury can sell bonds running up to 4 per cent., 4½ per cent., and, I believe, 5 per cent., to an unlimited extent, for this is a continuing act. Suppose we required held in the Federal Treasury the maximum reserve required of the national banks? Of course the bonds more than offset, for they are limited and we are unlimited. To bring our cash reserve down to 25 per cent. of the greenbacks we would have to pay out $14,840,000 of the $100,000,000 reserve, bringing it to say $85,160,000. Some gentleman tells me that the present law requires only 5 per cent. of circulation from the banks in addition to their bonds. I remember now there is a later act than the one in the Revised Statutes. It is said, though, that the Government gives a general guarantee to the bank notes. Do we pledge less for our own legal-tenders?

How then would the case stand if we brought our own cash reserve to the same basis, which we do not propose to do, but which you say is perfectly safe for the bank money? Why, sir, that would reduce our greenback reserve from the present $100,000,000 to, say, $18,300,000. Yet gentlemen talk about insufficiency. I want the Government to set an example to the people of safe dealing; and to do business upon a safer basis than any bank. How far then, if at all, would this measure trench upon the $100,000,000 reserve?

To get at this we must consider our way of keeping books, and see what would be called a "surplus." All matured debt is offset by an equal amount of cash. That does not figure in our cash balance. At the end of each month the accrued interest on the public debt for that month is also so treated, so that a call for never more than thirty days' interest can be "precipitated" upon the Treasury, and of that they have thirty days' warning and taxes amounting to nearly $1,000,000 a day coming in out of which to provide for this amount of say a little over $4,000,000.

The appropriations are mainly provided for by funds set aside in the hands of the disbursing officers. A call for bonds is not made until funds are set aside to pay off the bonds. Now, money can not be paid or spent except according to law. These provisions cover lawful demands, and unlawful demands we do not pay. The "surplus" is only what accumulates after all these provisions for payment have been made. How can the Treasury be "surprised" with cash set aside, dollar for dollar, to meet all these demands? How can the $100,000,000 reserve be trenched upon? We allow all this, and do not propose to allow less. Is not this enough? You admit by the sanction of Government action in the case of bank money that it is far too much to allow. We owe debts, inferest-bearing debts. They are mortgages and shackles upon our energies. If the Government wants money to look at or for uses not provided for by law it wants it for uses not consistent with the interests of a debt-burdened people. The amount is enough and will not be trenched upon.

All these amounts set aside are working balances, and they balance all the work there is to be done. The next work to do is with our "surplus" to pay our debts.

Suppose we reduced taxes, as the gentleman from New York [Mr. HEWITT] and others of us are anxious to do, would not the "balance" have to be paid out to meet the requirements of the sinking fund? Is it worse to pay it out now and any way? If surplus taxes must be borne, let us at least stop interest and not bear both burdens.

Sir, the charge of repudiation is made when our insistence is to pay our debts. It is then in the face of a condition such as this that gentlemen charge upon this proposition an act of repudiation. No, they think that some silver payment may mean all silver basis. We have silver payments every day, and it is upon a gold basis. Our increase in population is 3 per cent. per annum. Our increase in commerce and business transactions may be set down at the same rate. Our silver coinage is 1½ per cent. per annum of our volume of money. Money and business must increase alike for things to keep even, unless modes of transmittal grow more rapid. Are they likely to become more rapid than by steam and electricity? If not, when will 1½ per cent. catch up with 3 per cent.?

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. MORRISON. I ask unanimous consent now that all debate upon the resolution and all amendments thereto be limited to ten minutes. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. WHEELER. I should like to have five minutes on this.

Mr. HISCOCK. A single suggestion.

Of course the gentleman seems to think that the Government could provide for the presentation of the Treasury notes by the sale of bonds. Now, I do not believe that anybody would seriously think for a moment of leaving the Government in the condition of forcing it to issue more bonds.

Mr. MORRISON. There is no danger of that.

Mr. HISCOCK. And, as I have understood, it has not been the intention to encroach upon that $100,000,000 of reserve, and is simply a declaration to the effect that we will not. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I expect to vote for this resolution. I intend to vote for it because I believe it is not a very wide departure from the Republican policy and Republican practice. I would prefer that the resolution should provide that the $100,000,000 be maintained intact, and held as a reserve for the redemption of outstanding Treasury notes if they shall be presented. It was the Republican policy to declare at the earliest possible day that the debt of the nation was a coin debt, and as soon as it was able to do so the nation was committed to the resumption of specie payments. From 1879 down to the present time that resumption has been maintained, and by Republican policy. This policy brought a depreciated currency to par and strengthened our national credit. The securities of the Government bear a higher premium in proportion to the rate of interest than the securities of any other nation in the world. This is another result of Republican legislation. I take some pride, Mr. Chairman, in the credit of my country.

I believe, as I have ever believed, that national credit is national wealth; and if I thought that by voting for this resolution I would impair the value of the debt or the confidence of the people who hold that debt in its ultimate payment to the injury of the national credit, I should vote against this proposition with emphasis. But I do not believe we do any such thing by its adoption. One of the first and most essential things toward the maintenance of public confidence is the payment of the debt of the nation, its prompt payment by providing whenever we have a surplus fund that it shall be used in that direction. We should pay the debt in good money, not in a broken promise nor a dishonored dollar, but in sterling coin—the money of the contract. In this way we maintain our credit at home and abroad.

But it is said the time may come when we shall trench upon the one hundred millions to some extent under the provisions of this resolution; that demands will be made to which we can not respond, and then will come all the calamities that occur during a period of transition between an era of practical repudiation and resumption. I do not believe such a thing will happen. During the whole course of our Republican administrations there have been times when we have paid out the surplus to the very lowest limit; paid it down to a hundred millions. There was an instance when it was but one hundred and one millions, and at one time it went five hundred thousand below the reserve limit. We have trenched to that extent upon the one hundred millions; but it has been the policy of past administrations to keep near that amount always on hand for the redemption of the Treasury notes.

Now, I would prefer, as I have already said, to continue one hundred millions surplus in the Treasury and not go below it; but I do not believe that under this resolution we can go very far below it.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. MILLS was recognized, and yielded a part of his time to Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. I say, Mr. Chairman, if a deficiency happens it can only run until the beginning of the next month, and it is altogether probable that the daily receipts in the Treasury will supply it and we will not suffer even temporarily in consequence of it.

But, as I said, it has been claimed that this may result in compelling the public creditor to accept what some gentlemen are pleased to call the 75-cent dollar. Why, we do not change existing law in that regard. We still leave the Secretary of the Treasury to determine the character of the funds which he will use to pay the debt. If he wants to use the dishonored dollar, as some people speak of it, he may do it. We do not compel him to do it or advise him to do it by the passage of this resolution; and if he is willing to take that responsibility I am willing that he may assume it.

This may be a vote of censure on the administration. In that spirit I would like to indorse it, for I would rebuke this administration thirty times every day if I had the opportunity. [Applause.]

I proceed to a brief discussion of this question at this late hour at the hazard of repeating what has already been said. I am more than pleased that this subject has been introduced. Its discussion has effectually exploded a monstrous falsehood which largely contributed to the defeat of the Republican party in the last campaign. In the State I have the honor in part to represent the Democracy, under the leadership of the late Vice-President, charged from every stump that the Republican administration, in the interest of the capitalists, banks, and bondholders, was keeping a surplus in the Treasury of $450,000,000 which should be at once applied to the extinguishment of the interest-bearing debt. This campaign lie was repeated with variations all over the Union. Let us now compare the records of the two parties.

On the 4th of March, 1885, the Republican administration had in the Treasury:

Gold coin and bullion	$240,501,182 29
Less certificates outstanding	114,143,140 00
		$126,358,042 29
Silver coin and bullion	157,914,956 10
Less certificates outstanding	111,694,881 00
		46,220,075 10
Legal-tender notes	47,980,004 33
Less certificates outstanding	29,400,000 00
		18,580,004 33
Deposits in national banks		10,150,036 90
National-bank notes		9,355,462 53
		210 663,621 15
Liabilities of the Treasury upon the same date:
Matured debt and interest	$5,493,735 37
Interest due and unpaid	3,136,940 68
Accrued interest to date	6,529,435 37
Disburing officers' balances	26,123,546 05
Outstanding drafts and checks	6,249,573 07
National-bank redemption fond	51,331,161 04
Post-Office Department	3,034,639 51
Legal-tender reserve	100,000,000 00
		201,899,031 04
Net available balance in Treasury		8,764,590 11

Leaving an available surplus of only $8,764,590. "Only this and nothing more." In October, 1884, when the people were being cheated by the false pretense to which I have referred, the working balance was but little over $18,000,000. During the whole period of Republican control after resumption the surplus above the one-hundred million reserve was barely sufficient to meet the current demands upon the Treasury. These facts have not been challenged in this debate.

How stands the Democratic record? What sum has this administration maintained as a surplus and withheld from the extinguishment of so much of the interest-bearing debt? In his speech on yesterday the distinguished chairman of the Ways and Means Committee and the author of the pending resolution [Mr. MORRISON] said:

> The money of the country, coin and paper, or, to be more specific, gold, silver, United States notes, and national-bank notes, amount to $1,556,000,000, or more exactly, $1,556,914,798. Of this sum $525,664,054, or more than one-third of all the money of the country, was in the United States Treasury when this joint resolution was introduced here.

Mr. MORRISON, continuing, said:

> Deducting all these sums for specific uses, running or current liabilities, and there remains in the Treasury a very little more than $200,000,000 held there for current uses, including that held to redeem Treasury or legal-tender notes. These legal-tender notes are by law money to be paid out as other money, whether they come into the Treasury as debt redeemed due from or as money taken in payment of a debt due to the Government. * * * There was in January last and still is a surplus in the Treasury of $100,000,000, but because of this fractional coin being unavailable as money, this joint resolution would only take $70,000,000 out of the Treasury.

Now suppose we analyze these statements of the distinguished gentleman, and what is the result? It is a confession—an explicit confession—that it has been the policy of this Democratic administration to increase the sum of money in the Treasury and to largely increase the surplus. It is admitted that there was in the Treasury a few weeks ago nearly $526,000,000, and this is an increase since Mr. Cleveland's inauguration of over $113,000,000. It is admitted that after deducting the $100,000,000 reserve for resumption purposes there is now in the Treasury over $70,000,000 of surplus available for payment on the national debt.

This surplus is greater by over $61,000,000 than that of March, 1885, and $50,000,000 more than the average balance maintained while the Republican party was in power. In the presence of this record of Democratic practice it is not probable the friends of the present administration will make an issue on the "surplus question" in the approaching campaign.

Mr. MILLS. In 1875, on the 14th of January, Congress passed the law known as the resumption law. That is the termination of one line of policy. There had been an irrepressible conflict between the bank-note paper of the United States and the Treasury-note paper of the United States as to which should survive and as to which should pass out of existence. On the 14th of January, 1875, the banking interest of this country secured a law which required the sale of bonds and the procurement of gold to pay up and take out of circulation every Treasury-note dollar of the Government.

There was an appeal from Congress to the country on this question and the country compelled this House to rescind its action in that regard. On the 29th of May, 1878, that policy was reversed by the high mandate of the people of the United States. They said the Treasury note should exist and the bank note should go and the public debt with it.

It was the policy under the resumption law to retire the Treasury note and keep the bank note; and this reserve of one hundred millions was procured and paid into the Treasury as a fund to pay and extinguish the Treasury note. That is the way in which it got into the Treasury, and it has been called a reserve fund. It was a fund procured under the resumption law to take up and destroy and pay for the Treasury notes of the Government. There is no necessity for a solitary dollar to maintain the equal value of Treasury notes and gold and silver; and the only excuse that can be made for the retention of any gold to keep up the par value of the Treasury note is to provide against any conspiracy of the national banks to run upon the Government for gold, as they did a few years ago when they wanted to affect legislation.

[Here the hammer fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. By order of the committee debate is now closed on the resolution and amendment.

Mr. BROWN, of Pennsylvania. I ask unanimous consent to print some remarks on this question in the RECORD.

There was no objection.

Mr. MORRISON. I ask unanimous consent that any gentleman who desires to print remarks on the joint resolution be permitted to do so.

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from New York [Mr. HISCOCK].

The amendment was read, as follows:

Add to the resolution the following:
"Provided, Nothing hereinbefore contained shall authorize the reduction of or payment of any part of the $100,000,000 reserve set apart for the payment of the United States notes upon the interest-bearing indebtedness of the United States."

The question being taken on the amendment, there were—ayes 74, noes 129.

So the amendment was not agreed to.

The next amendment (offered by Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa) was read, as follows:

Add to the resolution the following:
"Provided, The words 'surplus or balance' in this resolution shall be construed to mean all money in the Treasury against which there is no actual demand liability of the Government other than greenbacks for redemption."

The amendment was not agreed to.

The next amendment (offered by Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa) was read, as follows:

In line 5 strike out "$100,000,000" and insert "$50,000,000."

The question being taken, the chairman stated that the "noes" seemed to have it.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. I call for a division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 41, noes 130.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. I call for tellers.

Tellers were not ordered, only 6 members voting therefor.

So the amendment was disagreed to.

The next amendment (offered by Mr. WARNER, of Ohio) was read, as follows:

Add to the resolution the following:
"Provided, That after the passage of this act, whenever and as fast as the circulating notes of national banks are redeemed and canceled as provided by the act of June 3, 1864, and amendments thereto, the Secretary of the Treasury shall cause to be issued in place of such bank notes redeemed, dollar for dollar, United States notes in denominations as nearly as may be of the bank notes redeemed, and all laws applicable to United States notes now in circulation are hereby made applicable to notes issued under this act."

Mr. MORRISON. I make the point of order that that amendment is not germane.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio, addressed the Chair.

Mr. MORRISON. I withdraw the point of order, as the discussion on it might occupy time.

The question being taken, there were—ayes 73, noes 110.

So the amendment was disagreed to.

Mr. LONG. I move to amend the resolution by adding the proviso which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided further, That if the execution of this resolution shall at any time in the judgment of the President impair the public credit, he may suspend the operation hereof.

The amendment was disagreed to—ayes 75, noes 131.

Mr. WHEELER. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add the following proviso:
"Provided, That before any bonds be purchased or redeemed under this act, there be appropriated, from the surplus money in the Treasury, the sum of $10,000,000 each year, to aid in the support of common schools, and that such money shall annually be divided among and paid out in the several States and Territories in that proportion which the whole number of persons in each who, being of the age of ten years and over, can not read, bears to the whole number of such persons in the United States. Such computation shall be made according to the census of 1880. Said schools to be under the supervision and control of the State officials in the States where located, and of the Territorial authorities where located in the Territories.

Mr. MORRISON. I make a point of order that the amendment is not germane.

Mr. WILLIS. I hope the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. WHEELER] will withdraw that proposition.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. WEAVER, of Nebraska. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add the following proviso:
"Provided, That the first payment under this resolution shall be for an amount that will reduce the surplus to $100,000,000.

The amendment was disagreed to.

Mr. MORRISON. I now move that the committee rise.

Mr. WHEELER. At the request of several gentlemen I ask that they be permitted to extend their remarks in the RECORD upon the point of order made on my amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Unanimous consent has been granted for any member who desires to print remarks.

Mr. DIBBLE. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment which I send to the desk.

The amendment was read, as follows:

After the word "hundred," in line 5, insert the words "and twenty-five."

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment which I send to the desk.

The amendment was read, as follows:

Add at the end of the resolution:
"Provided, That nothing in this resolution shall be construed to convey to the public any doubt as to the wisdom, patriotism, or integrity of the President or Secretary of the Treasury, nor as dictating a policy which said administration would not under proper circumstances carry out upon their own motion and judgment."

Mr. MORRISON. I make the point of order upon that amendment.

Mr. GROSVENOR. What is the point of order?

Mr. MORRISON. That it is not germane to the joint resolution.

Mr. REED, of Maine. Oh, there can be no point of order on that.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Why is it not germane?

Mr. MORRISON. Because it is not. That is the reason.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Chairman, here is a resolution dictating to the Executive a course of action. [Cries of "Regular order!" on the Democratic side.] My amendment simply adds a declaration that the purpose and intent of the original resolution is not to raise a doubt in the public mind that the President of the United States will do his duty in the premises.

Mr. SPRINGER. We will take care of the President; you need not worry about him.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I appeal from the decision of the Chair. [Laughter.]

Mr. MILLS. I move to lay the appeal on the table.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is, Shall the decision of the Chair be sustained as the judgment of the committee?

The question was taken; but before announcing the result the chairman asked for a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 141, noes 9.

Mr. GROSVENOR made the point that no quorum had voted, but withdrew it.

Mr. NEECE. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment.

Mr. MORRISON. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee now rise and report the joint resolution to the House.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands that as long as gentlemen desire to offer amendments the motion to report the joint resolution to the House can not be entertained. The committee may of course rise.

Mr. NEECE. Mr. Chairman, I send up an amendment which I desire to offer.

The amendment was read, as follows:

In line 5 strike out the words "one hundred" and insert "forty;" in line 7 strike out the word "ten" and insert "one."

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. EVERHART. Mr. Chairman, I send to the desk an amendment which I desire to offer.

The amendment was read, as follows:

Add at the end of the resolution the following:

"Provided also, That the said indebtedness shall be paid in gold coin, or its equivalent, at the option of the creditor.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. MORRISON. Now, Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee rise and report the joint resolution to the House.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. CRISP, from the Committee of the Whole, reported that they had had under consideration the joint resolution (H. Res. 126) directing the payment of the surplus in the Treasury on the public debt, and had directed him to report the same back with an amendment.

Mr. MORRISON. Mr. Speaker, I now move the previous question on the amendment and the joint resolution.

Mr. MCKINLEY. Mr. Speaker, I desire at the first opportunity to make a motion to recommit.

The SPEAKER. That is not now in order, because the gentleman from Illinois has demanded the previous question.

Mr. MCKINLEY. At what point will it be in order?

The SPEAKER. When the question is on the passage of the joint resolution.

Mr. MCKINLEY. Then I desire to make the motion at that time.

The previous question was ordered.

The amendment reported from the Committee of the Whole was agreed to.

The joint resolution as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time.

Mr. MORRISON. I move the previous question on the passage of the joint resolution.

Mr. MCKINLEY. Mr. Speaker, I now offer the resolution which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the pending joint resolution be recommitted to the Committee on Ways and Means with instructions to said committee to forthwith report the same with the following amendment:

"Provided, That said sum of $100,000,000 herein excepted and reserved, which amount was purchased by the sale of bonds to the extent of ninety-five and a half millions, and the balance by reservation from the revenue under authority of the act of January 14, 1875, entitled 'An act to provide for the resumption of specie payments,' shall be maintained, as provided by said act, and set apart for the purpose of redeeming the legal-tender notes of the United States when presented for payment, and said fund shall not be used for any other purpose."

Mr. MCKINLEY. I move the previous question on the motion to recommit with instructions.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is now upon the motion to recommit with the instructions just read.

Mr. BLAND. I make the point of order that the amendment embodied in those instructions has already been voted down in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. But the House may overrule the action of the Committee of the Whole.

The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. MCKINLEY] to recommit with instructions.

The question having been put,

The SPEAKER said: In the opinion of the Chair the ayes have it.

Mr. MCKINLEY. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 119, nays 154, not voting 49; as follows:

YEAS—119.

The following additional pair was announced:

Mr. ROBERTSON and Mr. WADSWORTH are paired on joint resolution 126. Mr. ROBERTSON would vote for the resolution of Mr. MORRISON to pay out of the Treasury of the United States the surplus as provided for in said resolution. Mr. WADSWORTH would vote against the resolution.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. I wish to state that my colleague, Mr. ROGERS, is paired on this vote; and if present would vote "ay." I am also informed by him that the gentleman with whom he is paired would vote "no."

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

Mr. MORRISON moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE.

Mr. LOWRY. Mr. Speaker, I desire to offer a resolution as a question of privilege.

The Clerk read as follows:

Whereas there appears in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of June 30, 1886, on page 6286, certain remarks purporting to have been made by Hon. JOHN M. GLOVER on the preceding day, but which it is believed were not uttered by him on the floor, and which do not appear in the official notes of the Reporter, and which said remarks are as follows: "If there had been a third party present on this occasion the gentleman from Indiana would never have made these statements to the House:" Therefore,

Resolved, That the Committee on Rules be, and they are hereby, instructed to inquire and report to the House whether such remarks were so uttered on the floor of the House, and constitute a part of the official report, or whether they were interpolated in said report by any other person than the Official Reporter, and if so by whom; and if by a member of this House, what action, if any, should be taken in reference thereto.

Mr. HATCH. I suggest to the gentleman from Indiana that my colleague [Mr. GLOVER] is not present, and it is proper of course that he should be here before action is taken upon such a resolution.

Mr. BLAND. There is another matter contained in a subsequent part of this resolution that does not refer to any gentleman specifically, but which relates to a fraud upon the RECORD, that should be investigated.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. Let the resolution be read and go into the RECORD so we can see what it is.

Mr. LOWRY. I will withdraw that resolution for the present and offer the other one.

Mr. BLAND. I hope the resolution to which the gentleman now refers will be adopted, because if this is not a mistake, in the whole course of my Congressional experience I have never seen such a fraud perpetrated upon the RECORD. I hope it will prove to be a mistake.

The SPEAKER. The resolution will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Whereas Mr. LOWRY, as chairman of the Committee on Expenditures in the Treasury Department, on yesterday, July 13, 1886, reported from said committee a substitute for certain resolutions theretofore referred to said committee in reference to an alleged fraud on the revenue by one Richard D. Lancaster, in procuring the compounding of a judgment taken against him and others in favor of the United States, which said substitute called upon the Secretary of the Treasury for information touching the action of the Department in regard to said transaction, and was adopted by the House; and

Whereas said resolution so adopted by the House does not appear in the official report of the proceedings in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, but instead thereof there appears therein a lengthy preamble and resolution bearing upon the same subject, but of an entirely different character: Therefore,

Be it further resolved, That the Committee on Rules be, and they are hereby, further instructed to inquire and report through what means, and by what instrumentality, said substitution of the preamble and resolution published was made to supplant the resolution actually adopted by the House, and what action, if any, should be taken in reference thereto.

Mr. BLAND. I repeat, if that was an intentional substitution it is a fraud on the RECORD that ought to be investigated.

Mr. LOWRY. I am not prepared to say that any fraud was perpetrated. It may possibly be a mistake or an accident. I hope it will so transpire.

Mr. HATCH. I only wish to say that I favor the adoption of the resolution, but simply reminded the gentleman from Indiana that the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. GLOVER] was not present, and the first resolution certainly reflects upon him.

Mr. KING. In the absence of Mr. GLOVER certainly no action should be taken upon that resolution.

Mr. HATCH. As every gentleman present from Missouri knows I sympathize with this investigation, but I regard it as improper to take any action upon the first resolution, at all events in the absence of the gentleman.

Mr. MORRISON. Has not the hour of 5 o'clock arrived? [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

The SPEAKER. It has not.

Mr. LOWRY. I withdraw the first resolution.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the second resolution.

Mr. DUNHAM. Can that be read again?

Mr. HATCH. The second resolution, I think, is all right.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to having the resolution again read?

Several members objected.

Mr. DUNHAM. Then I move that the House adjourn.

The motion was not agreed to.

Mr. LOWRY. I ask the adoption of the second resolution.

And then (the hour of 5 o'clock having arrived) the House adjourned.

Mr. HALE presented a petition of citizens of Maine, praying for the passage of certain bills in relation to the public lands, Presidential and Congressional elections, and the disbursement of a part of the Treasury surplus; which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. EVARTS presented a petition of 77 dairymen and butter-makers of New York, praying for the passage of the oleomargarine bill; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. EVARTS. I present six memorials signed by 218 citizens of Brooklyn, N. Y., who are consumers of butter, remonstrating against taxing oleomargarine; also sixteen memorials signed by 754 citizens of New York city to the same effect.

I move that the memorials lie on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. SEWELL presented eight petitions of citizens of New Jersey, praying for the passage of certain bills in relation to the public lands, Presidential and Congressional elections, and the disbursement of a part of the Treasury surplus; which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. PUGH presented two petitions of citizens of Alabama, praying for the passage of certain bills in relation to the public lands, Presidential and Congressional elections, and the disbursement of a part of the Treasury surplus; which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. PALMER presented the petition of George H. Haynes and 39 other consumers of butter, citizens of Manistee, Mich., praying for the passage of the bill to regulate the manufacture and sale of oleomargarine; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. INGALLS presented the petition of Elizabeth Lawton, of Lawrence, Kans., praying to be compensated for personal injury sustained by her from the Quantrill raid on that place during the late war; which was referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. PLUMB presented four petitions of citizens of Kansas, praying for the passage of certain bills in relation to the public lands, Presidential and Congressional elections, and the disbursement of a part of the Treasury surplus; which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. CONGER, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2800) to authorize the construction of bridges across the Tennessee and Cumberland Rivers by the Ohio Valley Railroad Company, reported it without amendment.

Mr. PLUMB, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2837) relative to the location of the town-site of Wallace, Kans., reported it without amendment.

Mr. SEWELL, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2777) authorizing the appointment and retirement of Bvt. Maj. Gen. William W. Averell, United States Army, reported it with amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2764) authorizing the President to appoint and retire Alfred Pleasonton a major-general, reported it with amendments, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. HAWLEY. The bill (S. 1070) granting the Fort Sullivan military reservation to the town of Eastport, Me., for a public park has been considered by the Committee on Military Affairs. We discover that that reservation has been turned over to the Interior Department. We ask that the committee be discharged from the further consideration of the bill, and that it be referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That order will be made, if there be no objection.

OHIO SENATORIAL ELECTION.

Mr. PUGH. I am directed by the Committee on Privileges and Elections, to whom the subject was referred, to submit a report in relation to the election of Hon. HENRY B. PAYNE to the Senate. I ask that the report be printed and lie on the table, and at some future day we can call it up for action by the Senate. I give that notice. The committee ask to be discharged from the further consideration of the subject and recommend its indefinite postponement.

Mr. EVARTS. I present the views of certain members of the Committee on Privileges and Elections, concurring in the conclusion of the report just submitted, and stating the reasons, on the part of the signers, being Mr. TELLER, Mr. LOGAN, and myself. I ask that these views accompany the report submitted by the Senator from Alabama [Mr. PUGH].

Mr. HOAR. I desire to present the views of a minority of the Committee on Privileges and Elections, signed by the Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE] and myself, dissenting from the action of the majority of the committee, and proposing a resolution for the action of the Senate, which I desire to have printed as an amendment to the report of the committee and have it considered pending.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report of the committee and the views of the minority, together with the accompanying papers, will be printed and lie on the table.

Mr. INGALLS. I hope, for convenience, they will all be printed and bound together.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That order will be made.

Mr. EDMUNDS. If there is a resolution it ought to go on the Calendar.

Mr. HOAR. I was about to make an inquiry of the Chair. I suppose it will be desired to submit some remarks on the question and take the sense of the Senate upon it. Should the reports and the resolution go upon the Calendar or lie on the table?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair understands that the reports of the committee and the resolution of the minority go on the Calendar.

Mr. HOAR. It is a privileged matter, and I suppose it can be called up at any time the Senate choose to consider it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The reports of the majority and the views of the minority will be printed in the same document, and the resolution will be placed on the Calendar. Some question arises whether the original document which was referred to the committee and comes back with the reports shall be ordered to be printed.

Mr. LOGAN. That has been already printed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The order then will not embrace the printing of that document.

Mr. PUGH. Nothing but the reports.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The reports and the accompanying papers will be printed.

The following resolution is proposed by the minority, consisting of Messrs. HOAR and FRYE:

Resolved, That the Committee on Privileges and Elections, or any subcommittee thereof, be authorized to investigate the charges affecting the title to the seat of Hon. HENRY B. PAYNE, and to send for persons and papers, administer oaths, and employ a clerk and stenographer, and to sit during the recess of the Senate; and that the expenses of the investigation be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate.

ERNEST H. WARDWELL.

Mr. HAMPTON. I am directed by the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 1062) for the relief of Ernest H. Wardwell, to report it favorably without amendment. I ask that it may be put upon its passage now, and I will explain it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from South Carolina asks the unanimous consent of the Senate to proceed to the consideration of the bill reported by him.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let it be read for information.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be read for information.

The Chief Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he hereby is, directed to pay to Ernest H. Wardwell, of Garrett County, Maryland, late a captain and assistant quartermaster of United States volunteers, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the pay and allowances of a captain and assistant quartermaster in the United States Army from the 11th day of March to the 18th day of May, 1865; and also the three months' additional pay proper as first lieutenant and regimental quartermaster of the Second Regiment North Carolina Union Volunteers (white), the same as allowed to all volunteer officers under the act of Congress approved March 3, 1865.

Mr. HAMPTON. I will state that that is identical with the Senate bill which passed the Senate the other day. This bill passed the House and was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and to save time I report it back and ask that it may be put upon its passage now.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. INGALLS. Is there a quorum present, Mr. President?

Mr. HAMPTON. We passed a Senate bill similar to this the other day.

Mr. MCMILLAN. I think, in order to save time, I shall move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the river and harbor bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is of opinion that a quorum is present. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill reported by the Senator from South Carolina? The Chair will count the Senate if desired.

Mr. MCMILLAN. If the bill will not take any time I shall not object to it. If it leads to debate I shall have to interpose an objection.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. A quorum is not present.

Mr. ALLISON. Call the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Iowa asks for a call of the Senate. That order will be made as a matter of course, if there be no objection.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The rule requires it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will call the roll of the Senate.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CHACE (when Mr. ALDRICH'S name was called). I desire to inform the Senate that my colleague [Mr. ALDRICH] is detained away by sickness.

Mr. MCMILLAN (when Mr. CONGER'S name was called). The Senator from Michigan [Mr. CONGER] is detained on the Committee on Commerce with some other members of the committee, which has leave to sit during the sessions of the Senate by order of the body.

Mr. MCMILLAN (when Mr. FRYE'S name was called). The Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE] is also engaged on the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. MCMILLAN (when the name of Mr. JONES, of Nevada, was called). The Senator from Nevada [Mr. JONES] is also on duty upon the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. EDMUNDS (when Mr. MORRILL'S name was called). My colleague [Mr. MORRILL] is absent ill, as Senators all know, and that accounts for his absence.

The roll-call was concluded.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Forty-six Senators have responded to their names. If there be no objection further proceedings under the call will be dispensed with.

The Senator from South Carolina [Mr. HAMPTON] has asked the unanimous consent of the Senate to proceed with the consideration of the bill reported by him.

Mr. MCMILLAN. I have no objection to the consideration of the bill if it does not lead to debate. If it does, I reserve the right to object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair hears no objection, and the bill is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. INGALLS. Is there a report?

Mr. HAWLEY. May I make a word of explanation? The bill has passed both Houses, and the House copy has come here. The Senator from South Carolina desires to have the Senate concur in the passage of that House bill. Both Houses have not passed the same identical piece of paper.

The bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole, reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. BLAIR. I desire to be understood as objecting to any business out of order that will interfere with our reaching and considering the Calendar.

CENSUS REPORT.

Mr. CULLOM submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he hereby is, requested to transmit to the Senate the report of Fred. H. Wines, special agent of the Tenth Census, on the defective, dependent, and delinquent classes.

PRESIDENT'S MESSAGES.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa, submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved, That the inaugural addresses, annual messages, and such special messages as may be deemed of general public interest, of the several Presidents of the United States be arranged in chronological order, and printed as a Senate document.

MILITARY SITE ON LAKE MICHIGAN.

Mr. LOGAN. I ask unanimous consent for the action of the Senate on the joint resolution (S. R. 78) authorizing the Secretary of War to accept certain lands, &c., near Chicago, Ill. That will take but a moment. I ask the Senator from Minnesota to allow it to be read at the desk. It is a very important matter. I have prepared an amendment to it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The joint resolution will be read for information if there be no objection.

The Chief Clerk read the joint resolution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

Mr. EDMUNDS. Has it been reported from a committee?

Mr. LOGAN. I offered it yesterday and asked to have it lie on the table. I have the report of the Secretary of War and of officers of the Army, a commission who have examined the lands. Let it be read at the desk.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I wish to hear the report of the Secretary of War, subject to objection.

Mr. LOGAN. Certainly. I ask that it be read.

Mr. CULLOM. Let the report be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report of the Secretary of War will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT, Washington City, July 9, 1886.

The Secretary of War has the honor to transmit herewith a copy of a report of a board of Army officers consisting of Lieut. Gen. Philip H. Sheridan, Maj. Gen. Alfred H. Terry, and Maj. J. G. C. Lee, quartermaster, which was convened to consider the subject of a site on Lake Michigan, near Chicago, Ill., tendered as a gift to the United States by the Commercial Club of that city for military purposes, and to respectfully request that such legislation be had as will authorize the Government to accept the same.

WM. C. ENDICOTT,
Secretary of War.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore United States Senate.

Report of officers designated to consider the subject of a site for military purposes, in the vicinity of Chicago, Ill., in accordance with the following instructions:

WASHINGTON, D. C., June 15, 1886.

SIR: The undersigned, a committee duly appointed for that purpose by the Commercial Club of Chicago, have the honor to tender to you, for the acceptance of the United States Government, a tract of land in the vicinity of Chicago for military purposes.

No definite site has been selected, but options have been secured upon several eligible tracts, and we respectfully request that you will appoint a committee of Army officers who shall visit Chicago and select the ground best suited to the purpose. The tract thus selected will at once be purchased with the money already subscribed for the purpose, under the auspices of the said Commercial Club, and conveyed to the United States Government.

JOHN W. DOANE,
C. B. FARWELL,
ALEXANDER P. McCLURG.

The SECRETARY OF WAR.

WAR DEPARTMENT, June 23, 1886.

Respectfully referred to the Lieutenant-General, who will proceed to Chicago, and in connection with the commanding general Division of the Missouri, and one other officer, whom they may select, consider this subject, and report the result to the Secretary of War.

WM. C. ENDICOTT,
Secretary of War.

CHICAGO, ILL., June 26, 1886.

The Lieutenant-General and Major-General Terry selected Maj. J. G. C. Lee, quartermaster, as the third officer.

CHICAGO, ILL., July 2, 1886.

The officers designated having critically examined the several tracts of land tendered by the committee hereinbefore named beg to report that the one known as the Highwood tract, in Lake County, Illinois, containing 598½ acres lying on Lake Michigan, north of the city of Chicago, and distant 25 miles, said tract being the one examined on the forenoon of June 30, and shown by accompanying plat, possesses, in their opinion, the greatest advantages of all the sites offered, and is admirably adapted, in every respect, for the purposes for which it is proposed.

It lies advantageously for the use desired, stretching along the lake front for about a mile and a half, with a width varying from three-eighths to three-fourths of a mile, and a height above the lake of about 70 feet, with bold bluffs bordering the beach.

It commands transportation by rail on the west and by lake on the east.

It is beautifully diversified with picturesque valleys, throughout which springs of the purest water abound. These valleys form natural divisions of the tract into plateaus of unusual beauty, excellently adapted by size and situation for the object in view.

With the exception of several limited areas, the whole is covered with a fine growth of forest trees.

Excellent water in any quantity can be had from the lake, while the springs referred to are of considerable volume and noted for their exceeding purity.

Superior sand for construction purposes can be had from the lake in unlimited abundance; also, gravel for roadways and other purposes. Clay suitable for the manufacture of bricks can be had on the tract and on adjacent properties.

The place is susceptible of being readily and economically converted into one of rare beauty. Indeed, it would be difficult to find a tract of land more perfectly adapted by nature and location to the purpose required.

The undersigned, therefore, unanimously recommend to the honorable the Secretary of War the acceptance of this tract at the earliest practicable date.

P. H. SHERIDAN,
Lieutenant-General, U. S. Army.
ALFRED H. TERRY,
Major-General, U. S. Army.
J. G. C. LEE,
Major and Qaartermaster, U. S. Army.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

Mr. BECK. I object, until we have more information on the subject. I object to the establishment of any more military posts or the dismantling of those now in existence until we know the need of them.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection being made, the joint resolution goes over under the rule.

Mr. LOGAN. I hope the Senator will withdraw his objection until I have an opportunity briefly to explain it.

Mr. BECK. I know what it is.

Mr. LOGAN. Then the Senator can object afterward.

Mr. BECK. I have no objection to the explanation, but I know what the measure is.

Mr. LOGAN. There is nothing in the measure whatever except that the Commercial Club of Chicago have purchased this land and paid $300,000 in cash for it, and have tendered it to the Government of the United States as one of the most beautiful sites that can be found anywhere on Lake Michigan for the Government of the United States to use it as it sees proper. There is no proposition here to build forts or anything else. It provides that the Government shall accept the property, and afterward Congress can act as they see proper about it. Congress is not compelled to build forts or fortifications. It is a mere acceptance of this gift without conditions. There are no conditions whatever. They simply give the property freely to the Government, and the joint resolution proposes that the Government shall accept it; and that is all.

Mr. DAWES. Free of condition?

Mr. LOGAN. Free of condition. There are no conditions whatever in the acceptance of the gift. They simply propose to give it to the Government. The Secretary of War can recommend what he pleases about it afterward, and Congress can do as it pleases.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If objection is made——

Mr. BECK. I still object, for the reason that the United States ought not to accept gifts from anybody unless there is some special necessity for doing so.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection being made, the joint resolution goes over.

Mr. LOGAN. I desire to give notice that I shall at the proper time ask for a vote of the Senate on taking up the joint resolution. I give this notice so that the Senator from Kentucky may know that I intend to ask again that the joint resolution be taken up and acted on.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. McMILLAN. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the river and harbor bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Minnesota.

The question being put, it was declared that the ayes appeared to prevail.

Mr. BLAIR. I call for a division on that question.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Hampshire asks for a division.

Mr. BLAIR. I ask the Senator from Minnesota if he will not be willing that we take so much of the morning hour until half past 12 as shall be necessary to get through with the pension cases on the Calendar. It is necessary that they shall go to the House in order to have any chance of action at this session, and as they are mixed up with other bills on the Calendar they can not be reached in time if we take them only as the Calendar is disposed of. I think it is due to that class of legislation that we shall take the time to pass those bills.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator asks for a division on the motion and is entitled to it.

Mr. BLAIR. I suppose we can get through with the pension cases in half an hour.

Mr. McMILLAN. Is the river and harbor bill before the Senate?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Minnesota moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the river and harbor bill.

Mr. HALE. If the river and harbor bill does not go on I shall ask the Senate to take up the naval appropriation bill.

Mr. BLAIR. I ask the Senator to waive that motion until the pension cases can be run through with which are now on the Calendar.

Mr. McMILLAN. It is evident the river and harbor bill must be proceeded with now if we are to pass the bill at this session. There are important appropriation bills yet to be passed.

Mr. HARRIS. Has the special order upon which the Senate has been acting for several days past in regard to the Calendar expired?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It has expired. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Minnesota, on which a division is demanded.

The question being put, the ayes were 28.

Mr. BLAIR. It will not take over half an hour to dispose of the pension bills, and I will ask for the yeas and nays on the motion to take up the river and harbor bill.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That would take a great part of the half hour. You will get a chance later. Wait until to-morrow.

Mr. BLAIR. Very well.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I hope that to-morrow these pension bills will be taken up.

Mr. BLAIR. I shall move their consideration to-morrow morning.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion is agreed to; and the river and harbor bill is before the Senate.

LEGISLATIVE, ETC., APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask the Senator from Minnesota to allow it to be laid aside informally that I may submit the report of the committee of conference on the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Iowa submits a conference report. That is a privileged matter.

Mr. ALLISON. I submit the conference report.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on certain amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. W. B. ALLISON,
H. L. DAWES,
F. M. COCKRELL,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

WM. S. HOLMAN,
GEO. C. CABELL,
J. G. CANNON,
Managers on the part of the House.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. What motion does the Senator from Iowa make?

Mr. ALLISON. I move that the Senate concur in the conference report.

Mr. INGALLS. I hope that the Senator will state, before we are asked to do that, what the points are on which the conferees thus far have failed to agree.

Mr. ALLISON. The first point on which the conferees have failed to agree is the item found on page 7 of the bill, amendment numbered 17, for clerks to Senators who are not chairmen of committees at $6 per day during the session. That is the first disagreement. The next is the appropriation for the Civil Service Commission, being one clerk of class 3 and two clerks at $900 each. The latter clause of the Senate amendment for that commission was agreed to, the Senate yielding half of the sum inserted. The next item is the salary of the assistant treasurer at Baltimore.

Mr. INGALLS. The Senate increased that?

Mr. ALLISON. The Senate increased that to $4,500, increasing it $500. The next item of disagreement is that relating to the compensation and expenses of agents and surveyors, fees and expenses of gaugers, salaries of storekeepers, &c., under the internal revenue.

Those are the only items of disagreement, I believe. I shall be glad to explain, if any Senator desires it, the report in detail.

Mr. INGALLS. Is there any danger, if I may inquire, that the Senate conferees will recede from the amendment of the Senate in the item providing for clerks for Senators?

Mr. ALLISON. I can hardly answer the Senator. I do not know what we shall do in the future; but I will say that if the gentlemen who have had charge of the matter shall be reappointed by the Chair we will do as near as we can according to the judgment and will of the Senate as we understand it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Iowa moves that the report of the conference committee be concurred in.

Mr. INGALLS. Do I understand that the Senator desires to yield the points on which the conferees have disagreed?

Mr. ALLISON. Not yet.

Mr. INGALLS. I do not understand the effect of this vote. What is meant by the motion? What do the conferees ask us to do now?

Mr. ALLISON. I ask that the report of the committee of conference be concurred in.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. So far as it goes.

Mr. ALLISON. That will close up the bill so far as the conferees have agreed, and then I shall move that the Senate still further insist upon its amendments.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Iowa to concur in the report of the conference committee.

The report was concurred in.

Mr. ALLISON. I now move that the Senate still further insist upon the amendments disagreed to and ask the House for a further conference.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Iowa moves that the Senate still further insist and ask for a further conference.

Mr. ALLISON. I think on a moment's reflection I will withdraw the part of the motion asking for a committee of conference. The House may recede from its disagreement.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Part of the motion is withdrawn.

Mr. ALLISON. I merely move that the Senate further insist on its amendments not settled by this report.

The motion to insist was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had agreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 8066) to pension Martha A. Voorhes.

The message also announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 582) for the relief of the board of field officers of the Fourth Brigade of South Carolina Volunteer State Troops.

The message further announced that the House had passed a joint resolution (H. Res. 202) to continue the provisions of a joint resolution approved July 1, 1886, entitled "A joint resolution to provide temporarily for the expenditures of the Government;" in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

RIVER AND HARBOR BILL.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 7480) making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The next amendment made as in Committee of the Whole will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In line 1181, after the word "improvement," the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, struck out the words:

And the money heretofore appropriated for locks and dams is hereby made available for dredging said river, according to the plan of the Chief of Engineers, recommended on the 12th of March, 1884: Provided, That not exceeding $30,000 shall thus be expended on Goose Rapids.

And inserted the following words:

From Breckenridge to the northern boundary line of the United States, including dredging, removal of snags and bowlders, and construction of wing-dams, &c.; and the money heretofore appropriated for locks and dams is hereby made available for this purpose.

So as to make the clause read:

Improving Red River of the North, Minnesota: Continuing improvement from Breckenridge to the northern boundary line of the United States, including dredging, removal of snags and bowlders, and construction of wing-dams, &c.; and the money heretofore appropriated for locks and dams is hereby made available for this purpose.

The next amendment was, in section 1, line 1201, after the word "operations," to strike out "and the cost of the proceedings hereinafter authorized" and insert "$10,000 to complete dredges authorized by act of July 5, 1884;" and after the word "mining," at the end of line 1205, to insert "hurtful to navigation;" so as to read:

Improving Sacramento and Feather Rivers, California, $40,000 of the money heretofore appropriated for improving said rivers that may remain unexpended at the end of the present fiscal year, for snagging and dredging operations; $10,000 to complete dredges authorized by act of July 5, 1884; the balance of said unexpended money not to be used until the Secretary of War be satisfied that hydraulic mining hurtful to navigation has ceased on said rivers and their tributaries.

The amendment was concurred in.

The next amendment was, at the end of the clause making an appropriation for "improving Sacramento and Feather Rivers, California," in line 1207, after the word "tributaries," to strike out the words:

If he be not satisfied, he is hereby instructed to institute such legal proceedings as may be necessary to prevent the washing, sluicing, dumping, or discharging detritus, débris, or slickens, caused by or arising from hydraulic mining, into either of said rivers or any of its tributaries, or into the San Joaquin River or any of its tributaries, or in or to such place or situation from which such detritus, débris, or slickens may be liable to be washed or carried by storms or floods into either of said rivers or tributaries; and he is hereby instructed to use out of said sum as much as may be necessary for said purpose.

The amendment was concarred in.

The next amendment was, in section 1, line 1222, to increase the appropriation for "improving canal at the Cascades, Oregon: Continuing improvement," from $200,000 to $250,000.

The amendment was concurred in.

The next amendment was, in section 1, line 1227, to increase the appropriation for "improving the mouth of the Columbia River, Oregon," from $150,000 to $250,000.

The amendment was concurred in.

The next amendment was, in line 1247, after the word "improvement," to insert:

Including necessary work at Omaha, Atchison, Saint Joseph, Fort Leavenworth reservation, Arrow Rock, Kansas City, Nebraska City, Plattsmouth, and Brownville.

So as to make the clause read:

Improving Missouri River from its mouth to Sioux City: Continuing improvement, including necessary work at Omaha, Atchison, Saint Joseph, Fort Leavenworth reservation, Arrow Rock, Kansas City, Nebraska City, Plattsmouth, and Brownville, $500,000.

Mr. HAWLEY. I do not read the bill as the Clerk does. He says "necessary work." I see "repairs of works."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The words "including necessary repairs of works" were stricken out.

Mr. MCMILLAN. The amendment was read correctly as amended in the Senate. The committee's amendment was amended in Committee of the Whole.

The amendment was concurred in.

The next amendment made as in Committee of the Whole was, after the word "dollars," in line 1250, to strike out:

Without the intervention of the Missouri River Commission.

And insert:

To be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War in accordance with plans and estimates to be furnished by the Missouri River Commission.

The amendment was concurred in.

The next amendment was, in section 1, after the word "dollars," at the end of line 1256, to insert "under the direction of the Secretary of War;" so as to read:

Improving Missouri River from Sioux City to Fort Benton: Continuing improvement, $80,000, under the direction of the Secretary of War.

The amendment was concurred in.

The next amendment was, after the word "improvement," at the end of line 1260, to insert "including Davis Island dam;" so as to read:

Improving the Ohio River: Continuing improvement, including Davis Island dam, $500,000, &c.

The amendment was concurred in.

The Secretary proceeded to read the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole in relation to the improvement of the Mississippi River, beginning in line 1327.

Mr. HOAR. I suggest that the words stricken out be not read.

Mr. INGALLS. This amendment is the amendment providing to insert words in place of the words stricken out on pages 58 and 59 and 60. I wish to move again the amendment that I offered in the Committee of the Whole, which will be found on page 6834 of the RECORD, and which I send to the desk to be read. I do not propose to continue this debate. I ask the Senate to give me the yeas and nays upon the final vote on that amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Kansas moves to amend the amendment of the Committee of the Whole. It will be reported.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 59, line 1438, of the part proposed to be inserted, after the word "channel," it is proposed to insert:

And provided further, That the expenditure of so much of said appropriation as may be required to continue the improvement of Plum Point and Lake Providence reaches shall be confined to the complete repair and maintenance of the levees throughout said reaches to the height of 2 feet above the flood of 1882, and to the completion of the permeable works of contraction to such extent as may be required to bring the high-water banks of the river to the comparative uniformity of width contemplated in the first five paragraphs of the plan of improvement recommended by the Mississippi River Commission and adopted by Congress in 1880, and more fully set forth in the report of the Secretary of War for 1881, volume 2, part 3, page 2733: And provided further, That no works of bank protection or revetment shall be executed in said reaches or elsewhere until after it shall be found that the completion of the permeable contracting works and uniform width of the high-water channel will not secure the desired stability of the river banks: Provided, however, That nothing herein contained shall prevent the construction of revetment works where the banks are caving, at Greenville reach, Delta Point, in front of the cities of Vicksburg, Memphis, Hickman, and Columbus: And provided further, That contraction works shall be built at the same time in the wide portions of the river immediately above the said revetment works.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Kansas asks for the yeas and nays on the adoption of the amendment to the amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. MCMILLAN. The Senate perhaps will remember the discussion which took place in Committee of the Whole between the Senator from Kansas [Mr. INGALLS] and the Senator from Indiana [Mr. HARRISON] upon this amendment, and the yeas and nays were taken. It is the amendment to the Mississippi River provision adopting the plan known as Mr. Eads's plan. I think that is it.

Mr. INGALLS. In brief that is it.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CHACE (when Mr. ALDRICH'S name was called). My colleague [Mr. ALDRICH] is paired with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. CAMDEN.]

Mr. TELLER (when Mr. BOWEN'S name was called). My colleague [Mr. BOWEN] is paired with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN].

Mr. CHACE (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Georgia [Mr. COLQUITT].

Mr. PLUMB (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. CAMERON] on this bill and all amendments to it, with the understanding that he would vote with the committee, and if I was opposed to it we should stand paired. I am in favor of this amendment myself, but I do not know personally how the Senator from Pennsylvania stands affected toward this amendment, nor can I tell with any degree of certainty what the position of the committee is upon it.

Mr. KENNA. I will say to the Senator that individually the committee is about equally divided in the matter.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. No debate is in order during the roll call.

Mr. KENNA. I am paired with the Senator from Minnesota [Mr SABIN], but I take the liberty to vote "yea."

Mr. PLUMB. I shall not vote, under the circumstances.

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I am paired with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL].

Mr. PLUMB. Since my remark a moment ago, the Senator from New York [Mr. MILLER] has stated to me that in view of the fact that the committee has taken no action I am at liberty to vote, and therefore I vote "yea."

Mr. CAMDEN. I am paired with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH].

The result was announced—yeas 32, nays 18; as follows:

YEAS—32.

Beck,	Eustis,	Hoar,	Plumb,

So the amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was concurred in.

The next amendment made as in Committee of the Whole was, in line 1465, after the word "survey," to strike out "seventy-five" and insert "twenty-five;" so as to read:

For survey of the Mississippi River from the head of the passes to its headwaters: Continuing survey, $25,000.

Mr. HARRISON. Let me inquire what was done with the amendment adopted as in Committee of the Whole, in line 1348, on my motion?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That is in as adopted.

Mr. GIBSON. I desire a vote on the amendment offered by the Senator from Indiana [Mr. HARRISON].

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That has been adopted.

Mr. GIBSON. It was adopted as in Committee of the Whole, but has not been adopted by the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The whole amendment has been adopted; but it will be considered open if the Senator desires.

Mr. GIBSON. I reserved the right to ask a yea-and-nay vote on the proposition. I opposed it in committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator is in time.

Mr. GIBSON. I ask for a yea-and-nay vote on the amendment offered by the Senator from Indiana.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. In line 1438, after the word "channel," the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, inserted:

But not below the reaches of the river which are being improved by them, unless it shall be necessary to prevent or close an injurious crevasse.

Mr. GIBSON. I desire to call the attention of the Senate to the fact that there is already in the bill as it came from the Committee on Commerce a restriction upon the commission in respect to building levees on the Mississippi River. The proviso is as follows:

Provided, That no portion of this appropriation shall be expended to repair or build levees for the purpose of reclaiming lands or preventing injury to lands or private property by overflows: Provided, however, That the commission is authorized to repair and build levees if, in their judgment, it should be done as part of their plan to afford ease and safety to the navigation and commerce of the river, and to deepen the channel.

A provision similar to that offered by the Senator from Indiana was placed in the first bill, making provision for the improvement of the Mississippi River. It is in keeping with the position taken by the Senator from Indiana when a member of that commission. He united then with General Comstock, who held views diametrically opposed to the plan upon which the jetties were built at the mouth of the Mississippi River, and condemned that plan, I am informed, when it was adopted by the Congress of the United States, and foretold that it would not be successful.

General Comstock is a learned and accomplished engineer, and I speak of him with great respect. I believe that he differed from Captain Eads and every other member of the commission, the six gentlemen who compose this commission, conscientiously. He has submitted minority reports, and while on the commission the Senator from Indiana joined General Comstock in the minority report condemning the plan which a majority of the commission had adopted for the improvement of the Mississippi River.

What does General Gillmore say of that language that was placed in the first bill?

There was just enough difficulty put in our way by that phraseology to influence a majority of the members of the commission and render them unwilling to touch the levee question with that phraseology in the law.

Mr. President, I attempted in the discussion of this bill when under consideration in Committee of the Whole to show that the plan of the commission adopted by the commission and indorsed by Captain Eads, rested upon the theory that it was necessary to hold all the water in the channel in order to decrease friction and increase the velocity of the current, and thus secure the scouring force which would carry away the sand bars and obstructions to the navigation, and prevent destructive floods by deepening the channel, lowering the surface, and giving it a uniform width. That is the whole theory of the commission.

If there be any truth in that theory it was illustrated by the success of the jetties at the mouth of the river. If it be true that by holding the water as you proceed from the Gulf upward in the channel it will deepen itself 3 feet or 5 feet or 6 feet or 10 feet or 20 feet, necessarily the bed of the river must be correspondingly lowered, and if you could lower the bed of the Mississippi River from the Gulf to Red River, you would necessarily increase the velocity immensely above the mouth of the Red River and add to its scouring force. This is the logic of the plan. This is the common-sense view of it, illustrated by every test and approved by experience.

That is what General Gillmore says in his last report; and I ask Senators to look into this question carefully before they vote for this amendment of the honorable Senator from Indiana. It is an insidious attack in support of the minority of the commission, the effect of which will be to overturn and condemn the Mississippi River Commission and the whole plan upon which this work proceeds. The honorable Senator's own explanation of his amendment discloses its true purpose and its real effect. General Gillmore says, in speaking of this matter with respect to the improvement of the river, as follows:

As there are no portions of the river where levees sustain relations to the general plan of improvement more important than those which obtain in these lower reaches, so there are none where their importance is more likely to be underestimated or even entirely overlooked, for the reason that, the lower-river channel being at all times sufficiently deep for the purpose of navigation, levees do not suggest themselves at all as a means of improvement below Red River.

Hear now what he says:

The essence of the whole matter is apt to be lost sight of, that they are required below for the benefit of the river above, and that they are valuable in proportion as they help—to enlarge the river bed, facilitate the discharge of the floods, lower the flood heights, lessen the difference between high and low river, and thereby ameliorate and simplify all the difficulties of improvement. Indeed, were it necessary to omit the maintenance of levees, as an auxiliary means, on any portion of the stream they might better be omitted above than below Red River. Were it possible to enlarge the bed of the river to a capacity that would be sufficient to carry off the flood-waters without any rise above the tide-level as far up as Red River, which would be practically extending the Gulf more than 300 miles upstream, there would then be no greater difference between high and low river at that point than that due to the tide oscillations, while for fully 200 miles higher up the largest floods would doubtless be retained within the natural bed. Works of improvement below Red River, of whatever character, are valuable as such only so far as they tend to the development of these conditions—that is, only so far as they aid in securing an enlarged local water way. The general benefits to which reference has been made will be certain to follow in due proportion.

Mr. President, it must be apparent to Senators that if you are going to improve this river according to the plans of the Mississippi River Commission and on which the jetties were constructed it is absolutely essential to begin at the mouth of the river, as the bill creating the Mississippi River Commission provides, because by deepening the channel the velocity of the current will do the work of scouring out and lowering the bed and surface of the river. If you begin at Cairo or at Vicksburg in the upper river or middle river, and deepen it there while leaving the lower end obstructed, you reverse the order and so far as you can you really check the velocity and create a tendency in the river to flow upstream. It would be illogical and unscientific.

Now a word further. There is no plan proposed by the Mississippi River Commission or by anybody else, as was asserted by the Senator from Indiana, to construct a great and permanent system of levees. Captain Eads does not suggest that. Some members of the commission may have an idea that it will be necessary to raise these great works; but it is because they do not appreciate the real theory upon which this system rests. Let the line of levees be once established and completed from the passes at the mouth of the river to the high lands above Cairo and the tremendous force and velocity and momentum of the current will solve the problem and solve it, I believe, as Captain Eads predicts. These results can not be accomplished in a day or year—it may take ten years or more to produce them.

I quote from some remarks delivered by Captain Eads before the Committee on Commerce on the first bill I offered in April, 1876, creating a Mississippi River commission, and I ask the attention of Senators to that, because it is the very essence of this whole matter:

There can be no doubt—

Says Captain Eads—

of the entire feasibility of so correcting the Mississippi River from Cairo to the Gulf that a channel depth of 20 feet during the low-water seasons can be permanently secured throughout its entire course, and that the alluvial lands on each side of its waters can be made absolutely safe from overflow without levees by such correction. This can be accomplished for a sum entirely within the ability of the Government and one really insignificant when compared with the benefits which would flow from such improvement.

Until such work is accomplished an annual expenditure for the maintenance of the levees is imperative.

These levees extend from the mouth of the Red River to the Gulf of Mexico. What the commission ask and what Captain Eads asks is that the levee system there shall be maintained until the full force of the river itself, which is greatest during the floods, may be invoked to deepen the channel and bear the mighty burdens from the great valley to the sea.

There are some 2,200 miles of levees on the banks of the Mississippi River which have been constructed by the population behind them, and there are only about 200 miles of gaps to be closed. Two million dollars is estimated by Captain Eads to be necessary for that purpose, and if this theory be correct, and if the commission desire to close all of these gaps in order to complete the line and to hold the water there instead of having it dispersed all over the country in order to carry the sediment and débris to the sea, why should we impose restrictions the evident effect of which the president of the commission tells us is to embarrass, is to nullify every purpose they have in that respect?

I ask Senators and the people of the Mississippi Valley to weigh well the amendment of the honorable Senator from Indiana and the reasons he carefully assigns for it in urging its adoption.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair would like to have the sense of the Senate as to whether the five-minute rule applies now. It was abandoned yesterday. The Chair did not enforce it against the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. GIBSON] and will not against any other Senator unless called for.

Mr. PLUMB. I suggest that the matter be held in abeyance until after the Senator from Indiana is through.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair did not intend to raise the point against the Senator from Indiana.

Several SENATORS. Enforce it after that.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Yesterday it was practically abandoned by a motion to postpone indefinitely the whole bill, which can be made at any time, and when made practically dispenses with the rule.

Mr. HARRISON. The majority of the commission have suggested that in the construction of levees that would be the course to be pursued; that it was in a measure illogical to construct levees at any point up the river until provision had been made for the lower reaches of the river. Professor Mitchell dissents from that view and presents a conclusion which to my mind is very satisfactory, which I do not think can be answered. Looking at this river from the standpoint of navigation only, he says that he regards the experiments which they have made in order to test the effect of levees upon navigation as not yet developed. He thinks it is very far from proved that they are essential—I do not quote his words, but that is the substance—and he suggests that to enter upon a general system of protecting by levees 270 miles of the lower river before you have demonstrated that the use of those levees along the reaches of the lower river that are to be improved is as beneficial as it is supposed to be would be premature.

Mr. President, I think we should look at this question from the standpoint of navigation only, which is the view that the people of this country generally take of it, because as a question of land protection it is a local question, and the general public view of the question is one of navigation. Now, looking at it from that standpoint, I think any prudent man would say, before we enter upon the construction of 270 miles of levee, or double that, at least more than that, for the river will need to be leveed on both sides certainly a part of the way, we ought to be absolutely sure that that vast expenditure will be useful. I have no idea how large it would be and I do not know whether either of the Senators from Louisiana could tell me.

Mr. GIBSON. Captain Eads says $2,000,000 will complete the entire system.

Mr. HARRISON. From the mouth up. Well, Mr. President, of course I have no data upon which I can controvert that. I have heard those who claim to be acquainted make the estimate very much higher than that.

I do not think the amendment I proposed, which was adopted in Committee of the Whole, puts shackles upon the commission that will be felt in the expenditure of the appropriation that is now being made. The amount of money which we give them is less than one-third of the total amount estimated for. The estimate of the commission, I see, was seven millions for the river between Cairo; and we give them, I think, two and a quarter millions, about one-third. It simply provides that they shall not build levees below those points of the river that are now suffering from an insufficient depth of water, so that navigation is impeded, unless it shall be necessary to prevent or to close an injurious crevasse.

I am entirely willing to add there if necessary the word "outlet" if the junior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. EUSTIS] whose suggestion I accepted in that respect thinks the word should be added, so that there may be no question that this shall not be technically a crevasse. I am entirely willing to say "crevasse or outlet." I want to give the commission the discretion below the points of the river that they are improving to expend money if it is necessary to prevent that which would be a threatened injury to the river; and it seems to me that gives them as wide a discretion as we ought to give unless we expressly sanction the application of this money, the whole of it if necessary, to the construction of levees on the Louisiana and Mississippi front of the river.

Mr. GIBSON. With the permission of the Senator from Indiana I submit to him that the bill as it came from the Committee on Commerce does not do that thing, it does not authorize the commission to construct levees.

Mr. HARRISON. The Senator from Louisiana refers to the language that was inserted in the original bill constituting the Mississippi River Commission. It was language most adroitly framed to open to this scheme of leveeing the lower river, to give "ease and safety to navigation;" and as has been argued by some and suggested in some of the reports, of course leveeing would give ease to navigation; it would make a landing where perhaps none would exist, and high water where it would not be otherwise, and thus give facilities of that kind to navigation. This language was introduced in the original constitution of the commission, and it is here now that they shall not do it exclusively for the purpose of reclaiming land; but they may do it if it gives ease to navigation. That is the language that is incorporated here; and yet under that very language and acting under that very provision, the Senator from Louisiana agrees that this commission, having such a provision in its organic and fundamental law, have devised and reported a plan for leveeing the entire lower river. Then there is nothing in this bill that prevents them doing it. If they are already prevented, why does the Senator from Louisiana resist my amendment? If it does not curtail a power that now exists which would authorize them to levee the entire lower river, why object to it if they are already restrained from doing that by the bill?

Mr. GIBSON. Why offer it if they are restrained from doing it by the bill when General Gillmore declares that such language is embarrassing to the commission?

Mr. HARRISON. If it embarrasses the commission, it is simply in the direction of carrying out a scheme of levees on the lower river which the Senator from Louisiana said a moment ago they were prohibited by the bill as it came from the House and by the Senate amendment from doing. I do not understand it so. If they are already so prohibited, this bill will not embarrass them. They are at liberty under the amendment of our committee, the Senator agrees, without this proviso, to spend the entire $2,000,000 in leveeing the lower river. The Senator assents.

Mr. GIBSON. On the condition that the levees be necessary for the improvement of the river, and the chief of that commission shows how if it becomes necessary money might be spent for that purpose.

Mr. HARRISON. The Senator has alluded to the estimate of Captain Eads. Can he turn me to the estimate of the commission as to the amount necessary to complete the leveeing of the stream? Can the Senator give me an estimate from the commission as to the amount necessary to be expended to complete a substantial levee along the entire front of this river? I think that is greatly beyond the estimate of Captain Eads.

I am not undertaking to settle an ultimate policy in reference to dealing with this river. I am simply taking this position, that as the commission wanted $7,000,000 and we have only given them two million and a quarter, they can expend the $2,000,000 within the restrictions which I have proposed here, properly on the river, and defer until these experiments have been further tested the expensive project of leveeing the whole river in order to get good water at points above where there are present shoals.

If this were a total appropriation, if we were assuming to do the whole thing at once, if we were inflexibly settling a policy in reference to this matter, if it were quite clear that the amount we appropriate can be judiciously expended on other and more urgent and more imperative work, namely, the improvement of the low-water navigation of the river—if that could be demonstrated, then we should have to settle the question now by this bill. I do not think we need to do that, and I think we give the commission sufficient discretion when we say at any place opposite or above where you are making an improvement, to remedy a defect in low water, if you think it necessary, you may build levees. You may build them below the points you are operating upon, if, in your judgment, it is necessary to prevent a serious or injurious crevasse or outlet. I am willing, if the Senator from Louisiana, who made this suggestion thinks it enlarges the matter, to insert the words "or outlet," so that they can protect the river below by an expenditure in the way of levees, if it is necessary, in their judgment, to prevent a serious outlet or outbreak of the river; but it would restrain them, in my judgment, from beginning at the mouth of the river a general system of levees.

I do not think that until we can get some concurrence of view from the commission as to the necessity of that, we ought to enter upon so large an expenditure until we have completed the interchannel works above that are necessary to give navigation ease over these low stretches of the river.

Mr. EUSTIS. Mr. President, if I had the responsibility of dictating to the river commission the policy which should be adopted, as a supporter of the levee system, I would be satisfied with the amendment offered by the Senator from Indiana; that is, that this commission, below a certain point, shall not build levees unless it be for the purpose of preventing or closing an injurious crevasse. Every crevasse is necessarily injurious. Therefore, this commission would have the power, under this amendment, wherever they had reason to apprehend that a crevasse was about to occur, to build a levee to prevent that crevasse, and wherever a crevasse had occurred they would have the power to use this money to close that crevasse. That, in my judgment, is the essence of the Eads system, which prevents any outlet whatever caused by any crevasse. And, therefore, as I construe that amendment, that would be, in my judgment, the levee system per se. But not having this responsibility, not being a member of the Committee on Commerce which has reported this bill, I do not feel at liberty to differ with those gentlemen who represent the States in the Mississippi Valley; and hence, I shall yield to them upon the question of superior knowledge and superior judgment, and also upon the question of superior responsibility. For that reason I feel called upon to vote against the amendment offered by the Senator from Indiana.

TEMPORARY APPROPRIATIONS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will lay before the Senate a joint resolution from the House of Representatives the title of which will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. A joint resolution (H. Res. 202) to continue the provisions of a joint resolution approved July 1, 1886, entitled "A joint resolution to provide temporarily for the expenditures of the Government."

Mr. ALLISON. I ask the Senate to agree to that joint resolution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Iowa asks unanimous consent to proceed to the consideration of the joint resolution at this time. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

The joint resolution was read twice, and considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides that the provisions of the joint resolution of July 1, 1886, shall be extended and continued in full force and effect to and including the 31st day of July, 1886.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

A message was subsequently received from the House of Representatives by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announcing that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled joint resolution (H. Res. 202) to continue the provisions of a joint resolution approved July 1, 1886, entitled "A joint resolution to provide temporarily for the expenditures of the Government;" and it was thereupon signed by the President pro tempore.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVALS.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. O. L. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had on the 14th instant approved and signed the following bills:

An act (S. 1942) for the relief of J. M. Hiatt, only surviving partner of Hiatt & Co.; and

An act (S. 2692) to amend and correct the act approved June 1, 1886, granting a pension to J. H. Thornburg.

AMENDMENTS TO BILLS.

Mr. PLUMB submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. CHACE submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Finance, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. BROWNE and Mr. VAN WYCK submitted amendments intended to be proposed by them respectively to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which were referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. BROWN, Mr. PALMER, and Mr. SEWELL submitted amendments intended to be proposed by them respectively to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which were referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. VANCE submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the general deficiency appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Post-Office and Post-Roads, and ordered to be printed.

RIVER AND HARBOR BILL.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 7480) "making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes."

Mr. HARRISON. Before the amendment is voted upon carrying out the suggestion I made, I move to add at the end of it the words "or outlet," so as to read "crevasse or outlet."

It is possible, that this may have some relation to the Atchafalaya River, which might not perhaps be accurately described as a crevasse, but it is an outlet in the Mississippi River the way the water is usually running. I am willing to add those words, so as to read "crevasse or outlet."

Mr. GIBSON. I will say to the Senator from Indiana that the main objection to his proposition is that the president of the Mississippi River Commission in his testimony before the Committee on Commerce says that it is an embarrassment to the commission.

Mr. MCMILLAN. I hope the amendment will be concurred in.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Indiana moves to amend the amendment by adding the words or "outlet."

Mr. GIBSON. How are those to vote who oppose the amendment of the Senator from Indiana?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is first on the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. HARRISON. The question is simply now on the addition of the words "or outlet."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That amendment to the amendment will be considered as agreed to unless there be objection. The Chair hears none; and it is agreed to. The question now is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. GIBSON] to strike out the paragraph known as the amendment of the Senator from Indiana [Mr. HARRISON] in the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. GIBSON. I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. HARRISON. The motion is not to strike out. The question is, Will the Senate agree?

Mr. MCMILLAN. This is an amendment made by the Senate as in Committee of the Whole.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The whole amendment is one amendment, and this having been inserted, it can not now be reached unless by a motion to strike out.

Mr. INGALLS. On what are we to vote?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. On striking out the amendment of the Senator from Indiana.

Mr. INGALLS. I should like to have it reported.

Mr. HARRIS. It is the amendment proposed by the Senator from Louisiana.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Louisiana moves to strike out a certain portion of the paragraph. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. After the word "channel," in line 1438, it is moved to strike out:

> But not below the reaches of the river which are being improved by them, unless it shall be necessary to prevent or close an injurious crevasse or outlet.

Mr. INGALLS. I do not propose to continue this debate, but will only say that as one of the most active and earnest friends of the improvement of the Mississippi River, I regard the amendment offered by the Senator from Indiana as in strict accordance with the ideas that I believe ought to prevail, and I regret very much that those who have agreed with me upon other parts of this subject should disagree with the absolute propriety of incorporating this provision. I shall vote against the motion to strike out.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BLACKBURN (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. MANDERSON], and, he not being in his seat, I withhold my vote.

Mr. CAMDEN (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH].

Mr. HARRISON. May I interrupt the roll for a moment? I understand the fact to be that the entire clauses as to the Mississippi River have been treated as one; and the question now being on the motion to strike out my amendment, the vote is not understood by many Senators. Those who vote "yea" of course vote to reject my amendment, and those who vote "nay" vote in favor of that amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will state again that the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. GIBSON] moves to strike out the words which were inserted on the motion of the Senator from Indiana [Mr. HARRISON]. Those in favor of retaining that clause in the proposition will vote "nay."

The roll-call was resumed.

Mr. KENNA (when Mr. SABIN'S name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SABIN].

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. CHACE. I am paired with the Senator from Georgia [Mr. COLQUITT].

Mr. BUTLER. I am paired with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. CAMERON]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 24, nays 24; as follows:

YEAS—24.

Beck,	Cullom,	Hampton,	Pugh,
Berry,	Eustis,	Harris,	Stanford,
Call,	George,	Hearst,	Vest,

Cameron,	McPherson,	Platt,	Voorhees.

So the amendment was rejected.

The amendment as amended was concurred in.

The next amendment made as in Committee of the Whole was, in line 1465 of section 1, after the word "survey," to strike out "seventy-five" and insert "twenty-five;" so as to read:

For survey of the Mississippi River from the head of the passes to its headwaters: Continuing survey, $25,000.

The amendment was concurred in.

The next amendment was to strike out section 2, and in lieu thereof to insert:

That in places where harbor lines have not been established, and where such deposits can be made without injury to navigation, within lines to be established by the Secretary of War, said officer may, and is hereby, authorized to cause such lines to be established; and within such lines such deposits may be made, under regulations to be from time to time prescribed by him.

Mr. DOLPH. What is the amendment proposed now?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. To strike out section 2 and insert what has been read.

Mr. DOLPH. The propositions were not voted on as one amendment; they were not one amendment when adopted; but I have no objection to the question being taken in that manner. I desire, however, to say a word if I can get the attention of the Senate.

I do not ask for a separate vote on this amendment or call attention to it for the purpose of delaying action upon the bill, or for the purpose of saying anything further upon it. I do not believe there is a Senator here who will not acknowledge that the subject-matter of the legislation proposed in this section and the five succeeding sections is very important. It has been pressed upon the attention of Congress by the War Department for a number of years. The draught of a bill containing the substance of the provisions contained in these several sections was prepared by the Secretary of War or under his direction and submitted to Congress in a special report in 1877.

I found after the vote was taken night before last that many Senators did not understand that this subject-matter had been under investigation by the Committee on Commerce and that a separate bill had been reported by that committee. That is the fact; I hold the bill in my hand. It is Senate bill 64, entitled "A bill to prevent the obstruction of navigable waters and to protect public works against trespass or injury." Some additions were made to the first section by the House Committee on Rivers and Harbors as incorporated in this bill in order to cover hydraulic mining.

I have had some conversation with the Senator from Kansas [Mr. INGALLS] this morning who opposed this section. I understood him to say during the discussion night before last if a certain portion of section 2 could be stricken out he saw no objection to it and I think he finds after careful scrutiny no objection to the subsequent sections.

I now suggest, if there is no objection to the first portion of the second section of the bill which makes it unlawful for any person to cast or throw or deposit into navigable streams anything that will cause an obstruction, whether or not the amendment suggested by the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] could not be adopted striking out the latter part of the section which makes it unlawful to deposit certain matter upon any affluent or tributary so that it may be washed into a navigable stream and adopt the balance of it.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Why not pass the regular bill?

Mr. DOLPH. The Senate Committee on Commerce, as I understand, agreed to the provisions contained in these sections. They agreed upon the bill which was reported by me. It is true the Senator from Nevada [Mr. JONES] was not present when that bill was considered, but when he did return he was present when the bill under consideration was considered in the committee and on two occasions amendments suggested by him were adopted which it was understood by the committee removed all the objections he had to section 2 as it stood in the bill. If there are still objections coming from persons interested in mining operations, let us amend the section so as not to affect them and secure what we can at this time in this bill and have further legislation hereafter.

The Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS] asks why not pass the special bill. That is all very well; but every one knows the difficulty in getting a measure of that kind through both branches of Congress. Here, as I said the other day, we have an opportunity to secure this legislation. The House committee, in accordance with the rules of the House, has incorporated these provisions in this bill. They are certainly germane to the subject-matter of the bill. It is in order under the House rules. It is now before us. We can modify it in a few moments and secure the enactment of many of these provisions, which are important and which it may take years to secure by an independent bill.

I am not tenacious about it. I have no personal interest in it. I am only seeking to serve the interests of the public; and if the Senate do not wish to consider the sections they need not. I ask a separate vote, and will state that I will raise no objection to the amendment of the Senator from Maine if the motion to strike out the section is rejected.

Mr. HALE. I do not think that the Senate has any inclination now to proceed to amend and perfect these provisions. It was evident the other day that the sense of the Senate was against the whole general propositions in these various sections. They were discussed considerably, and on a very large vote by a large majority were left out.

I think the safer way now and the better way is to leave these sections all out with the exception of the amendment that was suggested by the Senator from Michigan [Mr. CONGER], which was accepted by the Senate in Committee of the Whole. We can not agree upon any form that will satisfy the Senate, I am very clear in my mind, and therefore I for one shall object to undertaking to do that now.

The extension of Federal jurisdiction is a very important matter, and it is so important that it ought to be brought up, as the Senator from Vermont suggests, by a general bill, when the Senate can take time under no such pressure as there is to-day, and agree upon some policy that shall protect the Government works without unduly interfering with citizens and industries hundreds of miles away from the place where these works are carried on.

I hope the Senator from Oregon will not insist upon taking up time in the matter, though of course that is a subject entirely within his discretion.

Mr. DOLPH. Others have been so careful about the time to be consumed that I ask for the yeas and nays on the motion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. On the motion to strike out section 2 and insert the words now incorporated on the motion of the Senator from Michigan [Mr. CONGER] the Senator from Oregon [Mr. DOLPH] asks for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the amendment be reported.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on striking out section 2 and inserting the words which will be read.

The Secretary read the words proposed to be inserted, as follows:

SEC. 2. That in places where harbor-lines have not been established, and where such deposits of debris of mines or stamp works can be made without injury to navigation, within lines to be established by the Secretary of War, said officer may, and is hereby authorized to, cause such lines to be established; and within such lines such deposits may be made, under regulations to be from time to time prescribed by him.

Mr. CONGER. Are there two votes, or is it all one?

Mr. HALE. This is included. A "yea" vote strikes out the section and leaves in what the Senator from Michigan proposed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That is the effect. The Senator from Maine has correctly stated the question.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CAMDEN (when his name was called). I repeat the announcement of my pair with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH].

Mr. KENNA (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SABIN].

Mr. SAULSBURY (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL].

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I am paired with the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. MANDERSON]. Were he here, I should vote "yea."

Mr. CHACE. I am paired with the Senator from Georgia [Mr. COLQUITT]. My colleague [Mr. ALDRICH] is paired with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. CAMDEN].

Mr. TELLER. I am paired with the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BROWN], but I understood at the time I was paired that I should vote upon certain amendments as I saw fit. There seems to be some misunderstanding, and therefore I refrain from voting. I should vote "yea" if I felt at liberty to vote.

The result was announced—yeas 35, nays 10; as follows:

YEAS—35.

Allison,	Dawes,	Hawley,	Ransom,
Beck,	Edmunds,	Hearst,	Sherman,
Berry,	Eustis,	Ingalls,	Spooner,
Blair,	Evarts,	Jones of Arkansas,	Vance,
Butler,	George,	Jones of Nevada,	Walthall,
Call,	Gray,	Logan,	Whitthorne,
Coke,	Hale,	Maxey,	Wilson of Iowa,
Conger,	Harris,	Platt,	Wilson of Md.
Cullom,	Harrison,	Plumb,

NAYS—10.

Dolph,	McMillan,	Pugh,	Vest.
Frye,	Mitchell of Oreg.,	Sewell,
Hampton,	Palmer,	Stanford,

ABSENT—31.

Aldrich,	Colquitt,	Mahone,	Riddleberger,
Blackburn,	Fair,	Manderson,	Sabin,
Bowen,	Gibson,	Miller,	Saulsbury,
Brown,	Gorman,	Mitchell of Pa.,	Sawyer,
Camden,	Hoar,	Morgan,	Teller,
Cameron,	Jones of Florida,	Morrill,	Van Wyck,
Chace,	Kenna,	Payne,	Voorhees.
Cockrell,	McPherson,	Pike,

So the amendment was concurred in.

The next amendment made as in Committee of the Whole was to strike out section 3.

Mr. TELLER. As I stated a moment since, I am paired with the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BROWN]. It was my understanding that I should vote for certain amendments or against them as my judgment dictated. It seems that it was understood by his friends that I was generally paired. I voted on what was known as the Harrison amendment. I desire to enter a motion to reconsider that I may have an opportunity of consulting the Senator from Georgia to see whether he regards the pair as applying to that or not.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Reserving the question whether a reconsideration can be moved.

Mr. HOAR. It is suggested that a separate vote is not required on the remainder of the amendments.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will put the question on agreeing to the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole, striking out sections 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, and 11.

The amendments striking out these sections were concurred in.

Mr. HOAR. I suggest that the vote be taken at once without reading on the remaining amendments. They are all to section 12, providing for surveys.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will treat all the amendments to section 12 as one amendment if there be no objection.

Mr. HOAR. It is not necessary to read them.

The amendments were concurred in.

Mr. MCMILLAN. Does that finish the amendments of the Committee of the Whole to the bill?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It does.

Mr. MCMILLAN. Now, if the Chair please, I wish to make a motion.

Mr. HALE. I think there are some amendments which were reserved as we passed along.

Mr. EDMUNDS. There was one on page 41 where I tried to amend an amendment of the committee and found it was not in order to move to amend an amendment of the committee. I wish to make a motion about that.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Vermont reserved a vote on that, the Chair understands.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I move to strike out the paragraph commencing on line 974 and ending on line 993. That is the Green and Barren River Navigation Company clause, and on that I ask for the yeas and nays. The matter has been fought here enough. I only want to have a record made on it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Vermont moves to strike out from line 974 to line 993, inclusive, and asks for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. CALL and Mr. HAWLEY. Let the amendment be reported.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The words proposed to be stricken out will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the words proposed to be stricken out, as follows:

The Secretary of War is hereby authorized and directed to ascertain the value and commercial importance of the works and property of the Green and Barren River Navigation Company, situated on the Green and Barren Rivers, in the State of Kentucky, and of the Monongahela Navigation Company, situated on the Monongahela River, in the State of Pennsylvania; and in order to acquire such information the Secretary of War shall appoint a board of three competent engineers from the Engineer Corps of the United States Army, which board shall in each case report to the Secretary of War, who shall report thereon to Congress at its next succeeding session; and the cost of such examination shall be paid out of the sum appropriated by this act for surveys: Provided, That nothing herein shall be construed as committing Congress to the purchase of the said works.

Mr. KENNA. I only want to say one word on this question. There is a provision contained in this bill for the Sturgeon Bay and Lake Michigan Ship-canal and a harbor of refuge in connection therewith, and also a provision for the Hennepin Canal and for the canals on Lake Superior. Now here are provisions for the Barren and Green Rivers, Kentucky, and for the Monongahela River, Pennsylvania, simply looking to an inquiry as to compensation that will be required hereafter if the Government takes possession of them. The Muskingum has been provided for also. If these other works are to be left in this bill, why should this important Monongahela provision be antagonized? I hope this item will be allowed to take the course of the others.

Mr. EDMUNDS. If I am not mistaken, Mr. President, in my recollection of the reports, this operation about the Green and Barren Rivers' improvement has been once gone through with and reports have been obtained as to its condition which do not look very favorable to a purchase. Now, although this is under color of getting information and not committing Congress, it is, in fact, the first step of what is to lead to an inevitable conclusion, apparently, as these things go.

If it is for information, I repeat that if my recollection is correct we have got it. We know all about the works of the Green and Barren River Company, and therefore I want to have the Senate determine whether they wish to go on with that enterprise, and it is exactly what this thing means. As the Senator from West Virginia said, it is one of a series of things that stand on four, five, or six legs, and if one leg comes out he is afraid that it will be unjust to the others.

Mr. KENNA. No; I think the four, five, or six things stand on one leg, and that prop ought not to be taken away.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I will not go into the question of dynamics. All that I can move at this present time is to strike this out. I do not wish to take up the time of the Senate. I know discussion is perfectly useless, but the yeas and nays may not be always.

Mr. VEST. I wish to make a single observation. The Senator from West Virginia says that this is only for information. That is exactly the way in which the transfer or assignment of the Kentucky River to the General Government was brought about. In that case the first step that was taken was a survey by a United States engineer for information, and the next thing was an appropriation in a river and harbor bill, which nobody seems to have noticed, for it passed both Houses without debate, to put the whole slack-water navigation of the Kentucky River, then in a ruinous condition, upon the General Government. Now the very same sort of process is to be gone through with as to Barren and Green Rivers, because slack-water navigation was put upon them at the same time that it was put upon the Kentucky River, they being in the southern portion of Kentucky, and it would be unjust, as Kentuckians thought, to that section to take the Kentucky River in the northern part of the State off the hands of the State and put it on the Treasury of the United States without doing the same thing for the two rivers in the Green River country.

I do not propose to make any factious opposition. I have been beaten on every one of these schemes and I have acquiesced in the better judgment possibly of my colleagues in the Senate. But do not let us make any mistake about it. As soon as we vote for this proposition to make this survey for information we are taking the initial step toward unloading upon the General Government both of these rivers.

Mr. KENNA. Undoubtedly the Senate will not undertake to purchase any work without knowing what it is doing. The Senator from Missouri will observe the proviso here:

That nothing herein shall be construed as committing Congress to the purchase of the said works.

Mr. VEST. Of course.

Mr. KENNA. So that the next Congress or any subsequent Congress is absolutely free to act on this matter without regard to this legislation.

Mr. BECK. I do not quite see why there is so much repetition and reiteration in regard to what happened seven or eight years ago about the Kentucky River improvement. The Monongahela, the Kanawha, the Illinois, and a dozen others I could name have been in the same fix, and yet this seems to be singled out with great vehemence by a number of gentlemen who repeat it and repeat it, and bring it up as though it was a matter that stood by itself alone.

The survey of the Green and Barren Rivers was ordered years and years ago. I hold in my hand the report of the engineers made as early as 1880, and the act of Congress ordering the survey and examination of these rivers, to ascertain what had been done with them. On page 1799 of the report of the engineers for this year is a report of a survey of these rivers under an order of Congress, made by Mr. Merrill.

I could spend an hour, if I wanted to take up the time of the Senate, as we expect to run to the 1st of August, by reading it all and also the report of Mr. Fitzhugh, dated Frankfort, Ky., January 28, 1880, covering four or five pages with regard to the examinations made as to whether these rivers should be part of the system. Again, on page 292 of the report of this year is another long statement as to the examinations that have been made of these rivers. When the House of Representatives saw fit to insert a provision here looking with some distinctness to the purchase from the company that own these works, the Senate very properly struck out any words that looked in that direction, and in order to prevent any misunderstanding as to action hereafter, the Senate Committee on Commerce very properly directed the Secretary of War not to negotiate for the purchase, but to ascertain the value and commercial importance of the property.

That is all the Senate committee desires to do, and not to keep this running year after year by surveys and examinations and reports. Let us know what is going to be done to close it out one way or the other. That is all anybody asks in regard to the Monongahela or the Green River. Instead of ascertaining the value of the works as the House proposed, the Senate committee inserted "acquire such information," and in order to obtain such information provide that a board of engineers shall be appointed. Then the provision appropriating $10,000 as it came from the House is stricken out, and only the costs of examination and surveys are to come out of the general sum appropriated for surveys in the bill, with a proviso.

That nothing herein shall be construed as committing Congress to the purchase of the said works.

The whole object is simply to see that the matter can be closed out at once after five or six years' examination and let us know what it is proposed to do. We do not go even as far as the House proposed; but after having made all sorts of examinations, and having had favorable reports on these improvements, we now say let us get the information upon which we can settle the question; and the Senator from Vermont, the chairman of the Judiciary Committee, who can swallow the Hennepin Canal and everything else, seems to think this is a special point to make in regard to an examination that involves no expenditure except to pay our own officers, who have to be paid anyhow no matter what work they are doing, to give us official information that we may settle this question. That is all anybody asks you to do. The provision being in the bill now and being improved by the Senate over what the House has done, I think the distinguished Senator from

Vermont could have found something bigger than this clause on which to exercise his great talents.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President, I am sorry to have excited the displeasure of the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECK] in exercising the right that is supposed to exist west of the Alleghanies of a Senator to express his opinion about any particular clause in a bill that happens to be before the Senate; but I must bear it as best I may.

The Senator from Kentucky is as mistaken, however, in his statement of fact as he is in his inference. I did not support the Hennepin measure; I opposed it to the extent of my ability and voted against it, as I did against the Sturgeon Bay, the Portage Lake, and the Muskingum, and the whole brood of schemes, as the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] very mildly designated them, which had been dumped into this bill with strength enough to stand together when neither one of them would have had strength enough to stand alone.

We want information, do we? Well, it is only, without anybody's noticing it, two years ago the 5th of July that Congress commanded this information to be got, and under date of the 27th of January, 1885, page 1904 of this report of the Secretary of War, the information is returned; and the short of that information is that the State of Kentucky went into this enterprise a good many years ago and got sick of it and turned it over to a corporation; the corporation has gotten sick of it and the charter of the corporation has expired about a dozen years, and if we do not make haste there will be nothing to sell, although I do not know that that would make any difference about the United States paying the money. That is all I have got to say.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BLACKBURN (when his name was called). I am paired generally with the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. MANDERSON], but knowing how he would vote were he in the Chamber, I shall vote "nay."

Mr. BUTLER (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. CAMERON].

Mr. CHACE (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Georgia [Mr. COLQUITT]. My colleague [Mr. ALDRICH] is paired with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. CAMDEN].

Mr. SPOONER (when Mr. MANDERSON'S name was called). The Senator from Nebraska [Mr. MANDERSON] is absent on a conference committee.

Mr. SAULSBURY (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL]. I do not know how he would vote.

Mr. EDMUNDS. He would vote "yea" if he were here.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Then I vote "yea."

Mr. TELLER (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BROWN]. Not knowing how he would vote, I withhold my vote.

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. CAMDEN. I am paired with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH].

The result was announced—yeas 21, nays 26; as follows:

YEAS—21.

Allison,	Frye,	Ingalls,	Sewell,
Berry,	Gray,	Maxey,	Vest,

So the motion to strike out was rejected.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I move now to strike out, on pages 41 and 42, from line 994 to line 1023, inclusive, on which I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. BECK. Let that matter be reported.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be reported.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to strike out the following clause:

Improvement of the Muskingum River, Ohio, between Zanesville and the mouth of the river, and for operating the same, $20,000. And the United States hereby accepts from the State of Ohio the said Muskingum River improvement, and all the locks, dams, and their appurtenances, and the canals, belonging to said improvement, and all the franchises and property of every kind, and rights, in said river, and its improvements, now owned, held, and enjoyed by the State of Ohio, including all water leases and rights to use water under and by virtue of any lease of water now running and in force between the State of Ohio and all persons using said water, hereby intending to transfer to the United States such rights in said leases and contracts as are now owned, held, or reserved by the State of Ohio: but not to affect any right to the use of the water of said river now owned and held by the lessees of any water right under any lease or contract with the State of Ohio. And the United States hereby assumes control of said river, subject to the paramount interest of navigation. The provisions of this act, so far as they relate to the Muskingum River, shall not take effect, nor shall the money hereby appropriated be available, until the State of Ohio, acting by its duly authorized agent, turns over to the United States all property ceded by the act of the General Assembly aforesaid, and all personal property belonging to the improvement aforesaid, and used in its care and improvement, and any balance of money appropriated by said State for the improvement of said river, and which is not expended on the 15th day of July, 1886.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. SHERMAN (Mr. FRYE in the chair). Mr. President, I feel bound to say a few words in regard to this improvement.

I am sorry the Senator from Vermont raises the question again, because the Senate have once heard the matter fairly debated on both sides, the main arguments against the measure being presented certainly forcibly by the Senator from Missouri, and I tried to present the considerations which should induce Congress to accept this improvement. But as the question is again raised, I feel bound to repeat very briefly the considerations which, in my judgment, make this proposition among the strongest in the whole bill.

The Muskingum improvement is a work which cost over $1,600,000 at a time when the Government of the United States undertook to improve neither rivers nor harbors. It was an improvement of very great value, composed of eight locks and as many dams, and gave a very valuable navigation to the first stream west of the Alleghany Mountains that was improved in the United States. At the time the State of Ohio undertook to improve this navigable stream the question of the improvement of rivers had not been much discussed; Congress for years had declined to engage in such work; and Ohio—in my judgment in violation of the Constitution—undertook to improve these navigable streams. In my judgment, and according to the opinion that now prevails, the State of Ohio had no power to put dams and locks in this navigable stream without the consent of Congress.

At that time no such consent was supposed to be necessary, and they went on and expended from $1,600,000 to $2,000,000 in making this valuable improvement.

The State of Ohio never undertook to make any money from the improvement. It simply levied tolls enough on the commerce passing through it to pay exactly the expense of maintaining it, the expense of the gate keepers, &c., some $10,000 a year. For a period of nearly fifty years the State of Ohio has simply maintained it by levying tolls to the amount of from ten to twelve thousand dollars a year, and the returns contained in the reports of the engineers show that the annual expenses of the improvement were about equal to the tolls levied upon the tonnage, because the tolls were small.

This is a very valuable improvement. I have been asked by Senators why does the State of Ohio wish to get rid of it? This is the reason: While we hold it, according to our policy we levy tolls upon the people in the neighborhood to pay the expenses of maintaining and keeping it in repair from $10,000 to $20,000 a year. That is the policy of the State, and that policy will not be departed from. The result is that this navigable stream of all the navigable streams in the United States of America is subject to tolls because the State of Ohio undertook to make this improvement instead of the United States. If the State of Ohio had waited ten years, the United States would naturally have made this improvement in the ordinary course of things, as it did in all the other navigable streams; but because of that fact, are the people of that particular neighborhood to be compelled forever and forever to pay tolls on that navigable stream after all the other navigable streams are free from toll? The only benefit the people of the State of Ohio will derive from the assumption by the Government of this improvement, taking charge of it and accepting this gift without money and without price, will be that the Government of the United States will pay this charge of from ten to twenty thousand dollars a year and make this river like all the other rivers of the United States toll-free.

Why should the people of Ohio be denied this? We do not ask you to buy the work. We do not ask you to reimburse us what we paid for the improvement. We do not deny that the improvement is of value to us, and if put into the hands of a corporate company with power to levy tolls they might levy on the people of the Muskingum Valley more than enough to pay the expenses and to make a large profit. But does the Senate desire that this stream alone of all the navigable streams in the United States should be compelled to pay money for every barrel of wheat and for every ton of coal passing through it?

The whole of that beautiful valley is underlaid by a magnificent bed of coal. The tonnage of coal from that valley is over 300,000 tons a year. The vessels that are passing are steam-vessels. It is not a canal; it is a steam slack-water navigation. It is true there are three or four short canals made at the end of dams where locks are inserted, as a matter of convenience. The general improvement is simply that of a slack-water navigable stream.

It seems to me that when the State of Ohio proposed to donate this entire property to the United States free of charge, and in addition to that contributed the usual annual allowance of $10,000 for this year to pay the expenses of the improvement, gate-keepers, lock-keepers, &c., it was a generous and a liberal thing that ought to be promptly accepted. This has been recommended by every engineer who has examined it.

General Merrill, who has charge of it, expresses his recommendation in the strongest possible terms.

It is sufficient to say that it has been discussed elsewhere fully and sent here to us as a part of this bill. It was proposed to be stricken out by the Committee on Commerce simply because they had not examined into all the merits of the matter. My colleague and I who know most about this did not deem it necessary to go before the committee and I had no knowledge of its being stricken out until the bill was reported, so that we had no opportunity to explain to the committee the reasons why this clause ought to be retained. I have no doubt if we had gone before them and done what others had done, explained the reasons and the circumstances connected with this donation, the report of the committee would have been otherwise. I judge so from the fact that many members of the committee after hearing the explanations made voted to retain the provision in the bill.

I shall not detain the Senate any longer.

Mr. GEORGE. I desire to ask the Senator from Ohio a question, if he will permit me.

Mr. SHERMAN. Certainly.

Mr. GEORGE. Upon what terms and conditions has the State of Ohio granted this property to the United States?

Mr. SHERMAN. Simply on condition that the United States shall receive it. It can do what it pleases with it. As a matter of course we knew that the United States would make it free of toll. That is the principal consideration, but even that consideration is not mentioned in the law.

Mr. GEORGE. It is just a free grant, unrestricted gift, without condition?

Mr. SHERMAN. A free grant to the people of the United States.

Mr. GEORGE. Then I shall vote for it.

Mr. SHERMAN. Besides that, there is a stipulation (I have forgotten now the language of the grant) which is itself in the bill; but I would not object to any amendment which would make it entirely within the pleasure of the United States to improve it, or abandon it, or do with it as it may choose.

Mr. GEORGE. You understand that to be the situation of it now.

Mr. SHERMAN. Undoubtedly. There is no other expectation. It will cost $114,000 according to the estimate of the engineer to put the improvement from Zanesville to Marietta in an excellent state; that is, to put it in a complete state of improvement.

Mr. VEST. The engineer says $200,000.

Mr. SHERMAN. That is from Dresden down, the Senator will see.

Mr. VEST. I thought the 16 miles from Dresden to Zanesville had been abandoned.

Mr. SHERMAN. The engineer says it will cost $84,000 or $86,000 to rebuild the upper dam, which is practically abandoned, but from Zanesville down you will see that General Merrill says in his report the entire cost will be $114,000. He recommends that an appropriation be made to complete the work and to put it in good condition. It is not proposed in this bill to do that. We hope and expect some time that it will be the pleasure of the United States to treat this improvement like other improvements. Ten million dollars is the estimate for New York Harbor and $1,000,000 is appropriated in the bill. There is no appropriation in this bill for this work except $20,000, I believe, to pay the ordinary charges for the maintenance of the improvement.

Mr. GEORGE. I understand the Senator to say that if we accept this grant from the State of Ohio we are at liberty to go on with the improvement or abandon it as we see proper.

Mr. SHERMAN. I so understand it. If that is not clear I am perfectly willing to make it so.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FRYE in the chair). Is the Senate ready for the question?

Mr. EDMUNDS. Not quite, Mr. President.

The act of the State of Ohio does not to my humble apprehension appear to be exactly what the Senator from Ohio seems to think it is. I I have it here. It is a very carefully drawn section—very carefully drawn. The man who drew it was accomplished in the business of saying no more than he meant to say.

That whenever the United States shall make an appropriation, and shall be about to begin the improvement of any of the navigable rivers within or bordering on the State of Ohio, by means of locks and permanent removable dams, or dams with adjustable chutes, or by means of a canal, the consent of the State of Ohio is hereby given to the acquisition by the United States, by purchase or by condemnation of any lands, buildings or other property necessary for the purpose of erecting thereon dams, abutments, locks, lock-keepers' dwellings, chutes, and other necessary structures for the construction and maintenance of slack-water navigation on said rivers, or for the purpose of constructing canals on the same, and the said United States shall have, hold, use, and occupy the said land or lands, buildings, or other property, when purchased or acquired as provided for by this act, and shall exercise jurisdiction and control over the same.

The second section provides for condemnation in case the United States can not agree with the owners.

Mr. SHERMAN. If the Senator will allow me, the second section authorizes the United States to condemn property for the improvement of the Ohio River. The condemnation of property is for the improvement of the Ohio River in other parts of the State. If the Senator will look at it a little closer he will see that is the fact.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I am looking at it with the utmost closeness, and I will read the second section.

Mr. SHERMAN. It is the first section, I think, which authorizes the condemnation of land.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I have read the first section in extenso, literally, and the second section I undertook to state, to save time. Now I will read enough of it to show what that is:

SEC. 2. That in case of failure of the United States to agree with the owner or owners of any such lands as the United States may deem necessary for the purpose named in the first section of this act, it shall be lawful for the United States to apply for the condemnation of such land, &c.

The third section provides for punishing willful and malicious injury to the property of the United States. That is excellent on the part of the State of Ohio. The fourth section provides that—

For the purpose of enabling the United States to expend any sum of money that is or may hereafter be appropriated by Congress for the improvement of the Muskingum River, the State of Ohio hereby transfers and cedes to the United States the eleven locks and dams heretofore constructed by said State on said river, together with all the grounds, canals, and appurtenances belonging to the same, subject to the provisions of the preceding sections of this act, as to the jurisdiction of the United States over the lands and buildings authorized to be acquired and constructed by said sections, and imposing penalties for injuries to said work, [which] shall extend and apply to the said eleven locks and dams and their appurtenances hereby transferred and ceded to the United States, but the custody and ownership of said Muskingum River improvement shall remain in the State of Ohio until such time as the United States appropriates sufficient money to properly improve and operate the same.

Now where do we stand? The effect of that is that for the purpose of improving that river and for no other the United States is to have it, and the moment she fails to improve, then this so-called grant of the State of Ohio ceases. I am not complaining of the propriety of it as a trade between the State of Ohio and the United States. The State of Ohio has a right to make any terms she pleases in selling her property.

Mr. GEORGE. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. EDMUNDS. Yes.

Mr. GEORGE. Is there anything in that, though, which imposes upon the United States an obligation to keep up those improvements after the United States shall determine that it is improvident to do so?

Mr. EDMUNDS. There is, in my opinion, clearly.

Mr. GEORGE. At what point is that?

Mr. EDMUNDS. If the Senator will just take the act and read it all through for himself, he will see clearly that running all the way through it is that very fundamental condition, not stated in any express terms in one line, except stating the purpose and object of making the improvement perfect, and as fast as the United States will spend money, or may spend it, on the canal, that she may buy this property of these lease-holders, and so on. For all purposes of spending money it belongs to the United States. For all the other purposes, whenever she stops spending it, it does not; and so she is bound to keep on; that is the condition; and if it is not fulfilled the property is Ohio's again.

Now, let us see who built these canals and where the generosity comes in. I find in the report of the Commissioner of the General Land Office of the 30th of June, 1885, that Congress has given to the State of Ohio under the acts of 1827 and 1834, two acts, apparently, and 1852 and 1855, extensions I suppose, lien lands, &c., 266,535 acres of land for canal purposes.

Mr. SHERMAN. Will the Senator from Vermont allow me to say that those grants of land were all in the northwestern and western part of the State and were not intended at all to apply to this improvement? This was never called a canal. It was called the Muskingum slack-water improvement. I happen to know about that, because I served as a rodman on this very improvement; and I think I ought to know better than my friend from Vermont. The State of Ohio never got one cent from the Government of the United States directly or indirectly, either in lands or any other form, for the construction of this improvement. Those grants were made for the western canal, the Wabash Canal.

Mr. EDMUNDS. We will see about that. By the acts of 1828 and 1830 more canal lands, amounting to 333,826 acres, were given to the State of Ohio, and she got them certified.

Mr. SHERMAN. That was before this improvement was commenced.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Certainly it was before the improvement was commenced. By the act of May 24, 1828, for general canal purposes, without naming where the improvement would be, 500,000 acres of land in the State of Ohio were given to that State for these purposes.

So putting all together she has received more than 1,100,000, almost 1,200,000 acres of land, enough to make an empire almost, in the rich and beautiful country of the State of Ohio for her internal-improvement system. I do not say anything about the grants for railways; they are under another head. This is the water part of it, as separated by the Commissioner of the General Land Office.

Mr. GEORGE. I return the Senator the act.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I do not care about it.

Mr. GEORGE. I am through with it.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I do not care about it, because I know how perfectly useless this discussion is.

I find in the report of the engineers that the only considerable part of this business is supplying the water to manufacturing establishments.

The supply runs up that is actually used per minute (I have not footed it except roughly and rapidly) to more than 100,000 cubic feet per minute. That is leased on long leases, expiring as this says away up, some of them in 1900, some in 1894, and so on, where complete and vested rights to this probable navigable water, that more than a million acres of the lands of the United States have been given to that State to improve her internal water ways in such way as she pleased, have been secured; and it is tied up by these contracts of the State with more than a dozen, I should say nearly twenty, different manufacturing parties and firms.

The income of the canal does not appear to be very great. It is stated here in the financial statement. The average tolls per year are only $12,000. They get from rents $3,970. More than a quarter of the whole income of the canal is in these private speculations for manufactures; perfectly lawful for the State of Ohio to do, except that it was rather hard in her to take so much land from the United States and use the water that was to be saved up for navigation to sell it out to mill-owners, &c. That is the way the thing stands.

These land grants to the State of Ohio for these purposes carried with them the duty and propriety—I have not looked it up in terms as I did in some of the other cases—of keeping these tolls down to the minimum when the expenditures of the State were reimbursed out of these lands; and now they have got to a condition where the thing is no longer profitable to the State, and is only profitable apparently to the mill-owners. Whether it is profitable to them or not we do not know; but now is a good time to turn it over to the United States and let the common Treasury spend half a million, or a quarter of a million, or a whole million dollars and take off from the State of Ohio this burden which she had assumed and undertaken, and which burden has been paid for by more than a million acres of the lands of the United States.

I do not think it is a good answer for my friend to say that some of these lands were granted for different canals in the State. We did not undertake to determine how many and what canals she should have, but we undertook to say, "You want to improve your internal water courses, and you want the land; here it is, but you must use it for these public purposes;" and now, having been used for these purposes, and the thing having got into this quasi-bankrupt condition, the United States is asked to take it off her hands and to improve it, leaving her to have it again when it is improved, apparently, if we do not keep up to time. I do not believe in that sort of thing. I do not think it is right. I fear it is useless to oppose it, but I deemed it a duty to say what I have said.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, but a few words. If the Senator from Vermont had as much information about this matter as the citizens of Ohio have he would not make the mistake of falling into the idea that the Muskingum River was built with any land grant, or that the water rights interfere at all with the grant now proposed to be made to the United States.

Let me tell the Senator from Vermont that in this part of the State of Ohio the whole of the land was sold to the Ohio Company's Purchase, as it was called. Not an acre of the land along the banks of the lower Muskingum was ever public land of the United States since 1785. I think that was the date of the grant to the Ohio company.

Mr. EDMUNDS. If I may interrupt my friend, none of these grants in Ohio were alternate section land grants; they did not pretend to be.

Mr. SHERMAN. I will come to that.

When the State of Ohio undertook to build two canals across the State as a continuation of the Erie Canal, it was at a cost of something like $14,000,000. It involved the State in a large debt, under which for many years it labored. At that time, between 1820 and 1830 (I think the date of the law referred to by the Senator was 1829 or 1830) the United States did give land to the States of Ohio and Indiana, for Indiana received the greater proportion of it, for the purposes of building the Wabash and other canals, the canal system as it was called; that is, this double parallel line of canals across the State of Ohio, one extending from Cleveland to Portsmouth and the other from Toledo to Cincinnati. Those canals did not affect the region that is affected here, did not come anywhere between Zanesville and Marietta, had no connection with that region; and besides that the Muskingum improvement was never contemplated, it was never thought of, until nearly ten years after these grants had been made. It was commenced in 1837, and the United States never paid one dollar or contributed one acre of land or gave any encouragement or aid or assistance whatever in the building of this Muskingum improvement. It was made for the purpose of improving the only navigable river in the State of Ohio, and one that is pretty large, because it drains nearly one-third of the State. It extends from the mouth of the Muskingum on the Ohio River to within 25 miles of Cleveland. It extends west from where I live, and I live in the middle part of the State, and runs to the Ohio River, embracing all that region of country, and is a large navigable river, and the only navigable river in the State of Ohio.

Ohio undertook to improve that river.

There is no defect in this grant if I have understood the grant correctly. I am sorry I have not the law before me. I have General Merrill's report here, which contains the law. I think it can not be all in the document from which my friend read, but no doubt its main provisions are there. The law contained certain provisions to authorize the United States to condemn property necessary for the construction of a series of works on the Ohio River, and as an addendum to and part of that same law it provided for the cession of the Muskingum improvement, because the Government of the United States is now erecting at the mouth of the Muskingum an ice-harbor which to some extent does take private land, and it was necessary for the Government of the United States to have the authority of the State to have this land condemned. At least upon application by the authorities of the Government of the United States this law was passed to enable the United States under the law of Ohio to condemn certain land that it was necessary to condemn for the use of the United States, and as a part of it this cession was made after a survey and an investigation had been made by the United States authorities. The cession was made without conditions or qualifications, except that the United States should accept it and maintain it, and go along with it.

The Government is not bound to maintain it for a single day. There is no provision there which binds the United States to spend a single dollar of money upon it. They may abandon it and let it go if they choose. If there is any such provision I would like to see it, but if there is any found I hope the Senator from Vermont, who is no doubt perfectly able to amend any measure which may be presented, will draw an amendment that will cover that point; so that the United States receives this property absolutely without any stipulation to do anything with it. I am perfectly willing it shall be done. There is no special expectation on the part of the people of Ohio; there is no interest there to be subserved, no private interest, nothing but the desire that the people in that beautiful valley may have the opportunity of transporting their goods and merchandise over the bosom of the waters of the Muskingum River just as they are transported from Marietta all the way to the Gulf of Mexico and the sea.

I do not want to see the rivers improved south of us and west of us and east of us, as this bill provides, and then to have this provision taken from the bill. There is the great Kanawha River about the size of the Muskingum. There is an appropriation here of $250,000 to improve that river. We do not object to that. We vote for it. We vote for the improvement of all the rivers of the South. There is the Wabash River just west of us which is provided for here. There is the Illinois River which is provided for, and all the rivers which are navigable are provided for in the bill. We vote those appropriations; and now when we ask the Government of the United States to assume the care and custody of some locks and dams on the only navigable stream we have in the State of Ohio with a population of three or four million, it seems to me it is a very modest request.

There is one other matter to which the Senator from Vermont referred to which he would not have made an objection if he had noticed it. He complains that certain water rights are reserved. So they are. Wherever a dam has been constructed across the Muskingum River, at the end of that dam is a lock to allow vessels to pass through. There is a great superabundance of water power there, which can be utilized, and it has been let out at very low rates to citizens. It is now let out to any citizen who has built a mill alongside of the works, and he can use this water power, and it is let out at a nominal rate. The State of Ohio does reserve the rights of the people to that water privilege, to the use of that water which they hold. They pay some $5,000—I think that is the amount—in the way of low rents on water rights.

Mr. KENNA. That does not affect navigation.

Mr. SHERMAN. It does not affect the navigation in the slightest degree. It is only surplus water that passes over the dam that is used and allowed to be used by private individuals upon paying a certain license or tax, which yields about $5,000. We propose to turn over to the United States this revenue of $5,000, which pays about one-half the expense of gate-tenders and the like. That is turned over to the United States, together with the appropriation for this year for the expenses of maintenance.

Mr. PLATT. Is that reserved to the State or to the individual now?

Mr. SHERMAN. It is reserved to the individual. The money is transferred to the United States, but the right to the water is reserved.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I have examined the act of the Ohio Legislature, to which the Senator from Vermont called my attention, with as much care as I could give to it here in the Senate, and I am unable to find in the act the provision which the Senator from Vermont has found.

I believe that if we accept this grant and make this appropriation we stand with reference to this river and these improvements exactly as we stand with reference to the improvement of any other river in the United States; and, understanding it that way, I shall vote for the appropriation, although in Committee of the Whole, not understanding it as I do now, I voted the other way.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Vermont, on which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

Mr. SHERMAN. I ask the Chair to state the question fully. The question is upon agreeing to the motion to strike out.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Vermont to strike out on page 41, commencing with line 994 and ending with line 1023, the paragraph having been retained in the bill by the Committee of the Whole. The "yea" vote is to strike out the Muskingum appropriation, and the "nay" vote is to keep it in. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CHACE (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Georgia [Mr. COLQUITT]. My colleague [Mr. ALDRICH] is paired with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. CAMDEN].

Mr. SAULSBURY (when his name was called). I vote "yea;" I am paired, but I am pretty well satisfied that the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL], with whom I am paired, would also vote "yea" if he were here.

Mr. TELLER (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BROWN], but I understand he voted "nay" on this proposition in Committee of the Whole, and therefore I vote "nay," as he would vote if he were present.

Mr. HAMPTON (after voting in the affirmative). I will interpose to say that I have been requested on this particular vote to pair with the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BROWN]. I shall therefore withdraw my vote. I voted "yea."

The roll-call having been concluded, the result was announced—yeas 14, nays 32; as follows:

So the motion to strike out was not agreed to.

Mr. MCMILLAN. By the direction of the Committee on Commerce I move to strike out all after the enacting clause of the bill and to insert an amendment in the nature of a substitute, which I send to the Secretary's desk.

Mr. CALL. Before that amendment is placed before the Senate I should like to ask if it is in order to renew the amendments I moved in Committee of the Whole to amend the text of the bill?

Mr. TELLER. I ask the Senator from Florida if he will yield to me that I may make a motion to reconsider. I have heard from the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BROWN], and he understood that I was paired with him on the motion of the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. GIBSON]. I voted on the question.

I would ask leave to withdraw my vote, which I might do under the rule, but to do so would change the result and carry the proposition, I think. Therefore I do not desire to do that, but I desire to move to reconsider, so that the Senate may pass on the question again.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. What amendment was that?

Mr. TELLER. That was the amendment on page 59 to insert words after the word "channel," the amendment offered by the Senator from Indiana [Mr. HARRISON].

Mr. HARRISON. I think that under the circumstances the reconsideration ought to be allowed. If the Senator from Colorado voted under a misapprehension, I suggest that a reconsideration be had as a matter of course, and that the vote be taken again upon the proposition.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. This is proceeding by unanimous consent. There is a pending question, the amendment of the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. MCMILLAN].

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. I object.

Mr. TELLER. I understand that mine is a privileged motion.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. I do not think it can be done except by unanimous consent. I understand that it was a mistake, but a man must be responsible for his own mistake. If the Senator voted on the prevailing side he can make a motion to reconsider.

Mr. TELLER. I have made the motion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Colorado desires action on the motion to reconsider the vote of the Senate by which a certain amendment was lost.

Mr. TELLER. By a tie vote.

Mr. INGALLS. It was lost if there was a tie.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on reconsidering the vote.

Mr. TELLER. I understand that the Senator from Indiana consents that the reconsideration may be had as a matter of course.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair does not see how it can be done in any other way. The Senator from Colorado voted "nay" on disagreeing to the amendment?

Mr. TELLER. I did.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. And therefore he voted on the prevailing side?

Mr. TELLER. Certainly.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. And therefore he has a right to move to reconsider, to do which the Chair will recognize him.

Mr. GIBSON. If the Chair will allow me, I will state that I submitted the motion to strike out the amendment offered by the honorable Senator from Indiana. That motion was defeated, the Senator from Colorado voting in the negative. Therefore he would have the right to submit now a motion to reconsider the vote by which it was defeated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair has so ruled. Is it the pleasure of the Senate to reconsider? Senators in favor will say "ay;" contrary, "no." [Putting the question.] The ayes have it, and the vote is reconsidered.

Mr. HARRISON. I do not want to bring on a debate upon this question. I want Senators simply to understand that we are voting again upon the proposition whether there shall be any limitation in the bill upon the construction of levees below those parts of the Mississippi River where there is any bad navigation, or whether we shall authorize the Commission out of the appropriation of two million and a quarter of dollars to begin the construction of levees along a river front that has 18 feet of water at all seasons of the year.

Mr. GIBSON. I ask for the yeas and nays on my motion to strike out the amendment. I wish to say that there is no proposition, as I understand, in the bill as it comes from the Committee on Commerce, to authorize the commission to build one yard of levee anywhere on the Mississippi River for the protection of the alluvial land or for the benefit of private property.

Mr. KENNA. I desire to ask the Chair whether, if the motion to strike out is withdrawn, the question would not arise on the motion to concur in the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The present occupant of the chair was not in at the time this question was up, and does not know what the amendment was. The Secretary will report the amendment which was voted on.

The CHIEF CLERK. After the word "channel," in line 1438, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, inserted the following words——

Mr. KENNA. The amendment being an amendment of the Committee of the Whole to insert, the Committee of the Whole having made the insertion, does not the question arise on the action of the Senate concurring in the amendment? If that be as I understand it is, I will ask the Senator from Louisiana to withdraw his motion to strike out, so that the affirmative will be on concurring in the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chief Clerk did not state it correctly. He will state the amendment once more.

The CHIEF CLERK. In line 1438, after the word "channel," it is moved to strike out the following words:

But not below the reaches of the river which are being improved by them, unless it shall be necessary to prevent or close an injurious crevasse or outlet.

Mr. KENNA. That is the motion of the Senator from Louisiana, but if that motion were withdrawn would not the question be upon concurring in the action of the Committee of the Whole inserting those words? The vote of the Senate is on concurring in the action of the Committee of the Whole on all questions.

Mr. HOAR. It seems to me that the Senator from Colorado can not make and have put the motion which he has made to reconsider without first reconsidering the subsequent vote. This vote was upon a motion to amend an amendment, and thereupon the motion was lost. Then we adopted the clause, the proposed amendment which came from the Committee of the Whole. Having adopted that as it was left after the vote which the Senator wants to reconsider, we can not reconsider the last motion, and leave this adopted; the Senate will never have voted upon the paragraph as it will stand. I suppose the Senate will reconsider both motions, first on the adoption of the amendment, and next the vote on the amendment to that amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair thinks the Senator from Massachusetts is entirely right about that.

Mr. HARRISON. I do not claim to be a parliamentarian, but it seemed to me that the orderly motion was precisely the motion which the Senator from Vermont has made in several other cases, to strike out. If that is all right, as the Senator from Massachusetts says, then the motion to strike out that was lost by a tie having been reconsidered is now pending; and what is the necessity of reconsidering anything else?

Mr. HOAR. Let me illustrate. Supppose we take a bill pending. Thereupon an amendment was moved to that bill and that amendment was lost or was carried, and then the bill passed. It would not, of course, be possible to move to reconsider the vote on the amendment without first reconsidering the vote passing the bill, because after you have reconsidered the vote on the amendment you have still a standing vote of the Senate passing the bill in the shape it was, with the amendment lost or carried, as the case may be; so that you must reconsider both votes.

Mr. HARRISON. Let me ask the Senator whether when we have reconsidered the motion to strike out, which was lost, we do not stand precisely as we did when that motion was made and pending and before it was voted upon?

Mr. HOAR. But suppose we adopt now after a reconsideration an amendment to this amendment and do nothing more.

Mr. GIBSON. The Senator from Colorado proposes to take that vote over again.

Mr. HARRISON. I suppose if it was in order to move to strike out the amendment when the motion was made, having reconsidered the vote by which the motion was lost, the motion is again in order. The amendment made as in Committee of the Whole was adopted yesterday by the Senate, and this morning the motion to strike out was made. It seems to me when that motion is reconsidered we are precisely in the attitude we were when it was made before, and that we do not need to go back in our reconsideration beyond the point at which the bill and amendment stood at the time the motion to strike out was made.

Mr. GIBSON. I concur with the Senator from Indiana. I do not want to take any advantage one way or the other, but to remove a misconception. I understand that the amendment was adopted by the Senate as in Committee of the Whole, and it was then concurred in by the Senate. I then made a motion to strike out that part of the amendment which had been offered by the Senator from Indiana. That motion was defeated by a tie vote. One of the Senators who voted in the negative moves to reconsider. Therefore it appears to me that the only matter before the Senate is the reconsideration of the motion which I made to strike out the amendment offered by the Senator from Indiana, and I ask for the yeas and nays on my motion.

Mr. KENNA. The point I make is simply this, that on all the amendments which are to be voted on by the Senate, the affirmative and negative stand in the Senate precisely as they stood in Committee of the Whole, so that in the absence of a motion to strike out the question would be on concurring in the amendment.

Mr. MCMILLAN. I raise the point of order that to strike out is not in order. The Committee of the Whole adopted the amendment of the Senator from Indiana as an amendment to the committee's amendment, and then adopted the amendment as amended, and the Senate concurred in the amendment as amended.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. Before any motion is put I wish to ask the Senator from Minnesota whether he did not just a moment ago say that the Committee on Commerce proposed to strike out all after the enacting clause of the bill.

Mr. MCMILLAN. I am not referring to that now. That motion is pending. This is another matter.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. I know the motion is pending. I am not at all discouraged by noticing that the friends of the bill are scolding a little at each other; I am rather encouraged by it; but is not the Senator's proposed substitute on the table now reported from the committee striking out all after the enacting clause; and if so are we not to pay the same deference——

Mr. GIBSON. I believe the motion I made is now pending, and I ask for the yeas and nays on it.

Mr. MCMILLAN. I make the point of order that that motion is not in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. What was the motion of the Senator from Louisiana?

Mr. GIBSON. To strike out the amendment offered by the Senator from Indiana.

Mr. MCMILLAN. I raise the point of order that that is not in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is of the opinion that the first step to be taken by the Senator from Colorado is a motion to reconsider the vote by which the Senate agreed to the amendment covering the five pages, and that vote having been reconsidered, then his motion would be to reconsider the motion agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Indiana.

Mr. TELLER. I make that motion or any other motion which may be necessary.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Colorado moves that the vote by which the Senate concurred in the amendment on pages 56, 57, 58, and 59 be reconsidered.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. I ask the Chair whether I am entitled to my five minutes? I had the floor and was speaking to the proposition that was pending before the Senate. I ask the Chair whether I am entitled to five minutes to oppose the bill when Senators here have had two hours to advocate it?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If the Senator was on the floor the Chair was not aware of it.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. That is the Chair's fault. The Senator from Louisiana was aware of it.

I was saying that the Senator who heads this committee stated here explicitly that he proposed from the committee and by the direction of the committee to strike out all after the enacting clause, and we know what is an enacting clause, and to insert something else. If we are proceeding that way, let us know what the committee propose to do and proceed to do it, and not go on in this piecemeal arrangement, which continues in the line and direction of a bargain and a bargain only, whether it is to make an appropriation for this, that, or the other improvement, whether it is to make an appropriation to buy up somebody's private stocks, whether it is leaving out the dollars and cents that ought to be at the end of the paragraph where the appropriation is suggested to be made, to bull or bear stocks in the market. That is this bill, if you look at it, from one end to the other, except half a dozen items. I have invited a discussion of the bill in that view of it. I can not get it. Nobody will dare to defend it. Each Senator seems only to be trying to get something for his own constituency, and getting that, he is satisfied.

I said the motion to reconsider was not in order, but the Chair ruled that it was. The Chair undertook to state that I was not entitled to my five minutes of debate. I will take a hundred and five, five hundred and five, whenever I can get the opportunity to do so, when I believe I am acting in accord with the rules of this body.

I ask the Senator from Minnesota whether he does not propose to change the bill, and when the committee instructed him to bring here a proposition to strike out all after the enacting clause? When was it done? Why detain us here discussing it for four days until it is exposed in such a way that you want to get away from it, and then come in and say that you are to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert something else? When did the committee instruct you to do that? When did your committee direct you to bring in this report, and what are the changes? Tell us that, and you will enable us to act intelligibly and intelligently on this measure which proposes to give away millions of money.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on reconsidering the vote by which the amendment was concurred in.

The motion to reconsider was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER] further moves to reconsider the vote by which the amendment offered by the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. GIBSON] was rejected.

The motion to reconsider was agreed to.

Mr. MCMILLAN. Now I raise the point of order that the motion to strike out is not in order.

Mr. LOGAN. The whole thing is reconsidered and it is certainly in order now.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question now before the Senate will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In line 1438, after the word "channel," strike out the words:

> But not below the reaches of the river which are being improved by them, unless it shall be necessary to prevent or close an injurious crevasse or outlet.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. On this question the Chair understands the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. GIBSON] to ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. HARRISON. There have been several times some confusion as to the effect of these votes. I desire it to be distinctly understood that this is a motion to strike out my amendment, and that a vote in the affirmative is a vote against limiting the Mississippi River Commission in the project of building levees on the lower river, where they are not attempting any improvement in the channel of the river itself. A vote to strike out is a vote against limiting the commission. My proposition is to limit them below the points where they are improving the river and where there is low water to the closure of existing or threatened gaps or crevasses.

Mr. GIBSON. I wish to have the Senate understand this proposition. The bill as it came from the committee and as it was adopted by the Committee on Commerce expressly provided:

> That no portion of this appropriation shall be expended to repair or build levees for the purpose of reclaiming lands or preventing injury to lands or private property by overflows.

I think that is a sufficient restraint upon the discretion of the Mississippi River Commission, which, under the authority of an act of Congress, is charged with the simple and exclusive work of the improvement of the river. They have nothing to do with the protection or improvement of private property, or the reclamation or protection of the alluvial lands. They are under a mandate from Congress to improve the river, and this provision adopted by the Committee on Commerce and retained in the bill confines the commission to that work. They have been acting, ever since they were constituted, under such a provision; and I do not see why we should vote a want of confidence in the character and capacity of the Mississippi River Commission.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion to strike out, on which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CHACE (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Georgia [Mr. COLQUITT]. My colleague [Mr. ALDRICH] is paired with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. CAMDEN].

Mr. KENNA (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SABIN].

Mr. TELLER (when his name was called). As I have stated, I am paired with the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BROWN]. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I am paired with the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. MANDERSON].

The result was announced—yeas 27, nays 20; as follows:

YEAS—27.

So the motion to strike out was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question now is on concurring in the amendment of the Committee of the Whole, extending from line 1327 to line 1460 inclusive, being the Mississippi River amendment.

The amendment was concurred in.

Mr. MCMILLAN. Now I offer——

Mr. CALL. I believe I had the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Minnesota had offered his amendment and it had been stated when the Senator from Florida rose and was recognized by the Chair.

Mr. CALL. Before that amendment is offered I ask the Senator from Minnesota to allow me to move several amendments which simply distribute the amount of various appropriations in Florida.

Mr. MCMILLAN. I can not consent to withdraw the amendment for that purpose. This is an amendment recommended by the committee, which I was instructed to offer.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment reported by the Senator from Minnesota will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to strike out all after the enacting clause and to insert——

Mr. CALL. I submit to the Senator from Minnesota that nothing will be gained by pressing that amendment now, whereas there will be delay caused, because it would simply require me to offer these amendments afterward.

Mr. HOAR. Are not the rights of the Senator from Florida exactly the same whether the amendment of the Senator from Minnesota be pending or not? The Senator from Minnesota moves an amendment to the whole bill, a substitute. The Senator from Florida wishes to move to perfect the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is entirely in order for the Senator from Florida to make any motion he pleases pending the substitute which has been offered.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It is also his right as everybody's else to move to perfect the text of the original bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Undoubtedly.

Mr. EDMUNDS. In that connection, I wish to state that a matter on page 10, about Apalachicola Bay or some river there, was passed over.

Mr. CALL. I am obliged to the Senator from Vermont. That is one of the matters to which I refer.

Mr. MCMILLAN. I did not move the amendment with a view to prevent the Senator from any action he desired, of course, but merely present the amendment in obedience to the instruction of the committee.

Mr. CALL. I moved yesterday to amend the bill in line 233, which reads:

Improving harbor at Apalachicola Bay, Florida: Continuing improvement, $12,000.

By inserting after the word "dollars," in line 234, the words:

Of which $2,000 may be expended in the discretion of the Secretary of War at the Carabello or Crooked River.

The Senator from Vermont desired me to refer to the report of the engineers which was made in the Forty-seventh Congress, second session, and is found in Executive Document, part 2——

Mr. EDMUNDS. If I may interrupt the Senator, to save time he need not refer to it on my account. I shall make no further opposition. When I have failed in opposing things that are of great importance, and a majority of the Senate is against me on great things, I do not want to take up time on these little matters. The friends of the bill may fix it just as they please, without my consent, but without any time taken up by my opposition.

Mr. CALL. I wish to say that it is shown by the report of the engineers that at Dog Island Harbor, which is a part of Apalachicola Bay, there is a mean depth of water of 15½ feet. Carabello River is one of the principal avenues through which the shipments of lumber are floated down to the large vessels which find their anchorage in the bay, and which are consigned to merchants in the port of Apalachicola.

I have been requested by some of the business men of that community to lay this matter before Congress and ask that a discretion may be allowed the Secretary of War to use $2,000 of this money in that part of Apalachicola Bay. That is the whole statement. It does not increase the appropriation at all.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment of the Senator from Florida will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In line 234, after the word "dollars," it is proposed to insert:

Of which $2,000 may be expended in the discretion of the Secretary of War at the Carabello or Crooked River.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chief Clerk informs the Chair that the item is already in the bill, having been agreed to by the Committee of the Whole. The question before the Senate is on concurring in it.

The amendment was concurred in.

Mr. CALL. In line 229, after the word "dollars," I move to insert the words:

Two thousand dollars of which may, in the discretion of the Secretary of War, be applied on Gilbert Bar, Indian River, Florida.

Mr. MCMILLAN. To what line does the Senator refer?

Mr. CALL. Line 229, after the word "dollars," I propose to insert a provision that $2,000 of the appropriation may be applied in the discretion of the Secretary of War to the cleaning out of Gilbert Bar, on Indian River, Florida."

Mr. PLATT. Is that the same improvement?

Mr. CALL. No; it is not. I will state that Indian River is a long inland communication or channel from the sea, a navigable river which extends southwardly along the coast of Florida, it being near the headwaters of the Saint John's River. The railroads from Cumberland Sound, Jacksonville, and elsewhere in Florida, but I mention Cumberland Sound particularly, connect with Indian River, which traverses the whole Atlantic coast of Florida southerly down to a point not very remote from the island upon which Key West is located.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The amendment, I think, is not in order.

Mr. CALL. It is a channel of very great importance to the people of Florida. The harbor from which produce is shipped is Fernandina, on Amelia Island, Cumberland Sound. The report of the engineers, made in 1883, states the importance of this improvement and the value of the products which are now being shipped from Indian River.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Is there any estimate in the last report?

Mr. CALL. None in the last report, but I have here the former report, which is very full.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The amendment would not be in order if the estimate is found in a report made three years ago.

Mr. CALL. I appeal to the Senator from Vermont that he will not interpose any point of order.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I am not going to interpose anything. I merely call attention to the fact.

Mr. CALL. This report is very full, and shows that there are two hundred and eighty orange groves shipping several hundred thousand dollars' worth of oranges, besides cocoanuts, pineapples, and all the tropical productions of that region. Amelia Island, Cumberland Sound, is their outlet, and here is the estimate for the improvement of that navigation.

I only ask that the Secretary of War may be allowed to use of this $150,000, in his discretion, $2,000 for the improvement of this communication with Amelia Island and Cumberland Sound.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Vermont raise the point of order?

Mr. EDMUNDS. No, sir; I do not raise anything.

Mr. MCMILLAN. The Senator from Florida might just as well ask to have $50,000 of the appropriation for Cumberland Sound appropriated to the improvement of New York Harbor as to make this change. It is a diversion entirely of the amount to a different purpose, and one which has not been estimated for. I raise the point of order that the amendment is not in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair rules it out. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. CALL. I think that is rather hard, because it does not concern anybody but those people there, and there is no reason whatever in the objection. It is evidently a matter of great importance to the commerce of Cumberland Sound for which this improvement is being made. It is a matter which concerns Florida. It does not increase the appropriation and leaves it to the discretion of the Secretary of War. There is no kind of reason for the objection made by the chairman of the committee. It does not do him or anybody else any good, but only does others harm.

I move, in line 767, after the word "dollars," to insert the words:

Including San Carlos Bay—

So as to read:

Improving Caloosahatchee River, Florida: Continuing improvement, $4,000, including San Carlos Bay.

Mr. McMILLAN. I raise the point of order upon that amendment that it is a new item of appropriation.

Mr. CALL. Whether it be a new item or not depends entirely on whether San Carlos Bay is a part of the Caloosahatchee River. The Senator from Minnesota knows nothing about that. The Caloosahatchee River debouches into the Gulf of Mexico by several mouths. San Carlos Bay is named as one of these entrances, which have various local designations, but are all connected with the Caloosahatchee River, which extends up into Lake Okechobee, and from which a channel improvement has been projected and is now partially completed. Steamboats are running up nearly to the headwaters of the Saint John's River, almost entirely across the peninsula of Florida.

It is desired that those appropriations which apply to the Caloosahatchee River may be definitely known, and that the money may be applied in the discretion of the Secretary of War to San Carlos Bay, which is a part of the river.

I think there is nothing in the point of order. The clause would have been so designated in the House but for the oversight of the committee there. So I am informed by those who had charge of the bill there, and I am simply asking to correct a mere oversight.

Mr. McMILLAN. The Caloosahatchee River is not the bay the Senator refers to; they are separate.

Mr. CALL. I think the chairman might very well agree to it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will be obliged to rule the amendment out of order.

Mr. CALL. Does the Chair think it is out of order?

Mr. EDMUNDS. Yes; it is a technical point and well taken.

Mr. CALL. I should like the Chair to state the ground on which it is out of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There are three or four grounds on which it is out of order.

Mr. CALL. Give us one of them.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It has not been estimated for; it has not been referred to the Committee on Commerce; it is not strictly germane to the item under consideration which it is proposed to amend.

Mr. CALL. It has been estimated for, if it is a part of the Caloosahatchee River; it has been referred to the Committee on Commerce; as to the other point made by the Chair, it is evidently germane if it is a part of the Caloosahatchee River. All of these points depend upon whether this is or is not a part of the river, and my amendment is simply intended to make clear that which is doubtful. But I will pass it by.

In line 780, I move to insert the words:

Of which $2,000 may be applied to the improvement of Pease River—

So as to read:

Improving Manatee River, Florida: Continuing improvement, $10,000; of which $2,000 shall be applied to the improvement of Pease River.

I will state with regard to this item that it is an improvement which has been estimated for in the current reports, and it is estimated that more than this sum, about $6,000, is needed to complete the improvement of that river, or that it may be used advantageously this year.

Manatee River is upon one side of Manatee County, and Pease River is upon the other. The railroads have been extended there, and it is very desirable that the people there should have the water communication as a means of competition.

This $2,000, with the $3,000 appropriated by the bill for Pease River in line 782, will render that river navigable at the present time and open up the trade and business of that country.

While it is local to Manatee County, having the river and the bay upon one side and the Pease River discharging into the Charlotte Harbor and the San Carlos Bay on the other side, it is desirable for the interests of all the people there and the commerce which they contribute to the country that this improvement should be made.

I will state that all these rivers upon the Gulf coast of Florida are the centers of the Gulf trade. They furnish coral, sponge, fish, and tropical fruits. Large cocoanut groves are being grown all over that country. The trade is entirely cosmopolitan so far as this country is concerned, and it is very desirable that this avenue of communication should be made, for which only $2,000 of the money already appropriated is asked and the provision made that it shall be expended in the discretion of the Secretary of War.

Mr. McMILLAN. I raise the point of order on the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will be compelled to sustain the point of order. At any rate he rules that it is not in order.

Mr. CALL. Upon what ground?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The rule reads:

Nor shall any amendment to any item or clause of such bill be received which does not directly relate thereto.

The Chair can not possibly see how an appropriation for the Pease River relates to an item providing for the improvement of Manatee River.

Mr. CALL. Here is in lines 781 and 782:

Improving Pease River, Florida: Continuing improvement, $3,000.

And just above it:

Improving Manatee River, Florida: Continuing improvement, $10,000.

Here are both improvements in the bill in juxtaposition, and both are estimated for.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands that; but the Senator did not hear what the Chair read: "Nor shall any amendment to any item * * * be received which does not directly relate" to that item.

Mr. CALL. Does the Chair mean to say that there is a rule that an appropriation bill shall not be amended except the appropriation relates to that item, so that you can never amend it at all except by adding to that item? Certainly that will not do; there is no reason in that.

Mr. LOGAN. I think if the Senator would move to strike out the appropriation of a certain amount of money and then afterward move to increase the appropriation in the other item he would evidently be within the rule.

Mr. CALL. The Senator is evidently correct, and that only illustrates the error of the ruling of the Chair. I certainly could move that the two appropriations for the Manatee River and Pease River be consolidated.

Mr. BUTLER. The Chair has decided the case against you.

Mr. CALL. I thought it was so plain that perhaps the Chair would reverse his ruling. I ask the Chair what motion he thinks would be in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is not obliged to instruct the Senator.

Mr. CALL. But the Senator feels obliged to instruct the Chair, and he is simply trying to do so.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair needs no construction of this rule.

Mr. CALL. Rather than delay the Senate, although the ruling is unjust and unreasonable, I shall not press the matter further.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will say to the Senator from Florida that he sees no objection to an amendment increasing the appriation made for Pease River.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That comes under another rule. I shall make a point on that, that you can not move to increase an appropriation without an estimate, a reference to a committe, &c.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is an estimate for Pease River.

Mr. CALL. My object is to leave the discretion with the Secretary of War for the addition of the amount to Pease River and the diminution of the amount for Manatee River as he may deem it expedient, and I would desire to put the motion in such a form that they might not be subject to the idea of the Chair as to a point of order.

I will move then to strike out from line 779 to line 782, and to insert:

Improving Manatee River, Florida: Continuing improvement, $10,000; improving Pease River, Florida: Continuing improvement, $3,000; of which $5,000 may be expended on Pease River.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is precisely the same question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment of the Senator from Florida will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to strike out from line 779 to line 782, inclusive, in the following words:

Improving Manatee River, Florida: Continuing improvement, $10,000.
Improving Pease River, Florida: Continuing improvement, $3,000.

And to insert in lieu thereof:

Improving Manatee River, Florida: Continuing improvement, $10,000; improving Pease River, Florida: Continuing improvement, $3,000; of which $5,000 may be expended on Pease River.

Mr. McMILLAN. Is that in order?

Mr. EDMUNDS. It is precisely the same question that the other was.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Florida.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LOGAN. I wish to move an amendment in line 1131, which I offered before and gave notice that I would offer again in the Senate. I believe the chairman of the committee will accept the amendment, knowing that it is so perfectly just. It is to increase the appropriation for the Illinois River from $100,000 to $150,000, which will not be one-half of the estimate made for the work of completing the two locks upon that river. If the appropriation is left as it is in the bill the work will evidently have to stop. I think under the circumstances that the chairman will probably accept the amendment.

Mr. McMILLAN. But there is an amendment pending.

Mr. LOGAN. I understand that, but this proposition was made before, and it was agreed that it should be offered in the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Illinois offers an amendment, which will be read.

Mr. LOGAN. I will read it. In line 1131, after the words "one hundred," I move to insert "and fifty;" so as to read:

Improving Illinois River, Illinois: Continuing improvement, $150,000.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Illinois.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PLUMB. Would it be in order now to move to increase by 33⅓ per cent. all the items of the bill? I suggest that, in view of what is the apparent determination of the committee to have it go back for the purpose of making a reduction of 35 per cent. In the first place, would it not be as well to increase them all 33 or 35 per cent.?

Mr. MCMILLAN. Twenty-five per cent. is the reduction proposed.

Mr. PLUMB. Then suppose we first increase them all 25 per cent. That would be a financial stroke that I think might commend itself to the Senate. If it is in order now to offer the amendment, I offer that which I sent to the desk as a separate section.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment of the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB] will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

That the Secretary of War shall report to Congress at its next session and each succeeding session thereof the name of each civil engineer employed in the work of improving rivers and harbors by means and as the result of appropriations made in this and succeeding river and harbor appropriation bills, the time so employed, the compensation paid, and the place at and work on which employed.

Mr. PLUMB. As suggested by the Senator from Vermont, I will add after the word "name" the words "and place of residence."

Mr. MCMILLAN. Is that an amendment to the bill?

Mr. PLUMB. An additional section to the bill. In view of the fact that it is generally understood that we have quite an army of civil engineers doing the work, while we pay a large number of Army engineers to do the loafing around, I think we had better have information as to who they are.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kansas offers this as a new section.

Mr. MCMILLAN. I desire to be informed what the question is pending before the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment just submitted by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB].

Mr. MCMILLAN. Is that an amendment to the amendment which I proposed, or is it an amendment to the original bill?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is an amendment to that portion of the bill which the Senator from Minnesota proposes to strike out.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. Then I ask for the reading of the amendment of the Senator from Minnesota. I have been waiting for some time to ask for the reading of that amendment for information.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. I believe now that the amendment proposed by the Senator from Minnesota is before the Senate. I therefore call, as I did before, for the reading of the amendment for information, that we may know what it is.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The Senator has a right to have it read.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. I asked that it be read before this amendment was offered, for there was no Senator here who could have determined for himself as to whether this amendment proposed by the Senator from Kansas was meant as an amendment to the original bill or as an amendment to that which was introduced here this morning by the Senator from Minnesota, who says he brings it in as the product of the Committee on Commerce. I have a right to ask for the reading of that so that I may make a motion to this Senate that will go beyond his, not only to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert, but I desire to make a motion to strike out all after the enacting clause and leave out the words "and insert." That is my desire and for that reason I have a right to ask, not only a right but a privilege to ask, to have the amendment read, so that I can make a motion before this Senate.

I think the time has come when we ought to begin to consider a little more carefully bills of this sort. I have asked the Senator from Minnesota to tell me, or to tell the Senate if he declines to tell me, when the Committee on Commerce agreed to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert something else.

> Upon what meat do these our Cæsars feed,
> That they have grown so great?

Bring in bills, allow us to discuss them for a week, defend them from the standpoint the committee occupies here, and then come in this morning and say that they propose to strike out all after the enacting clause, when we have read through seventy-nine pages of a bill that proceeded from that committee, and it was almost treason for anybody here on this floor to say that there was anything wrong in it! When did that committee act? Upon what new information have you stricken out all of this bill? Why do you propose to strike off 30 per cent. of its amount? That is what I heard this morning when I came in; but it is proposed, I hear now, to strike off 25 per cent. You propose to take 25 per cent. from the amount which the bill says we ought to appropriate. We could not dare to take out of this bill the little miserable streams that only float the minnows of your constituents, and upon which you can not float anything that will promote commerce. You would take 25 per cent. from Norfolk; you would take 25 per cent. from the James River improvement; you would take 25 per cent. from New York Harbor; you would take 25 per cent. from San Francisco Harbor; to popularize this bill you take 25 per cent. from that which is laudable and for which Senators ought to vote, and take 25 per cent. from that which we ought not to appropriate for at all—these little streams.

I ask, therefore, that this amendment of the committee shall be read. I ask further that it shall be read because when a committee makes a report here it comes in as the property of the Senate, and I deny that there is any man on this floor who can control an appropriation for millions and millions of dollars. It is the property of the Senate. It is my property; it is the property of every Senator. I repudiate and reprobate the idea that any man can be the manager of the Senate. He may assert himself as the chairman of a committee or a member of a committee, but he can not and shall not, so far as I am concerned, ever abridge the right of any Senator to expose the wrong in a bill and advocate that which he thinks is right.

This bill started out——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator's time has expired. The amendment will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert the following——

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. I move now to amend the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understood the Senator from Virginia to demand that the amendment be read.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. Yes, sir. Of course I prefer to have it read through.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will be read.

The Chief Clerk proceeded to read the amendment, and having read for some time, was interrupted by—

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. I have been requested several times to withdraw my request for the reading of this amendment. I am ready to do it, willing to do it, if the Senator who has presented it will just simply state what it is. Is it 25 per cent. alike from the meritorious and the improper appropriations? If I am correct in that, and the Senator will say so, I am ready to withdraw my call. If I am incorrect, and he will tell me what he means by taking off 25 per cent., so that we can all understand it, I shall be satisfied.

Mr. MCMILLAN. For the information of the Senator from Virginia, and for the information of the Senate, I desire to say that by the direction of the Committee on Commerce I have submitted this amendment to the bill. It embraces all the items and all the legislation which was incorporated in the bill by the Senate up to the time I submitted the motion, except that each item of appropriation has been reduced 25 per cent. from the amount as it appears in the bill and in the amendments adopted by the Senate.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. On that statement I withdraw my request for the reading.

Mr. BUTLER. Let us have a vote on the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment submitted by the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. MCMILLAN. Now I ask that the amendment be modified by the amendments of the Senator from Florida [Mr. CALL] and the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB] and the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LOGAN], adopted within the last half-hour and made to conform thereto, the amounts of the appropriations being reduced 25 per cent. in each case.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Minnesota moves to amend the amendment submitted by him by inserting the three items named.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. INGALLS. Will the Senator give the aggregate?

Mr. MCMILLAN. The bill as it came from the House amounted, in round numbers, to $15,182,200. The Senate Committee on Commerce reported the bill containing an amount of $18,077,475. The bill as the Senate amended it up to the time of submitting my motion amounted to $18,613,775. From that amount my amendment reduces the total 25 per cent., which leaves the bill, before the amendment of the Senator from Illinois was adopted, $13,960,331. With that reduction the amount of the bill as it shall pass, if my amendment is adopted, is $1,221,869 less than the bill as it came to the Senate from the House of Representatives.

Mr. COKE. Mr. President, as a member of the Committee on Commerce, I desire to say that I do not concur in this amendment. I did not attend the committee this morning, because I was engaged with another committee, but if I had been there I should have opposed this amendment. I do not believe it necessary to make this reduction. I can see no good reason for making it. The items in the Senate bill have passed the scrutiny of the Commerce Committee and of the Senate and have been deliberately approved. They have been decided to be proper and correct items of appropriation. To cut them all down now 25 per cent. by a sweeping provision without regard to merit, as is proposed, is not logical, and will be unjust and unreasonable.

I know of no reason why they should be changed. They certainly should not be changed because of lack of money in the Treasury, for the Treasury is overflowing with money that ought to be in circulation among the people. They certainly should not be changed because unsustained by estimates and recommendations, because each one of them has been recommended and estimated for by the engineer officers of the Government charged with that duty. Not only so, but not a single item is found upon the bill that is more than 50 per cent., except in rare instances, of the amount recommended by the engineers. Usually 25 per cent. or 30 per cent. of the amount recommended is the amount of the appropriation in the bill.

If these appropriations then are sustained by the judgment of the officers of the Government who have been called on to pass upon them, if there is money in the Treasury to pay them, if the necessity exists for them, as the committee and the Senate has solemnly adjudged to be the case, I ask why reduce them? This money is to be expended all over this country, throughout the country, from one extreme to the other. It is to be generally diffused among the whole people of the country, and for a purpose which has been determined by those to whose charge the question was committed to be meritorious. Then, I repeat the question, why reduce the appropriations?

Mr. President, there is one great problem in the economy of this country which up to this time has defied solution, and that is the great question of railroad transportation and how to control it, so as to bring down the rates of freight and locomotion to reasonable limits. That is the greatest problem with which the statesmanship of this country has to deal to-day. No man has offered a solution of it; but a greater number of eminent men in this country concur in the opinion that its solution must depend upon water competition with the railroads, than in any other.

If we are to have competition with the railroads we can not get it among the railroad corporations themselves, because they will consolidate, they will pool, they will combine. It is an admitted fact that where combination is possible competition is impossible. We can not expect competition among them. Every effort of legislation directed to the end of creating competition between the railroads has broken down and been a failure.

There is but one chance confessedly for competition with railroads in the carrying trade and commerce of this country, and that is through the water ways, the rivers, the lakes, and the canals of this country. If we can not get it in that way we are under the domination of a railroad oligarchy, of a railroad combination, that no man living can see any end to. Then the object of this bill is to increase the efficiency of these instrumentalities to which alone we must look for competition with the railroad system of this country; it is to increase the efficiency of our lines of navigation, our water courses, our lakes, and our canals.

The bill as perfected in the Senate amounts to between eighteen and nineteen millions of dollars. Is that a large sum of money considering the purpose for which it is appropriated? How much do the railroads expend annually in repairs? I venture the assertion not less than $500,000,000 a year. Here there are between eighteen and nineteen millions to be expended by the Senate bill in keeping open our water ways to compete with the railroads which expend five hundred millions annually in repairs.

This does not appear to be unreasonable. It does not seem to me that the amount is a large one. So far as I am concerned and so far, as I believe, the country is concerned, the only solicitude felt is about the proper and judicious expenditure of the money. I will vote cheerfully for a river and harbor bill of $30,000,000 annually if you will show me where the money can be expended judiciously and economically, because I believe the object is a great one and worthy of that and a still larger expenditure of money.

No, Mr. President, we should not reduce this bill. We should stand by it. The clamor against it comes from railroad centers, comes from a press under the domination of railroads, and comes in large measure from people in the interest of railroads with which the water ways to be improved under the bill come in competition. The great mass of the people of this country have no sympathy with this clamor. It is superficial; it does not come from the people. They desire an improvement of the water ways of this country; they desire a release from the domination of railroad combinations, and they can never get it except through means of water competition.

Mr. BLAIR. Will the Senator permit me to make an inquiry?

Mr. COKE. Yes, sir.

Mr. BLAIR. This is suggested to my mind by observing recently a State convention of the teachers of Texas, who have pronounced unanimously in favor of the school bill which the Senate passed recently. Will the Senator be willing to support the amendment suggested by the committee if the 25 per cent. reduction can be applied to the support of common schools, based on the illiteracy of the country, according to the terms and conditions of the Senate school bill?

Mr. COKE. I am opposed to the Blair educational bill.

Mr. BLAIR. It is not the "Blair educational bill." It is the Senate educational bill.

Mr. COKE. I am opposed to it in every manner, shape, and form, and by any name it may be called; and I am not willing to put 25 per cent. or any other per cent. from the national Treasury upon it.

Mr. BLAIR. I thought I should like to know the Senator's position.

Mr. COKE. Now, Mr. President, the clamor against this bill is a fictitious one, is a manufactured one. It does not come from the people of the United States; it comes from railroad combinations, it comes from the press operating in the interest of the railroads, it comes from the railroad centers, and it comes from States which for one hundred years have been receiving the benefactions of the Government until they have been perfected in their lines of communication, in their public buildings and public works, and need nothing more. The people of the South and West, who have not enjoyed these advantages, need the competition of the water ways and the aid of the Government to improve them. In the South and West we believe that the Government should improve its rivers and its harbors, its lakes and its canals, so as to keep pace with the demands of the country for transportation, and so as to secure reasonable and moderate rates of freight on the exchange of products in the country by rail.

Mr. President, a great deal has been said about trout streams, about creeks, rivulets, and bayous to be found provided for in this bill which, it is said, are unworthy of improvement, have no water in them, and contribute nothing to commerce. I reply to that that there is to be found in the official reports here before us the report of a competent engineer of this Government recommending every stream appropriated for, and this upon personal inspection, as fit and proper to be improved. The committee rejected promptly every amendment not sustained by the engineer's report. Mr. President, you may take every appropriation of doubtful propriety in this bill and add them all together and they will not aggregate one-fourth of 1 per cent. of the aggregate amount of the entire bill.

I venture the assertion that there is not a bill passed by Congress of its amount with less waste in it than is in this bill as it is now perfected and stands before the Senate. Take the most insignificant river named in the bill for which an appropriation is made, and yet you find, small though it be, that it makes its contribution to the grand aggregate of the commerce of this country. I care not how small it is, it contributes something of value to the commerce of the country. There is not an appropriation in this bill not certified by the engineers of the Government to be necessary to the present or prospective commerce of the stream on which it is to be expended, and the object of these appropriations is to develop these streams, open them out, and make them more accessible, and thereby develop the commerce of the country.

This appropriation is for two years. Who shall say that eighteen or nineteen or twenty million dollars, if you choose, is too much to appropriate for two years when the great railroad system, with which these water ways must compete, expends five hundred millions a year? No, Mr. President, it is not too much; it is not enough. I would vote for more because I desire to see the water ways of this country opened, I desire to see commerce developed, I desire to see competition established in the great carrying business of this country, and, above all, I desire to see the people's highways, on which no tolls are collected, improved for the free use of the people.

There are no jobs in this bill; there are no private interests in it. They are all public. It is for the public interest and the public good. The eighteen or twenty millions, if appropriated, will be expended throughout this whole great country. It will not go to one section or to one State or to a few States. It goes among the whole people and helps the industries of all. It is one of the few bills which pass Congress that gives the poor farmer, wherever he may be, who is always reached by the burdens of this Government, a chance to get a dollar back in the saving of freights upon his products.

Mr. President, I will not consume the time of the Senate in reading. I have here before me the able report of the Interstate Commerce Committee, of which the Senator from Illinois [Mr. CULLOM] is chairman. I will give a list of names of gentlemen who have declared before that committee that the improvement of our rivers and harbors is a prime necessity, and that we can look for no other competition with the railroads than that which comes from our rivers and lakes and canals; and that if we desire to have this competition we must improve them.

The first gentleman named in this report is Mr. Albert Fink, the head of the New York railroad pool, or as he is styled, the commissioner of the associated trunk lines. He was the first man to come upon the stand on this subject. Then Mr. Simon Sterne, of the New York Board of Trade and Transportation; Mr. F. B. Thurber, a director in the same board; Mr. Charles Randolph, for many years secretary of the Chicago Board of Trade; Mr. Charles Ridgely, president of the Springfield Iron Company. Here is a strong paper submitted by the Toledo Produce Exchange, which I have not the time to read; General George B. Wright, of Indianapolis; James J. Woodman, master of the National Grange; Isaac H. Sturgeon, of Saint Louis; Hon. Thomas Updegraff, of McGregor, Iowa; Henry C. Haarstick, president of the Saint Louis Merchants' Exchange; Jabez Burrows, a leading farmer in Nebraska; Oliver Dalrymple, the great Dakota wheat raiser, and last and greatest of all, Horatio Seymour, of New York, since deceased, whose letter to the committee I will read.

UTICA, May 4, 1885.

DEAR SIR: I have been confined to my house during the past winter, and I am still too weak to prepare a paper with regard to our water routes. I do not think they are properly valued. Their usefulness does not depend so much upon the amount of tonnage carried upon them as it does upon their influence upon the cost of transportation. As they are open to all, the moment undue charges are made upon other modes of transportation boats which are cheaply built are placed upon them. Pooling arrangements can not be made with boatmen, as they would only serve to multiply boats and boatmen. I value as highly as any one can our railroads. But they are forced into pooling arrangements, which are hurtful to the interests of commerce. We have strong proof of this in the history of the canals of New York. Up to a late date the State imposed heavy tolls upon them, and the railroads kept up high charges. The balance of trade was against our country.

We could not send our products as freely as we should to Europe. Our State then began to reduce the tolls, and in 1880 the canal was made free of charges. The result was that the balance of trade was in favor of our country in its dealings with Europe, and we enjoyed unusual prosperity. The tonnage of the canal has not been much increased by the policy of low tolls or no tolls, but the cost of carrying grain from Chicago to New York is cut down to about one-third of the former charges.

I send you a paper I prepared on this subject. I wish to call your attention to a table which it gives, taken from the official reports of the General Government. I can make no argument in favor of water routes so clear and strong as this official table.

It is strange that many regard with complacency plans for ship-canals which will enable vessels to sail around our country from New York to California only touching at a few points, while they denounce improvements across our country giving prosperity to all points on their lines in our own country, while the ship-canals across the Isthmus are for the benefit of other lands as well as our own.

Canals as regulators of transportation will soon be appreciated. Water routes are the only reliable protections against undue charges for carrying. The people will soon learn that fact.

I fear you will find it hard to read this letter. I am so weak I write with difficulty.

Respectfully yours,

HORATIO SEYMOUR.

Hon. S. M. CULLOM.

These gentlemen have all made statements to the effect that we must look and can only look to our rivers and lakes and canals for competition with the railroads. I will read the conclusion of this report:

THE EFFECT OF WATER COMPETITION UPON RAILROAD CHARGES.

The evidence before the committee accords with the experience of all nations in recognizing the water routes as the most effective cheapeners and regulators of railway charges. Their influence is not confined within the limits of the territory immediately accessible to water communication, but extends and controls railroad rates at such remote and interior points as have competing lines reaching means of transport by water. Competition between railroads sooner or later leads to combination or consolidation, but neither can prevail to secure unreasonable rates in the face of direct competition with free natural or artificial water routes.

The conclusion of the committee is, therefore, that natural or artificial channels of communication by water, when favorably located, adequately improved, and properly maintained, afford the cheapest method of long-distance transportation now known, and that they must continue to exercise in the future, as they have invariably exercised in the past, an absolutely controlling and beneficially regulating influence upon the charges made upon any and all other means of transit.

This is the conclusion of the report your select committee, so far as it relates to this subject, made to this session of Congress. They say that the water routes "have invariably exercised in the past an absolutely controlling and beneficially regulating influence upon the charges made upon any and all other means of transit."

Now, Mr. President, what is eighteen or twenty million dollars compared with the great purposes to be attained by the passage of this bill? It seems to me that to deny that amount is an unworthy quibble over a great subject. I will vote that amount, and I would vote, if I could see how the officers of the Government could judiciously expend it, double that amount if certified to be necessary, as every dollar in this bill is certified to be by the officers of the Government.

I will not further consume the time of the Senate, Mr. President, but I will venture to express the hope that the amendment offered by the honorable chairman of the Committee on Commerce will not be adopted.

Mr. DOLPH. Mr. President, being a member of the Committee on Commerce, I desire to embrace this opportunity to explain the vote that I intend to give on this amendment. I was not present at the first meeting of the committee when the amendment proposing to reduce the gross amount to be appropriated by this bill was considered. I was not present at the meeting this morning.

I intend to vote against the amendment. I concur heartily in all that has been said by the Senator from Texas [Mr. COKE] in regard to this bill. I believe that it is a good bill. I do not believe that the proposed reduction will be in the interest of the people of this country or in the interest of economy in the Government. I do not believe either that it will strengthen the bill in any other department of this Government. I do not believe it will strengthen the bill in either branch of Congress, nor do I believe it will benefit any political party or injure any political party. I do not think there is or should be any political question in this bill. I shall therefore vote against this amendment.

Mr. PLATT. Let us have the yeas and nays on the amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. MCMILLAN. Mr. President, I agree entirely with the views expressed by the Senator from Texas [Mr. COKE] in regard to the merits of the river and harbor bill as reported by the Senate committee, and it is only because the Committee on Commerce believed that in order to secure a bill of any sum at this time it is necessary that a reduction in the amount of the bill be made.

We have had no appropriations for rivers and harbors for two years. The public works are suffering for want of appropriations, and the improvements commenced are already in danger of being injured and going into decay. If we have no river and harbor bill passed at this session by Congress, material injury will result to the public interests. All the views expressed by the Senator from Texas are emphasized by me except that in my view and in that of the Committee on Commerce, with the exception perhaps of two or three members who did not express their views until they uttered them on this floor, it is necessary that a reduction in the amount of the appropriations be made. It would be a great disaster if we do not obtain an appropriation for these improvements at this session, and it is in order to continue them and to secure to the country the benefit of an appropriation for their conduct and improvement that we report this amendment.

The appropriations in this bill, as the Senator from Texas has well remarked, go to every portion of the country. So far as these improvements are concerned they are situated in all parts of the country and they are equally distributed in every portion of it. The fact that the amounts of the appropriation have been decreased, if this amendment is adopted, gives no indication or color to the opinion that the Committee on Commerce had any doubt about the merits of the several items embraced in the bill. That question had no such influence upon the Committee on Commerce; and the Senator from Texas has well said that the items which are at all debatable in this river and harbor bill would not amount to one-quarter of 1 per cent. of the whole bill, and that that amount would only be subject to the criticism of those who were hostile, perhaps, to the principle of appropriating the money of the Government to anything that was not strictly a national improvement.

The Senate Committee on Commerce when they received the bill deemed it necessary that a large number of additional items should be inserted in it in order to make a judicious appropriation; and the additional items embraced in the Senate amendments are those of general importance, and must necessarily be considered by all as of great national importance. Some of those measures have been debated in the Senate and I need not particularly refer to them; but I desire to say that in regard to one of those appropriations, and in regard to the appropriations generally for public improvements embraced in this river and harbor bill, I hold in my hand petitions which have been presented at this session and referred to the Committee on Commerce which are but a portion of those which have been sent to Congress in behalf of these public improvements. These are petitions from Missouri, from Indiana, from Kansas, from Ohio, from Oregon, from Illinois, from Massachusetts, from Wisconsin, from Colorado, from New York, from Pennsylvania, from Nebraska, from Maine, from Texas, from Virginia, from New Jersey, from Connecticut, from Tennessee, from Michigan, from Arkansas, from Rhode Island, from Missouri, from Minnesota, from Mississippi, from Iowa, from New Hampshire, from North Carolina, from California, and from Delaware. All these petitions contain prayers from the people for these general improvements, and all of them I may mention by the way include specific prayers for the construction of the Hennepin Canal.

The Committee on Commerce with four hundred of these petitions before them believed that the sentiment of the people is in favor of these appropriations and that the public interest demands——

Mr. PLUMB. Will the Senator be a little more specific and state what improvements were petitioned for to any considerable extent besides the Hennepin Canal?

Mr. MCMILLAN. Yes, sir; internal improvements generally, and the specific improvement of the Hennepin Canal, the Portage Lake Canal, and others.

Mr. PLUMB. What others can the Senator call to mind?

Mr. MCMILLAN. I can recall Sandy Bay. The petitions are generally in favor of the improvements. The Senator no doubt presented some himself. I think he did.

Mr. PLUMB. Quite a number naming the Hennepin Canal, printed in the State of Illinois, were sent out.

Mr. MCMILLAN. I know nothing about where they were printed. I only know that they come to the Committee on Commerce of the Senate, presented by Senators and referred to that committee by this body. In addition to these are memorials from States and from business organizations throughout the country in favor of these improvements and I again repeat, and it is only for the purpose of emphasizing this fact that I have taken the floor, that the reduction in the amount is for the purpose of securing a bill at this session.

Mr. EUSTIS. I should like to ask the Senator from Minnesota a question. He has vaguely referred to some danger, which he has not defined, as to the success of this bill unless this reduction be made. I should like to ask him where does that danger exist—in this body or elsewhere?

Mr. MCMILLAN. Well, Mr. President, I will say to the Senator that it does not exist in this body as I believe.

Mr. EUSTIS. Now I will ask the Senator whether he has any more specific information as to danger elsewhere, wherever that may be, than other members of the committee?

Mr. MCMILLAN. I have no more specific information.

Mr. EUSTIS. Then I understand that some members of that committee do not share the apprehensions which seem to exist in the chairman's mind.

Mr. McMILLAN. I am not aware of that fact. I do not say that they do not share such apprehensions.

Mr. EUSTIS. I assume that to be the case from the mere fact that the argument in terrorem which the Senator has urged has not affected several members of the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. McMILLAN. Some of the members of the Committee on Commerce have expressed themselves as being willing to pass this bill whatever may be its fate, as it came before the Senate.

Mr. KENNA. The suggestion of the Committee on Commerce is that this bill be reduced, as matured by the Senate, by the amount of 25 per cent.

Mr. McMILLAN. Will the Senator permit me to state in justice to the committee that the action of the committee was taken at a regular meeting of the committee, all the members being notified?

Mr. PLUMB. I should like to ask the Senator from West Virginia to wait a moment until I ask a question of the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. KENNA. I will do so.

Mr. PLUMB. Was it the deliberate judgment of the Committee on Commerce that all the appropriations provided in this bill should be made as matters of public policy and of public interest?

Mr. McMILLAN. I answer that question affirmatively without qualification. There were diversities of views in regard to particular matters in the Committee on Commerce; but the bill as reported to the Senate was assented to by all the members, with one exception perhaps.

Mr. FRYE. A majority of the committee reported every item in the bill, and every item in the bill was read, and every item in the bill was examined with the reports of the engineers touching that item—every single one.

Mr. PLUMB. I want to get at the feeling of the committee in regard to the propriety of the various expenditures proposed in the bill, and I thought the Senator from Minnesota, who is the champion of the bill here as chairman of the committee, would be able to say whether it was the sense of the committee, and is still the belief of the committee, that every single item of appropriation contained in the bill is a proper one to be made in view of the public interests involved.

Mr. McMILLAN. It would not be possible for me to say that every member of the committee assented to every item in the bill.

Mr. PLUMB. I did not speak of every member of the committee; I spoke of the committee.

Mr. McMILLAN. The committee assented to the bill; they reported the bill favorably. There have been items inserted in the bill by the vote of the Senate since it came into the Senate that the committee did not insert.

Mr. PLUMB. I speak of the bill as reported. I want to see if I can not get something to distinguish between mere passive acquiescence in the passage of the bill by the committee and an active affirmative sentiment in favor of the proposition. I want to know how much authority the committee's report in favor of this bill has.

Mr. McMILLAN. I feel great assurance in saying to the Senator from Kansas that the Committee on Commerce were strongly in favor of this bill. Perhaps I should say that there were some items in which the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] did not concur originally, and the Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE] is opposed to the bill as I understand; that is, I do not know that he is on principle but he is from some other causes which I will not undertake to explain. The Senator may explain his own position. I think the members of the Committee on Commerce will explain to the Senate their own views if there is any difference in the committee. The committee as a committee is positively in favor of the bill.

Mr. PLUMB. And believes that all the items in it are proper in amount and cover proper expenditures.

Mr. McMILLAN. Just as any other bill reported to the Senate.

Mr. PLUMB. Then I will ask the Senator, if that be the case, whether there is any feeling on the part of the committee against the bill on account of amendments that have been adopted in the Senate, if that in any way influenced the committee in proposing this reduction?

Mr. McMILLAN. I can not answer as to that. The Senator can ascertain from members of the committee, I think. He had better ask individual members of the committee how they feel about that.

Mr. PLUMB. I supposed the Senator was the organ of the committee. Will the Senator permit me to ask a question as to how it affected him, as to whether his position in this matter is affected by the fact that the Senate has inserted some amendments?

Mr. McMILLAN. Not at all. I am in favor of the bill as it was reported by the committee and as it has been amended by the Senate, and would, if I had my own choice, pass this bill as it stood before the pending amendment was submitted by me. I submit that not as the expression of my individual views, because I believe these improvements are necessary, I believe they are proper and should be carried forward, and that the appropriation made by the bill is too small rather than too large. Those are my individval views and I have no qualifications to make of them.

Mr. PLUMB. The Senator is very frank. Now, let me ask him this further question, whether he has had any late information about the condition of the Treasury which would seem to indicate that there will not be money there forthcoming on the draft of the Secretary of War to pay for these improvements in case they are ordered by Congress?

Mr. McMILLAN. The information I have in regard to the Treasury is altogether accessible to the Senator from Kansas. The information I have in regard to the public affairs relating to this bill comes to the committee from the Senate and from other sources which the Senator has the same facilities for communicating with that I have.

Mr. PLUMB. The question of facility in regard to getting information is a pretty wide field. I perhaps may have the facility but may not have the mental alertness to get hold of it when it is going around, and so I should like to be further advised on that point.

I find that the committee which we rely upon, which does not need any testimony of mine as to its reliability and capacity, believes that all the items contained in this bill are proper subjects of public expenditure; that the amounts appropriated are not as large as they ought to be, instead of being too large; that they ought to be larger; and that the condition of the public Treasury is such that it can easily respond to this and a much larger demand on it for the purpose of carrying on these works; and now we have presented here the spectacle—I hope the Senator from West Virginia will pardon me——

Mr. KENNA. I rose to ask the Senator from Kansas a question.

Mr. PLUMB. Let me get through with my question first.

Mr. KENNA. I hope the Senator will remember that I still have to ask him a question.

Mr. PLUMB. The Senator from West Virginia has the floor when I get through.

Mr. KENNA. The Senator from West Virginia is wholly unconscious of the fact.

Mr. PLUMB. We have here this spectacle of the committee coming in in the face of these facts, their own recommendation, their own practical certification of the fact that they offered this bill to the Senate with confidence that the Senate would agree to it upon their judgment as to its advisability from a public standpoint, and at the last minute, after we have gone through with it all and agreed to the items separately and agreed to them in gross, the Senator from Minnesota comes in with a confession, or what amounts to a confession, that the committee was mistaken, that somewhere there is some question of public policy which requires the committee now to take the back track, and it invites the Senate to follow it in taking the back track, and cut down indiscriminately these appropriations.

Now, in view of this very grave proposition, for it is a grave one, affecting, I will not say, the integrity of the committee, but its judgment, and affecting the Senate, which, with confidence, has followed that committee up to the very jaws, I do not say whether of death or success, but up to this moment of time, with an unquestionable fealty, I want before I turn around and eat up all that has been done and take the back track and swallow it all, to have the Senator make a somewhat more specific statement, stating the reasons requiring a motion of this kind.

Mr. McMILLAN. I think the Senator from Kansas will not have far to turn to take the back track. If the Senator is going to support this bill I think he can do it as well at this amount as he could if it were larger. I think in any event he is not going to support this bill nor any other, from his own statement and his own votes in the Senate.

Mr. PLUMB. My appetite has been considerably increased by this debate, and I think on the whole it is rather hankering for eighteen millions instead of twelve.

Mr. KENNA. I rose to ask the Senator from Kansas a question some time ago, and that is, whether he is for or against the bill as it now stands without the amendment of the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. PLUMB. I can give a better answer to that in a few moments when the presiding officer of the Senate directs the roll to be called.

Mr. KENNA. It only requires a word to give his answer now.

Mr. PLUMB. I can say this, that if I can be persuaded that this money can be usefully expended upon objects of a public character, I will not only support a bill for $18,000,000, but I will make it $50,000,000 with a perfect assurance on that point. I never have stood here and objected to these bills because they carried a large amount of money. That never has been my objection. I regard that point as of the most trifling character.

Mr. KENNA. In that connection I should like to ask the Senator from Kansas a further question. Assuming, as he intimates, that this bill carries some objects which in his judgment are not worthy, will it add to his objection that some of those unworthy objects are reduced?

Mr. PLUMB. I have not objected that it carried unworthy objects. I object to this bill, as to all such bills, because we spend our money in driblets in such a way that a large portion of it is wasted. If I believed that every single object proposed in this bill was worthy I would still object to it, because I say it is better to mass our appropriations and complete the improvements desired, in the earliest possible time, in order first that the country may have the benefit of them; and in the next place that the money may be usefully expended and not washed out by lapse of time and the general erosion that occurs on the banks of streams and in all our harbors.

Mr. KENNA. In that connection I will take the liberty of saying to the Senator from Kansas that a motion to amend the motion of the Senator from Minnesota by adding 25, 50, or 100 per cent. would be equally in order as the motion of the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. PLUMB. Not at all, because that would be doing exactly what the Senator proposes to do, an indiscriminate thing. Some of these improvements are to be completed with the appropriations in the bill. I have observed as I have run through the bill that $3,000 or $5,000 is to complete an improvement in some cases.

Mr. KENNA. There are not a dozen items in the bill that can be excepted.

Mr. PLUMB. Why make that kind of confession of legislative incompetency that there is an appropriation of even $50 more than is necessary in order to avoid the necessity of writing out an amendment which would put the proper amount on each item?

Mr. KENNA. The Senator could ascertain that in two minutes and a half by submitting a motion. But I rose, Mr. President, for the purpose of stating that this proposition to reduce the amount of the bill is one that addresses itself to my individual judgment simply for the reason that I believe the same practice ought to be adopted by the Government in the prosecution of its great works of internal improvement which prevails in the business affairs of men everywhere. I agree entirely with the suggestion of the Senator from Kansas that it would be better in one year or two or in as short a time as practicable to appropriate the amount of money necessary to carry on these works expeditiously and completely, and I have no doubt that the amount of cost of various public works has been increased by the fact that we drawl them out and made it take years to do what ought to be done in a much shorter time. While I support this motion, it is not on account of any misgiving I have about the amounts of money required or about the specific sum allowed by this bill for any particular work.

But I ought to say, and say particularly to the Senator from Kansas, that the Committee on Commerce of the Senate has gone through this bill laboriously. There is not an item or a line in it that has not been subjected to the closest scrutiny. The amounts have been allowed not to the extent in which the committee would have been glad to go, because we should have been glad to finish in a day what it may require years to finish; but the amounts have been allowed within the discretion of the committee and according to its judgment with reference to a general sentiment as to what gross amounts we ought to appropriate for the current year.

Here again we are confronted by the fact that we are appropriating really for two years. There was no bill passed by Congress last year for these great works. Much material waste has resulted, great delay has resulted, and considerable expense to the Government of the United States has resulted. This is practically a bill appropriating money for the prosecution of these works for a period covering two years. At the same time the committee has not been able to recommend the amount recommended by the engineers for the completion of all works. I do not recollect the exact amount, but it must be forty, forty-five, or fifty million dollars. Everybody concedes that we can not afford to do that.

Examining these items, analyzing them, devoting a careful attention to the merits of each and the public interests of each, we allowed in the original bill the amounts we thought, in consideration of the general aggregate, ought to go to these particular items. Now, we come to the consideration of the bill in the aggregate, which as amended by the Senate amounts to $18,700,000, with reference not to the necessities of each particular case, nor to any principle of horizontal reduction, because there is nothing horizontal about it. There is nothing horizontal about a bill every item of which has been put in there on its own indvidual merits, but in the consideration of what is conceded to be the general sentiment with reference to the gross amount which we can afford to appropriate for this year for the prosecution of these great works. We have thought it fair to all these items, to each and every one of the works in progress under the law provided by these annual bills, that such reduction should bring the gross amount within the limit that Congress is disposed to appropriate for the purpose. It is to that sentiment that I have yielded, and I believe it to be in the interest of this bill. I do not know what may be thought of it elsewhere, either in Congress or anywhere else.

Mr. PLUMB. I will ask the Senator right there, did that question what may be thought of it elsewhere, which is a pretty general term, have any influence with the committee in regard to this matter? I ask whether "elsewhere" was allowed to determine the course of legislation and the amount of money to be appropriated?

Mr. KENNA. I can only answer that question for myself, and I will say that in yielding to this proposition to reduce the bill 25 per cent. I yielded to what I conceived to be the general proprieties of the situation. I have not sought information elsewhere. The information which I possess, meager as it is, about this bill and its particular items, I have derived from official sources; I mean from those official sources which are connected with these works in the engineering department; and I have acted accordingly.

So far as I am concerned, I will vote for this bill with $25,000,000 in it. I believe it would be genuine economy, I believe it would be in the interest of the public service, and I believe it would be further in the interest of great improvements scattered throughout this country involving the application of the funds of the people collected by taxes levied upon our people, and this is, perhaps, the only one of all the great appropriation bills passed by Congress the fund provided for by which goes back to the people for their general purposes and to promote their general good. I am ready, as far as I am individually concerned, to defend this bill here or elsewhere, for I believe it is right.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. President, while this general confession is going on all around, I should be very glad to hear from the other members of the committee. It seems that the Senator from Texas [Mr. COKE] is violently opposed to this amendment, and the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] I believe is opposed to it. The Senator from Minnesota [Mr. MCMILLAN] is opposed to it, and the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. KENNA] is opposed to it.

Mr. MCMILLAN. I am not opposed to it. I offered the motion, and of course I am not opposed to it.

Mr. BUTLER. The Senator is certainly not very earnest in support of it, for the Senator from Kansas applied a pretty high-pressure pump to the Senator from Minnesota and extracted from him a confession that he would prefer the bill as it originally came from the committee.

Mr. MCMILLAN. I think the Senator from Kansas got very positive information from me that I am in favor of the bill and in favor of the amendment.

Mr. BUTLER. I understood the Senator to say that he would be quite willing to vote for the bill with the Senate amendments on it, and the Senator from West Virginia made the same statement. I should be very glad, in view of having my own conduct and action on this bill clearly understood, to have a confession all around from the other members of the committee. The Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE] says he is opposed to the bill in toto, amendment and all.

Mr. CONGER. In accordance with the Senator's remark, may I ask him to give a little information from himself and not be drawing information from others. I have not heard him express his sentiment one way or the other.

Mr. BUTLER. I shall be glad to give the Senator any information I can.

Mr. GEORGE. This is a very interesting colloquy and I should like to hear it.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I wish we could have order.

Mr. MCMILLAN. Will the Senator from South Carolina permit me to ask a question?

Mr. BUTLER. Certainly.

Mr. MCMILLAN. I ask the Senator from South Carolina if he has not offered as an amendment to this bill a proposition to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert a general appropriation of $10,000,000?

Mr. BUTLER. I have done that and with great deliberation, because I saw that the Committee on Commerce were in such an utter state of confusion and had become so absolutely stampeded about their own bill that, rather than not have any appropriation at all, I wanted to have a saving clause and get $10,000,000. That was the reason I offered it, if the Senator wants to know why I did it.

Mr. EDMUNDS. May I correct the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. BUTLER. Certainly.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The Senator says the Committee on Commerce, to whose defense I come——

Mr. BUTLER. I am glad to know they have some one to defend them. They make a bad showing for themselves.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Would it not be more correct to say, looking at the bill as it came from the House and all together, that they are in a state of diffusion, instead of confusion? [Laughter.]

Mr. BUTLER. I am glad to accept that correction. Certain gentlemen of the committee have expressed their opinion about the bill, and I confess very frankly that I would prefer to vote for the bill as it is. I shall certainly vote against the amendment offered by the Senator from Minnesota when it has such a half-hearted, hesitating, halting support by the mover of it, who says in its support that he would prefer the bill as it is, as it came to the Senate.

Mr. MCMILLAN. No, I did not say that. The Senator is mistaken about my statement.

Mr. BUTLER. I hope I am.

Mr. KENNA. Allow me to ask a question of the Senator from South Carolina, whether he would vote for an amendment to reduce the bill to $10,000,000?

Mr. BUTLER. No; I would rather have it as it is, as it stands amended by the Senate.

Mr. KENNA. The Senator's amendment is $10,000,000.

Mr. BUTLER. If I can get a vote on the bill as it came from the Committee of the Whole, I prefer to vote for that. If not, I will vote for my amendment of $10,000,000.

Mr. EUSTIS. I wish to ask the chairman of the committee a question. Will he give his reasons why he offered the amendment. He stated that he was apprehensive that unless the original amount was reduced the success of this measure would be endangered.

Mr. McMILLAN. The Senator in justice to me will permit me to say that I stated distinctly that the Committee on Commerce directed me to offer the amendment. I expressed my individual views in regard to it and my opinion upon the bill as it stood.

Mr. EUSTIS. But I understood the Senator from Minnesota distinctly to state that while he was in favor of the bill as reported from the committee and in favor of the amendments increasing the amount which was reported from the committee, yet that the reason which actuated him to offer this motion calling upon us to vote for a reduction of 25 per cent. was that unless that original amount was so reduced the success of this bill would be endangered. That reason was satisfactory to me so far as any explanation from him was concerned; but I am not able to state exactly to what he does refer, what is the basis for his apprehension, or what he is afraid of. But we have the statement of the Senator from West Virginia, who is also a member of that committee and who is a supporter of the motion, that such an apprehension as that does not influence or actuate him in his support of the motion. He says that he yields to what he calls the general propriety of the situation, whatever that may mean.

Mr. KENNA. I leave it to the Senator to interpret my expression for himself.

Mr. EUSTIS. I am not in the position of the Senator from Kansas, who is an enemy of this bill, nor am I in the position of the Senator from South Carolina, who is a quasi friend of this bill. I am an earnest and original and blindfold supporter of this bill. I have followed this Committee on Commerce; I have supported this Committee on Commerce; I have yielded to this Committee on Commerce my utmost confidence and affection; but now, forsooth, the Committee on Commerce calls upon me to give up $500,000, for instance, of the amount appropriated for the improvement of the Mississippi River.

Mr. KENNA. Will the Senator pardon me there? And every other Senator and every other member of the House, if this bill should pass as reduced, as proposed by the committee, will be called on to yield precisely the same proportion, whatever his own individual judgment might be in reference to the improvements in his locality.

Mr. EUSTIS. But I do not represent trout streams, Mr. President.

Mr. KENNA. Neither do I; nor do I think any of us do, so far as this bill is concerned. If the Senator thinks there are appropriations in the bill for trout streams, I ask him to oppose it, because I would certainly do so under those circumstances.

Mr. BUTLER. Now may I ask the Senator from Louisiana who has criticised my position as a quasi friend, if he is a thick-and-thin friend of the bill, in season and out of season?

Mr. EUSTIS. I have proved that, Mr. President, and I propose to prove it further by voting against the motion made by the Senator from Minnesota. I consider that motion an imputation upon the Committee on Commerce. I consider that motion a serious reflection upon the Senate of the United States; and for one, sir, whatever may be appprehended by others in other quarters, wherever those quarters may be, I do not intend to be intimidated in the discharge of my duty as a Senator.

If the Committee on Commerce have acted, and I assume they have, from proper motives, earnest in the discharge of a public duty, feeling and knowing that in the discharge of that duty they were protecting and guarding the rights and interests of the American people, I say that the idea involved in the motion of the Senator from Minnesota is a humiliating surrender on our part, to what influence I will not attempt to describe; but it is a confession at the conclusion of our labors that there is something wrong about this bill, that the bill contains a vice of some kind, and that this committee and that this Senate do not dare to go before the country and assume the responsibility of this legislation, and, therefore, they call upon us who represent the constituencies who are vitally interested in this appropriation to conduct and to complete great public works, that we shall not only surrender our prerogatives of legislation, but that we shall sacrifice the interests of those people and of those works because of some apprehension which seems to alarm the chairman of the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. President, I hope that the friends of this measure will vote against the pending motion, and if the Committee on Commerce propose to turn their backs upon this measure, and are afraid to confront the enemy and to face his fire, whoever he may be, that we at least who have been merely foliowers and privates in this controversy will have the courage to assume the responsibility of this measure.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President, in voting for this amendment I do not understand that I am casting any reflection upon the Committee on Commerce, but quite the reverse. We have just had from the House of Representatives—I may mention that with propriety—a joint resolution which proposes to pay a respectable fraction of the public debt, but a very large fraction will still be left, some millions or billions, or whatever it may be, and, therefore, in the interest of paying our debts before we undertake to carry on very largely the so-called improvement (and in a great many instances it is a real improvement) of the navigable waters of the United States, the Committee on Commerce, looking at the debates in both the Houses, at the reports of the Secretary of the Treasury, and the state of the public finances, has thought it fit to propose that in this particular bill there shall be a reduction of aggregates and of items pro rata—that is all—still leaving thirteen or fourteen million dollars of the public treasure to be spent upon these works.

When this bill came from the House of Representatives it was ill-adjusted. Certain regions of country, I will not say sections, seem to have been much more largely in the minds of those who framed and passed the bill than others. Certain public works seem to have been much more largely in their minds than others. It was therefore necessary, as it is in every tax-bill and in every other kind of bill that comes to one of the Houses from the other, to see that its adjustment of burdens and benefits for the public interest was made as nearly correct as possible. Those adjustments have been made according to the sense of a majority of the Senate—not according to my own but according to the better sense of the average judgment of a majority of this body, which we are all bound to respect for the time being.

Those adjustments having been made, so that as one item relates to another, and one region relates to another, and one work relates to another, and one public local benefit or general benefit over a continent relates to another, it is found that there is more money in the aggregate of this bill than is necessary, in view of the state of the public Treasury and the public debt and the public interests, to be appropriated now.

This very Congress, this very Senate, without any change whatever except the casualties that happen from the providence of the Almighty and this House of Representatives, will have the opportunity in December, if any one of these public works, great or small, is found to be deficient in the necessary money to carry it on, to proceed to provide for it; and between now and the day when Congress will dissolve itself on the 3d of March next, it would be perfectly suitable, in my opinion, if the aggregate and the total of this bill were reduced ratably by 50 per cent. instead of 25, because when we meet in December not 50 per cent. will have been spent in one instance in twenty to provide for any actual need. It should be remembered that there is no limitation in these river and harbor bills of fiscal years; and any money that is left on the 1st day of next July will still be applicable to the objects to which it has been devoted.

Wherefore, then, is this committee assailed because having made according to the judgment of the Senate a suitable and ratable adjustment among all the interests and sections and works of the whole United States, it is thought unnecessary to put so vast an amount of money in the aggregate into the immediate control and disposition of the Secretary of War which he can not use within the time between now and the period when Congress meets again? There is none at all. The act of the committee therefore in my opinion is the act of wisdom and of prudence, and is not in any way detrimental to any public interest. I wish it had gone further a good deal.

Mr. KENNA. I wish to ask the Senator from Vermont in reference to the effect of this appropriation, and with reference to the duty of the Department to expend it within the fiscal year or the right of the Department to postpone beyond the fiscal year the amount appropriated. The Senator will understand from the discussion we had the other day the purpose I have in asking the question.

Mr. EDMUNDS. If I correctly understand it, as I have been told by everybody and so far as I see the frame of this bill, it is true that these river and harbor appropriations—and this like all the others is not an appropriation, as the Senate will see by looking at its title and its first provisions—are not limited to any single fiscal year. This bill is a complete and absolute appropriation of so much money for such and such objects. That being so, the question of balances falling into the Treasury at the end of fiscal years is entirely apart and does not apply to this bill at all.

It being then an appropriation of money to be expended by the administrative department of the Government, it is their duty in carrying out in good faith the objects of Congress in passing this bill, to expend it prudently, economically, faithfully, and diligently, I will say, not to refuse to expend it at all. It amounts to a direction of Congress, in a moral sense of course. If a President of the United States saw that there was some obvious mistake, that there was a provision in this bill, or any of the others that have gone before it, for improving a stream that could not be found at all, then nobody would say that the Secretary of War or the Chief of Engineers or the President of the United States was guilty of any impropriety in not spending the money.

Mr. KENNA. I agree with the Senator.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is clear enough. So it comes to the ordinary case of a just and faithful administration of an Executive Department in carrying out faithfully and diligently the objects that Congress has in view with the approval of the President, passing the bill to be signed, or passed and not being signed, no matter, so that it becomes a law. But that does not mean that this $17,000,000 or $18,000,000 shall be spent between now and the 1st of January. It means according to the nature of each case and a fair application of honest and intelligent minds to it, the best, the most economical way of doing what has been provided.

That is what seems to me, and therefore it is that I defend this action of the committee so far as it has gone—and I wish they had gone farther—in saying that it is much better to take these three or four or five million dollars that are to be diminished by this amendment, and pay that amount of bonds with it, than it is to tie it up and credit it in the books of the Treasury and in the books of the War Department, so that it could not be used for that purpose, and when more money is needed, be it December or January or June, for any just object that commends itself to Congress to carry it on, here is Congress to provide for it.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. President, I stated my position with regard to this motion yesterday, and therefore I need not repeat it.

The history of this bill is very brief. It came to the Senate some weeks ago and went to the Committee on Commerce. The Committee on Commerce amended it in two ways, by striking out some provisions found in it, and by reducing the sums of several propositions contained in it. It added to the bill by making amendments for other public works that were not found in it.

In that condition the committee reported the bill to this body, and from the day it was reported to this body until now every Senator who has announced himself as unqualifiedly against this bill, as determined to defeat it and vote against it when the final vote should come, with one single exception has steadily voted to increase the amounts in the bill. With one exception they have steadily voted to increase the bill. I believe to-day as the bill stands that every item that was stricken out by the Committee on Commerce has been restored to the bill by the votes of those who were in favor of that restoration, and by the votes of the announced enemies of the bill. For what purpose? For the avowed and declared purpose of loading this bill down in order either that it might be defeated here or that it might receive an executive veto. That is no secret. Every Senator on this floor knows the truth of the words I have just spoken.

Now, the question is whether this bill shall be submitted to its enemies, whether they shall be permitted to leave it in a condition where it will never become a law, or whether the friends of the measure shall rally around this proposition of the committee and see that it is carried through.

Mr. PLATT. Will the Senator from New York allow me to interrupt him for a moment? I do not know whether I am to be classed as an enemy of this bill. I have expected to vote against it from the start, but I have, I think, consistently voted not to increase it, not on the recommendation of the committee or any other recommendation, since it came into the Senate.

Mr. MILLER. I have not said anything about the Senator from Connecticut. He takes his own position on this bill. I have not mentioned any names.

The Senator from Louisiana [Mr. EUSTIS] tells us that he has been a thick-and-thin supporter of this measure from first to last. I believe he has. I believe he has conscientiously supported it, and that he believes in it. But now he tells us that under the present circumstances, no matter what there may be before this bill, he prefers to stand by it as it is even if it shall go down in the end, rather than yield anything of his own opinions to the judgment of his colleagues or to the necessities of the circumstances which surround this measure.

Mr. President, I do not know what the motives are that actuate the Senator in his present position. It is not for me to question them; but his well-known opposition to the present administration may lead us to believe that he challenges an executive veto, that he desires it, that he desires it even more than he desires the large amount of money which this bill carries for the Mississippi River and for all his portion of the country.

Sir, I am very frank to say that looking at all the great public works provided for in this bill, believing that the necessity for their preservation and for their improvement is paramount and absolute in its obligations upon every member of this body, I am willing to yield so much of my opinion as to what these appropriations should be as to put this bill in such a condition that it will at least have a fair chance of becoming a law after it shall have left this body.

I trust that the Senator from Louisiana on reconsideration, as a friend of this measure, will still further continue to follow the majority of the Committee on Commerce upon this question, and that rather than take the dangers of a final defeat of the bill after it shall have left here—and in saying that I may refer either to the House or to the Executive, it matters not——

Mr. PLUMB. Will not the Senator state more specifically to what he does refer and not leave us to imagination about it?

Mr. MILLER. I may refer to both; but what I do refer to is as well known to the Senator from Kansas as it is to me.

Mr. PLUMB. The Senator gives me more credit than I am entitled to. I do not get things by spontaneous combustion, as some people do. I want to know about this a little. I want to see how it is that people who have been so conscious of their own rectitude and their own judgment have seemed to run against a stronger body and consequently have wilted like a lettuce plant under an early frost.

Mr. MILLER. We ran against the Senate and, as I stated a moment ago when the Senator was out, the Senate has put back into this bill every item, I believe, that the Committee on Commerce took out of it, and put it back by the votes of the friends of each particular measure backed up by the enemies of the bill.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. I wish to ask the Senator from New York how much the bill has been increased in the Senate.

Mr. MILLER. I can not tell that; it is a matter of no consequence to me now. Whatever the Committee on Commerce did has been undone so far as striking anything out of the bill was concerned.

Mr. DAWES. And all the committee did in adding to it has been agreed to.

Mr. MILLER. The Senate has added to it also beyond the additions of the Committee on Commerce. The Senate has not followed the Committee on Commerce at all to any extent.

Mr. DAWES. How much did the Committee on Commerce take off? Can the Senator tell?

Mr. MILLER. Those figures are in the RECORD forty times. My memory is not good upon figures. It is quite a large sum, I will say.

Mr. DAWES. Six hundred thousand dollars in the $15,000,000 was proposed to be stricken out by the committee, I believe.

Mr. MCMILLAN. Six hundred thousand dollars.

Mr. MILLER. I do not think it is of any great importance now.

The Senator from Kansas is very anxious to know what the committee has run against. I have said that it has run against the Senate in the first place, which has put back in the bill everything the committee took out of it, and has added to it in addition to that.

But I have no objection to stating in my place here—it is an open secret, in fact it is no secret at all—that arrangements were being made to bury this bill out of sight in another body not the Senate of the United States, provided certain things were done, or the amount was increased beyond a certain point. There have been floating about the corridors of this Capitol and in these cloak-rooms and upon the floor of the Senate statements made and repeated day after day by men supposed to represent the present administration, men who stand close to it, and who before all the people are taken as its champions, who do not hesitate to say, not in whispers but in words that any Senator might know, that if this bill exceeded a certain amount it would undoubtedly meet the executive veto.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I desire to ask the Senator right here whether he has any information from the President of the United States, or from any person connected with him, that he intends to veto this bill? It is not right to state that the Executive of this country is undertaking to influence the action of the Senate, when perhaps there has been no President of the United States who has been more careful on that point than the present Executive.

Mr. MILLER. I have made no such charge against the Executive. I have not intimated that the President proposed to veto the bill. I have no information whatever from him upon that question. What I have stated is that men who stand before the country as the leaders of the administration upon this floor—if that is more direct and certain—have told us here for weeks and weeks together that if this bill exceeded a certain amount it would undoubtedly be vetoed. Whether they have any positive information about it or not, I advise the Senator from Delaware to ask of them in as public a way as he has asked of me.

Mr. President, after the Senate has put back into this bill everything that the Committee on Commerce took out of it, after it has increased it beyond the amendments proposed by the Committee on Commerce, we must as practical legislators act upon what our judgments may be for the time being. They may be all wrong. It may be possible that the other House and the Executive would approve of this bill if it were $30,000,000; but I say the air is full of rumors that it would not do to do it at all. Believing in the absolute necessity, I repeat again, of these public works and of their improvement and maintenance, I yield so much of my own private judgment as to vote for this proposition to cut down the bill 25 per cent. It does neither impeach the committee nor impeach any single item in the bill, for it does not take a single item out of it.

Mr. MAXEY. I should like to ask the Senator from New York a question. I understood him to say that the Senate had practically ignored the action of the committee and disregarded their recommendations. I find that the Senate committee placed upon the bill the following amendment:

Improving New York Harbor, New York: Continuing improvement to secure a 30-foot channel at mean low water at the Sandy Hook entrance of the harbor, upon such plan as the Secretary of War may approve, $1,000,000.

That was put on the bill by the Senate, on the recommendation of the Committee on Commerce. Has that been stricken out?

Mr. MILLER. That was put on by the committee and was concurred in by the Senate unanimously, the Senator from Texas himself joining in that concurrence.

I did not say that the Senate had overruled the Committee on Commerce upon every point. I said the Senate, I thought, had put back everything the committee had taken out, and in addition to the amendments which the Committee on Commerce had proposed by way of increase, it had gone far beyond them and added to them. That is what I said. The Senate was gracious enough, I will say, to consent to the amendment the Senator has read and to some others which the Committee on Commerce did propose.

Mr. MAXEY. This proposition of cutting down 25 per cent. strikes me as self-stultification not only on the part of the Committee on Commerce but on the part of the Senate. Here the committee have been for forty-six days and the Senate for a number of days considering this bill, and we have endeavored to procure a good and fair bill. It does seem to me that the Senate of the United States should determine for itself, without the slightest regard to what others who have their part to perform may do. It is our duty to determine for ourselves what is right now.

The Senate has added about half a million dollars to what was in the bill when it came from the committee; and here comes a proposition that after the Senate has agreed to the amounts which came from the House, and to the amendments made by the committee, because the Senate has added half a million dollars, and chiefly by disagreeing with the committee in respect to items which the House had passed upon, we shall strike down four and a half million dollars from the whole bill, taking it, in round numbers, at $18,000,000. The Senate has only increased it half a million; and yet because the Senate has made an increase of half amillion dollars, after all this labor, and after this deliberate judgment of the Senate, we are now upon the demand of our leader in this matter, the chairman of the Committee on Commerce, to say that all our action was wrong, the recommendations of the committee were wrong, the items passed upon by the House and agreed to by the committee and by the Senate were wrong, the whole action was wrong, and because the Senate has had the temerity to add half a million more to the bill than was in it when it came from the committee, therefore we shall recommit it with instructions to deduct one-fourth, or four and a half million dollars. It does seem to me that that is a very unreasonable proposition.

Again, look through the bill and you will find as a pretty general rule that the States which had representation on that committee have had large increases. In reference to the State which I have the honor in part to represent, I say that the committee has representation from that State on it, and yet the Committee on Commerce did not add one dollar, one dime, to the appropriations which were given to that State by the House of Representatives, nor has my colleague [Mr. COKE] or myself asked the Senate after the bill came here to add a solitary dollar, in any shape, form, or manner, to any appropriation we have in the bill. But what is the fact as to others?

The Senator from New York has secured in the item to which I have referred $1,000,000; and all through the bill you will find in italics thousands and thousands of dollars are added on to the State of New York, not given to it by the House of Representatives, and what then is the effect of this motion? When you strike a horizontal line of 25 per cent. through these items, those who have taken care of their houses, strike it through what the committee has given, and they who were most thrifty in securing additional appropriations in committee stand a far better chance of success then he who took the bill as it came to the Senate from the House, believing that what he got there was a fair share.

Mr. President, that will not do.

Mr. DAWES. I wish to ask the Senator a question before he sits down. I ask the Senator to be a little more definite in the matter of his statement that the Senate has had the audacity to add half a million dollars to this bill. I understand that the Senate has added very much more than half a million. The half million alluded to by the Senator from New York I understood to be a half million which the committee had the temerity to cut out of the bill as it came from the House, but they have added independent of that something like two million or more, and the Senate have not only put the two millions and more upon the bill, but they put back the half million that the committee had the audacity to recommend should be taken out of the bill. That is the way I understand it. I should like to have the Senator from Texas a little more definite upon that point.

Mr. MAXEY. The Senator has some little difficulty in understanding what I said. I said nothing about the audacity of the committee. I said the Senate had had the temerity to add half a million dollars to the bill after it left the committee and came to the Senate, and it seemed that because of that the committee now ask that the bill shall be recommitted and four and a half million dollars stricken out.

The Senator from Vermont says this motion ought to carry and let the bill go to the House, and at the next session of Congress we can again consider it, and if there is necessity for more let it come in then. There never has been a bill more thoroughly considered than we have a right to suppose this bill has been considered, from the length of time it was in the House committee and in the House before it reached here, and the forty-six days that it was in our committee after it reached here; and we have the positive assurances of the chairman of the committee and other members of the committee that every item of the bill was carefully examined, and that there is not one single item of the entire bill that does not have the approbation of the Chief of Engineers, whose especial business it is to look to the river and harbor improvements of this country. We have had all that. When do you ever expect to have a fairer bill than you have now?

That suggestion does not come from a friend of the bill; it does not come from a friend of the bill that 25 per cent. of all that gets into it is to be cut down. It comes from one who has voted against every river and harbor bill for the last eleven years, so far as my recollection goes, and will vote against this one; and it is strange that those who claim to be friends of this bill will follow in the lead of one who always has been, and in my judgment always will be, opposed to such bills. The greatest of all military leaders says never do what your enemy wants you to do, if for no other reason simply because he does want you to do it, and when the Senator from Vermont advocates a proposition of this kind I understand him. I attribute to him as perfect sincerity and integrity and honesty in his course of action as I claim for myself; but he opposes this bill, and therefore he will take any course whatever that he may deem best adapted to execute the purpose he has in view, which is the defeat of the bill.

It has been said also that this is to save the bill. It is my deliberate judgment that if this 25 per cent. proposition is adopted, that is the last of a river and harbor bill that you will hear of during this session of Congress. It is the absolute defeat of the bill. Here we have gone on step by step, earnestly endeavoring to perfect this bill for the good of the whole country, and have reached a point where, to say the least of it, it is not courage to back in the middle of the battle. The true courage is for us to go on to the close; do what we, by a vote, have said it was our duty to do; take the bill as we ourselves have perfected it, and vote upon that bill. That is my judgment. I never knew a man to win a battle who would retreat in the midddle of the fight when his troops were going on to conquer. Here where we have a majority and everything is in our favor our general comes to us and tells us "retreat," and in that he is backed by every man who is opposed to the bill and wants that retreat for the purpose of destroying the bill. That is the doctrine. You are following the lead of your enemies and doing what they want you to do for the destruction of this bill; and I urge every man who is honestly and sincerely a friend of this bill to act on his own deliberate judgment and disregard the proposition which has been made by the chairman of the committee, and vote for the bill as we have perfected it.

Mr. GORMAN. Mr. President, the Committee on Commerce considering this measure have given it as much attention as ever a committee of this body gave to any bill that came to it from the House of Representatives. It came here appropriating about $15,000,000, as a majority of the committee thought unequally distributed. We believed that some States and some sections had a larger amount appropriated to their rivers and harbors than ought to be made in any one year, and we endeavored by weeks of labor to correct the inequalities by making reductions, and thus adding many rivers and harbors not in the bill as it came here, and yet keep the aggregate amount within reasonable limit. I as one member of the committee thought that to be the proper course, not because I believed the President of the United States would veto the bill if we appropriated $20,000,000 in it. I never gave it a thought, nor would I care what might be the views of any President on a matter of this sort, I would exercise my individual judgment as I have no doubt every Senator has. And here I desire to say, in reply to what has been stated by my distinguished friend from New York [Mr. MILLER], that I believe he did the President great injustice when he said that the President had intimated, or some one for him, or who pretended to know the President's views, that he had expressed an opinion adverse to the river and harbor bill.

Mr. MILLER. The Senator will pardon me for interrupting him. Will he yield?

Mr. GORMAN. With great pleasure.

Mr. MILLER. The Senator certainly misunderstood me if he understood me to express any opinion or any judgment of my own as to what the intention of the President was on this question. I in no way made any such intimation, or if I did it was entirely unintentional at the time.

The Senator will do me the justice to say that in private conversation on this bill I have over and over again insisted that the President was a man who understood something of the great public works of this country, and I have expressed my private judgment that he would not veto the bill. I am still of that opinion. But the other opinion has prevailed among other gentlemen who have just as good a right, and perhaps a better right, to express an opinion on that subject than myself. I certainly did not intend to express any opinion as to what the President would do.

Mr. GORMAN. I am very glad to hear the statement of the Senator from New York. I do not pretend to have any authority to express any view for the President of the United States upon any measure that is before Congress, and I doubt whether there is any member of the Senate or of the other House who has any such authority. I do not believe the President has as to this or any other measure pending sought to influence any Senator or member of the House. The statements referred to by the Senator, no matter by whom made, are not entitled to consideration.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President, I rise to a point of order. I submit as a point of order that it is out of order and unseemly and improper to refer to any possible or impossible action of the President of the United States or of the other House of Congress in respect to this bill. The Constitution has made it our mission to try this bill on its merits, as it seems to us, without any reference to what any other House or any other department of the Government may do.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The point of order is undoubtedly proper; but the Chair observes that nearly every Senator violates the rules in an indirect way.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I hope the Chair will enforce the rule in truth and righteousness.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. A reference to what is done "elsewhere" is the common way which is resorted to by almost every Senator to circumvent the rule. That is a violation of the rule, and much more a violation of decency and propriety than it is to make directly a charge that the President of the United States will do so and so. The Chair therefore finds a difficulty in enforcing the rule unless Senators themselves observe it and see the impropriety of referring to what the President or the other House may do.

Mr. GORMAN. Mr. President——

Mr. EDMUNDS. I did not refer to the Senator from Maryland in particular. I only hope we shall treat this bill on its merits and keep within the proprieties of legislation.

Mr. GORMAN. I am very glad indeed that the Senator from Vermont has made the point of order. I only regret that he did not feel it his duty to make the point at an earlier stage in this discussion.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The trouble with that was the fact that I was engaged in the Committee on the Judiciary in studying the accounts of sundry marshals that we have to deal with.

Mr. GORMAN. The Senate is apt to go wrong when the Senator from Vermont is not here.

But, Mr. President, for one, without regard to the views of anybody inside or outside of this Chamber, as a member of the Committee on Commerce I believe it was wise before we reported the bill that a general reduction should be made in the items, so as to bring the aggregate within $15,000,000. Hence I desire it to be understood that I am casting my vote for the amendment offered by the chairman of the committee without reference to the views of anybody else.

I know that a reduction of 25 per cent. of all the items in this bill is not altogether the fair and proper way to reduce. There are appropriations contained in it which will complete some of the great works of this country, notably the improvement of the harbor of Baltimore, in my own State. The small amount appropriated for that State in this bill, less than $300,000, would complete that great work and give the country the benefit of the large sums heretofore expended. So with the improvement at Muscle Shoals and other great points in this country, such as the Mississippi River.

But we must look to the general result at this late stage of the session. With the sums which have been appropriated for all the purposes of the Government, the gross amount has been swollen to a point that will probably make this the most liberal Congress that has ever assembled since the adoption of the Constitution. And speaking to my friends on this side whose States have been liberally dealt with in this bill, particularly to my friend from Texas [Mr. COKE], I say that for the first time in twenty-five years there is appropriated nearly a million dollars for the harbors within that great State, and it is entitled to it all and ought to have more, possibly an annual appropriation until completed of a million dollars for the great harbor of Galveston, yet it is not practicable to give it all.

It is not right for us to go on, simply because we happened to have a larger amount in this bill than usual, to swell that amount until the country will rebel against what I believe is the best bill in the interests of the people that has ever been brought to the consideration of the Senate.

Mr. GEORGE. That is your opinion.

Mr. GORMAN. I have the right to express my opinion, as the Senator from Mississippi has the right to express his. I mean to say by that, for I believe it, that liberal appropriations for the improvement of the water ways is wise and does more to advance the interest of the whole country than any like amount appropriated for any other purpose, and yet I believe that the great corporations who now largely control the transportation interests, with their power and their money, with their astute and able attorneys and writers to largely manufacture public opinion, annually make war upon the river and harbor bill. It is a power that we can not despise. You and I know it has had too large a control in all the affairs of the Government. These corporations know that improved rivers, harbors, and canals is the one great preventive for extortion. Their interest is to suspend these great works. If our appropriations are excessive, the country may become alarmed.

Mr. PLUMB. Right in that line does the Senator not think that this great influence he speaks of would feel better about a twelve-million-dollar than an eighteen-million-dollar bill? Does he not think that to appropriate less and make the rivers less useful would better suit the railroads than to appropriate more and thereby more completely improve them and make them keener competitors with railroad commerce?

Mr. KENNA. The Senator from Maryland will allow me a word. In that line of inquiry I wish to suggest to the Senator from Kansas whether he will support the eighteen-million-dollar bill.

Mr. GORMAN. We all understand that there are numerous gentlemen who can not be controlled, whose votes can not be had for what they regard as an enormous and extravagant bill, and yet who are prepared to go for and approve the usual appropriation. There is no Senator on this floor who is a greater stickler for keeping appropriation bills within the usual amounts than my friend from Kansas.

Mr. EDMUNDS. May I interrupt the Senator from Maryland?

Mr. GORMAN. With pleasure.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I agree entirely with what he has said about the corporations, and yet it is a very strange thing that every time I stand up in the Senate, as I have over and over again, every time such a bill was up when I was here to oppose the putting of destructive bridges over the navigable waters of the United States by these very same railroad corporations I have been voted down, I believe every time.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. I rise to a point of order. I ask whether we are acting under the five-minute rule? If so, if I am not misinformed about that, the advocates of these appropriations have exceeded the five minutes. I state now that the five minutes have been exceeded.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The five-minute rule is to be enforced by the Senate and not by the Chair. It is not now in force, at any rate.

Mr. EDMUNDS. There is pending now I believe somewhere in Congress a bill providing for a low bridge across the Mississippi River for which six millions are appropriated, and in respect of anything that can do it any good I am for it; and yet whenever a railroad corporation or anybody else comes with an application to build a bridge over these navigable streams, in spite of everything that can be done it goes through every time. I think we ought to begin somewhere to stop that sort of thing. I ask the attention of my friend from Maryland to that part of the case.

Mr. GORMAN. In the expenditure of money under the river and harbor bill we are compelled to rely upon the reports of the Government engineers, who in each and every case have made a thorough examination and reported to Congress the facts, and upon their report and upon their judgment as engineers we frame this bill and vote the money to carry out the appropriations.

Now, the Senator from Vermont seems to think, or at least that would be a proper inference from what he has said now and has heretofore said, that he is a better engineer than the Chief of the Engineer Corps of the United States Army; for I venture the assertion that there never has been a bill, at least since I have been a member of the Committee on Commerce, reported to the Senate and acted upon to bridge any navigable stream in the United States unless it first met with the approval of the Chief of Engineers, and he has stated that it would not seriously interfere with navigation.

Of course every bridge does to some extent interfere with navigation. We must have railroads, and the right to bridge navigable streams can not be denied; but the Committee on Commerce, which has reported bridge bills, have taken the judgment of the Engineer Corps, and, so far as I know, they have not misled us. The railroads we have. They practically control the internal commerce of the country. As I have heretofore stated, the only certain means of controlling their charges and protecting the people is in improved water ways. I trust the Senator from Vermont will use his great power in the interest of every consumer by voting for the passage of this bill.

Mr. President, I only intended when I rose to give my reasons for voting for this amendment to reduce the total amount provided for in the bill to about $15,000,000.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. Mr. President, I know that I have consumed much more time than the Senator from Maryland, but I have endeavored to accommodate myself to the five-minutes rule, and whenever I have failed to do so the gavel has reminded me, or some one else has called to order. I have noticed here within the last half-hour that two gentlemen have spoken in advocacy of this bill, no matter how much they may undertake to deflect themselves around it by suggestions as to the difference between the amendment and the original bill, and they have each of them spoken over twelve minutes. They can have twelve minutes in which to attack the Treasury, but you can not have but five in which to defend it.

I heard the Senator from New York, in a speech here of nearly fourteen minutes, say that this bill had been loaded down, the increases being made by the votes of those who were opposed to it. I say that the statement is not borne out by the record. I have voted for one or two increases, and other Senators have done the same possibly; I can speak only for myself. I have opposed the bill from the beginning. I have voted for no increase that I thought would load the bill down for the sake of opposition. I want to defeat it by fair means or none at all. I have combated it openly on this floor, and I have done it by exposing the enormities it contains relating to my own State.

I am told here to-day by this immense committee that the deliberation which we have given this subject is such and has been such as that we ought to be concluded from further argument. I asked the chairman of the committee this morning to tell me when his committee met. I asked another member of the committee to tell me when the committee met. Picking up this RECORD, I find that we adjourned yesterday evening at 6 o'clock and 2 minutes, after having deliberated over a bill of this size [exhibiting] which you have for a few weeks talked about in committee. Did you meet last night or did you not? Answer me, or say you are confused by the words you hear uttered. I say you did not meet since the adjournment yesterday.

You asked us to pass this morning upon a judgment you did not venture to give us before. That which you devoted weeks to an incubation of you ran away from last night and come in here to-day and charge us with doing that which is not courteous to a committee. Now, I ask the committee to recollect that there are some people here who are entitled to some consideration as well as they. What have I seen members of that committee do to-day?

The Senator from West Virginia, having here a kind of prominence that gives effect and strength to his statements, gets up and says, "I am paired with Senator So-and-so," and never once says how he would have voted or how Senator SABIN would have voted. He has never uttered a syllable that ever indicated how he would have voted on one of the amendments, being at the time, I suppose is yet, and will probably remain so, the chairman of the Congressional Democratic committee. When he found there was some danger of this new amendment that he was backing, he says, "I will defend this bill here and everywhere else." Now I challenge him to its defense.

I have found the same on this side of the Senate Chamber, Senators announcing that they were paired and never once announcing whether they would vote for or against, not even giving the absentee the benefit of the declaration which was due to him.

This, we are told, is the deliberate act of this committee. Will the chairman of the committee tell me now how long they deliberated on it? Since two minutes after 6 yesterday evening; for this RECORD shows we did not adjourn until that time? The RECORD of to-morrow morning will show that before any other business was done here to-day, except that which we call the morning-hour business and the taking up of this bill, the Senator from Minnesota, the chairman of the committee, propounded this amendment, which was to strike out all after the enacting clause. Look upon this committee composed of eleven Senators, than whom there never were such, and you must accept just what they offer you; and if you do not, you are consuming the time of the Senate when we ought to be at home! I grant it; we are consuming time, but we are doing it, in my judgment, in the interest of the people we represent.

Who constitute this committee? Mr. MCMILLAN, Mr. JONES of Nevada, Mr. CONGER, Mr. FRYE, Mr. MILLER, Mr. DOLPH, Mr. CAMERON, Mr. RANSOM, Mr. COKE, Mr. VEST, Mr. GORMAN, Mr. JONES of Florida, Mr. KENNA, and Mr. GIBSON. Which one of them can say that he took this bill since two minutes after 6 o'clock yesterday evening and was in deliberation upon it so as to arrive at the conclusion which we have heard here that the committee came to cutting down all the items 25 per cent.? If you did not give it that deliberation do not bring it in here with the prestige of a report that you did not make. It is not right to us who are opposed to this bill. We are willing to contest it on fair and equal terms and on level ground all the time. Which one can state that there was a committee report? How long did you deliberate? I repeat that we adjourned at two minutes after 6 o'clock yesterday evening and you came back here this morning with the original bill stricken out and a substitute for it that did not discriminate in favor of rivers and harbors as you ought to have done, but just making one horizontal—is that what you call it?—an equal, uniform reduction of 25 per cent. And do you tell me that is the result of the deliberation of the committee?

If the committee can not stand by their original appropriation bill, then God forbid that I should stand by it. If they could come in here and tell us for four days that we ought to vote for this appropriation bill as it emanated from them, and then since two minutes past 6 yesterday evening conclude we ought to go for 25 per cent. less, uniformly taken off, I must confess that I can not be governed in my judgment by a report of a committee so constituted.

Mr. President, I heard suggested here something about a Presidential veto of this bill. I care nothing about that. I have never seen the President; I do not know him; but I have never heard of his vetoing anything except as I have heard the messages read here, but I think it will be quite time enough for him to veto something after we have passed it and sent it to him. I do not think it is a proper thing for a New York President to suggest a veto and a New York Senator to rise here and say that other Senators have thought that the New York President would veto it. If I knew he would veto anything that I believed that I was right in voting for, I would not hesitate to vote for it; and I object to the Senator from New York, who is not President, vetoing this bill before we pass it.

There was a time in the history of this country when a speech of that kind would not be tolerated, and I hope the time will come again when words of that sort will not be spoken here, when we are one branch of a great co-ordinate department of the Government, when we are supposed to act deliberately and independently. If I were to express even a hope that if we should pass such a bill we had an Executive who would veto it, I would feel that I was not doing the part of a Senator on this floor. It is not my business to discuss such a matter or to refer to it.

I do not understand now that the Senator from New York can point to a Senator on this floor who has had any conversation or who knows, or who even has any plausible ground to believe he has heard from the President that he will veto this bill. Is that kind of argument or suggestion to be brought here for the purpose of passing such bills as this? Let the bill pass upon that, and not upon its merits, appropriating $18,000,000 reduced 25 per cent.

Sir, I state expressly that I have not voted for any increase that I thought at the time of voting would possibly have any effect on the ultimate passage of this bill. I voted, I think, to increase two of the appropriations that I deemed right. I voted to decrease others. Now I think I know that the Senator from New York had not any reference to me. I have a great deal of vanity, but not enough to suppose for a moment that the Senator could possibly have referred to me when he said there was one Senator here who was capable of doing that. Therefore it is that as to the discussion of that part of his unfair remarks I relegate it to the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB].

Mr. CALL. Mr. President——

Mr. EUSTIS. Will the Senator yield to me for a moment?

Mr. CALL. Yes, sir.

Mr. EUSTIS. The Senator from New York made some remarks, I understand, in which he spoke of my position toward the administration. I understand that he questioned the sincerity of my remarks and impugned my motives.

Mr. HOAR and others. We can not hear the Senator.

Mr. EUSTIS. I say that I understood that the Senator from New York had questioned my sincerity in supporting this bill and impugned my motives.

Mr. MILLER. The Senator will excuse me. When I was speaking I did not notice that the Senator from Louisiana had gone out of the room. If he had been here I have no doubt he would have understood, as I think all the other Senators understood, that I was not speaking seriously in regard to the Senator from Louisiana at that time, but rather chaffingly upon what was supposed to be his position in regard to the administration, and I said that I hoped that supposed opposition of his would not influence him upon this measure; but I did him the credit to say that I believed he had been sincerely the friend of this bill all the way through, and I appealed to him to still remain a friend of the bill and to support the committee in this proposition. I certainly had no intention to seriously reflect at all upon the motives of the Senator or his position, and if I did so it was entirely unintentional.

Mr. EUSTIS. Very well, sir.

Mr. CALL. Mr. President, the propriety of adopting the amendment now before the Senate does not depend in any degree upon the action of the committee which has reported it. For myself I desire to say that I have no doubt the Committee on Commerce in reporting this amendment, as in reporting the original bill, have acted with an entire view to the general benefit of the country. Individual judgments may of course be influenced in favor of localities which are better known to them, but I have no question that the committee have desired to carry out the general policy of improving the great public works of the country with fairness and with respect to the benefits to be derived by the country. But this amendment derives an importance outside of the peculiar amount which is appropriated by it, from the circumstances under which it is presented to the country. It is not the committee itself, but the Senate of the United States that will be arraigned before the country and in view of its constitutional duties by the adoption of this amendment.

The justification for this amendment can not be found in the fact that the Senate in its legislative character has not given to each and every item of this bill full and deliberate consideration, for such is not the fact. For two weeks this body, exercising the highest legislative power of this great country, has been engaged in the deliberate consideration of every item of this appropriation bill, and has passed its judgment upon it.

The condition of the public Treasury and the resources to be derived from the revenues of the fiscal year, the propriety of the work which was designed to be improved, its relations to the general commerce of the country—all these have been considered by the Senate with the utmost care and deliberation, and it has pronounced a judgment, and a final judgment upon it in the performance of its constitutional duty; and now the arguments by which the Senate is asked to reverse that judgment do not relate to the merits of each particular case or to the exercise of individual opinion. They relate to other and adventitious circumstances, to the power of great corporations in the public opinion of this country.

For one, Mr. President, if there be such a power I desire the issue to be met with it and between the people and it, and the Senate will be recreant to its constitutional duty if it abandons its deliberate judgment because of the apprehension that corporations which use a taxing power that draws $1,000,000,000 a year from the labor of this country will oppose the action of the Senate, and create opposition to it among the people. I wish the people's Representatives and the Senators here representing the States to adhere to its judgment, and let the issue be met, as met it must be, sooner or later, if such influences as these are to affect the legislative judgment.

The suggestion that this or any action of the Senate in the interest of the people which reduces the taxes levied for the benefit of a few individuals on the great body of the people under the taxing power granted to the persons who own these corporations because of their apprehended opposition establishes the necessity of adhering to the action of the Senate. If it be true that a privileged order of a few persons in the States has grown to be so powerful in wealth and privileges under powers granted by States and by Congress that they can control and direct the people against their own representatives and against the people's interest, let us be firm, and without delay proceed to remedy it, for the very existence of the Republic depends on our remedying it. We talk about bills to indict and punish Senators because of business relations with corporations, but if there be such a fact as this that the great public opinion of the people of the country may be corrupted by these corporations as against the constitutional authorities in the exercise of their functions for the protection of the people, let the issue be met, for here indeed is a real danger, and as compared with which the other is as nothing.

Mr. President, I am opposed to this amendment on every ground. By our constitutional duty when we have arrived at a judgment on any subject different from that of the House we are remitted to a conference with the House of Representatives for a decision as to the correctness of that judgment, and whether we are to adhere to it or not, it is not proper for us to say to ourselves that in anticipation of any action by anybody outside of this Chamber we will change the deliberation which we have agreed upon. If, therefore, this bill is as the Senate has pronounced it, right, our constitutional duty is to say so to the other House of Congress and to confer with them in regard to the points of difference and agree or disagree, as may be found necessary on further deliberation; but it is not our right to abandon our conclusions without an effort to persuade the House that we are right in the action we have taken.

The Committee on Commerce of this body increased the appropriation which came from the House in the bill $2,895,275. The Senate increased it over the committee's report a little over $600,000, so that, with the exception of $600,000 which the Senate acted upon in Committee of the Whole, it has received the deliberate sanction of the Committee on Commerce, and has been sanctioned and indorsed by the Senate itself.

There can therefore be no reason found for asking that this reduction of 25 per cent. shall be applied to the bill. The Senate when it spoke made the final judgment so far as this body was concerned in regard to the propriety of its action, and unless you reconsider that, and go over the whole of this bill by amendment, you in this negative way reverse the deliberate judgment of the Senate and do it because of certain supposed influences outside.

I am in favor of the amount appropriated by the bill. I believe that the expenditures are required for the public good. The Congress of the United States should adopt a liberal policy of internal improvements, natural or artificial, a policy as the Senator from Texas said to-day looking forward to the greatest possible facilities of transportation. Such a policy should be adopted and maintained, and whatever excise or tax is necessary for that object should be imposed upon the people of this country. The only question is as to the importance of the public works proposed to be made, and the fairness of the distribution in the different parts of the country. As to this the Senate has decided and the committee and the Senate owe it to themselves that they should not give countenance to the charge of an unfair distribution of this money by a new apportionment made by the committee without the action of the Senate.

For that reason I am unwilling to concede a smaller amount than the Senate has agreed shall be devoted to these public works. If the policy of providing facilities for interstate commerce or foreign transportation, either natural or artificial, is necessary, let us boldly proclaim it; and when we agree about the details let us adhere to it. No action can be taken by the Senate or the committee which will give rise to unfriendly suspicion and criticism so much as to adopt the amendment proposed by the committee. After cutting down the House bill as to two or three States, the public works in which are of as great importance as any others, and increasing the amount in several other States $2,895,275, the committee propose to reduce the works in the States already reduced 25 per cent., and leave the States increased with three-fourths of the increase, without reference to the importance or present necessity of the expenditure.

What do we see in the country? We see a thousand million dollars of unrestrained taxation imposed upon the people of this country by taxes levied without representation by a taxing power in the shape of corporate authority created by law, with the power to levy tax upon the people of this country on all locomotion and transportation. They accumulate larger wealth and greater luxury for a privileged class than exists in any other country, directly derived from a taxing upon transportation—a greater power and a more exclusive right than is possessed by any government, however great it may be.

Upon whom does it rest? It rests upon a people of 60,000,000 and by the law of natural increase that 60,000,000 people in twenty-five years will be doubled to 120,000,000 people, and by immigration and natural increase it will be doubled in twelve years, and 125,000,000 people will be found within this country, and that pressure for subsistence upon population which has been apprehended, and which the great thinkers Mill and Spencer have pointed out as the rapidly coming danger of the country with its millions of unemployed and starving people. This is the question which confronts us now and demands that a broad and liberal policy of internal improvements which shall diffuse the productions of the country and its benefits everywhere, and furnish the means of subsistence to every locality, shall be adopted and maintained.

The Senator from Connecticut suggested the other day an idea which may become in the future a subject of consideration and which looks to aid from public authority, and that public authority upon this subject has come to be the General Government, that the functions of legislation would have to be exercised by which means of transportation should be made with great highways of railroad transportation directly by the Government, instead of as now indirectly, by the grant of this great power of taxation to individuals. It may be that this will be forced upon us in the future, and certainly it is true that now the great natural highways of transportation demand the utmost care and consideration by the Government of the country. The question of the reasonable cost of transportation and travel and its regulation and control by law is second to no other question in its immediate and urgent importance upon which the subsistence and comfort of the people depends, and even the existence of free government.

I am in favor of this general policy because while it gives employment to the people of this country and provides for their subsistence and diversification to their employments it also gives cheap transportation. It demands on the part of the Government of the United States a liberal and judicious system of internal improvements, bringing to the highways of commerce, interstate as well as foreign, the entire production of this country.

For these reasons I desire this body to take a firm stand and exercise those high sovereign legislative powers which have been intrusted by the people and the States to them, and when they have formed a mature judgment and have asserted it that they will adhere to it. This bill asserts this broad policy of improving the highways of transportation wherever they may be found and are worthy of it, and will contribute in any important degree to the general welfare of the country.

I have no belief that the Executive of this country, or any other department of the Government, will not do what is right and wise and patriotic upon this subject. It is not a party question. I have confidence in each of the departments of the Government, in their integrity and their wisdom and their good faith to the public. I hope this amendment will not be adopted.

Mr. PLUMB. Mr. President, I wish the Senate to come to an understanding exactly of the motive which actuated the committee with reference to the proposition in regard to this reduction. Before I enter upon that, however, I wish to say that there is another matter which does not touch upon the question of motive, but is one of mere accident and circumstance attendant on the bill, of which I want to make mention. I make the suggestion in a way that I think it will be put in a proper light and such as not to create any possible reflection on the committee. Every member of the committee who succeeded in getting much of an increase for his State in this bill is now more strongly in favor of adopting this proposition for a diminution of the gross appropriation. The fact is that the reduction made will still give them more in comparison than would be given if the amounts were left as the bill came from the committee.

In saying this I do not inculpate the committee. I feel perfectly assured that the members of the committee had forgotten that fact if they ever knew it, and they therefore have been proceeding in this matter wholly without any reference to it. I put that in now in order that it may not be brought up hereafter by way of a reflection upon members of the committee who in this lucky and good way are to be fortunate whether the pan is up or whether the pan is down.

Mr. VEST. Will the Senator permit me to say a word?

Mr. PLUMB. I will.

Mr. VEST. I do not want to discuss this question. I said yesterday all I had to say and gave my reasons for opposing this horizontal reduction, as it is termed. It was 30 per cent. yesterday; to-day it is 25 per cent. I am a member of the Committee on Commerce, but I could not attend the meeting this morning on account of other duties. Therefore I was not there to vote upon this proposition in committee, where I would have opposed it; and so I feel at perfect liberty to oppose it in the Senate.

Mr. PLUMB. I understand that, for I know the fact that the Senator from Missouri and the Senator from Texas are the only two members of the committee who lack either the acquisitive faculty, or judgment, or energy, or whatever else may be required to carry a measure in that committee—"industry," the Senator from Massachusetts says; and my colleague adds "temptation;" and I will put in all the other adjectives which can be suggested in that line. As I said, these two members of the committee are the only members who failed to get a large or at least an appreciable, as I now recall it, increase of the appropriations for their States, and they are the only two members who are opposed to this reduction.

Mr. VEST. I do not know what the Senator means by appreciable.

Mr. PLUMB. The Senator from Missouri did not get what might be called a real benefit.

Mr. VEST. Seventeen thousand five hundred dollars for Missouri.

Mr. McMILLAN. How much did the Senator from Minnesota get?

Mr. PLUMB. The Senator from Minnesota ought not to ask me that question. He has the information himself.

Mr. McMILLAN. I can answer it.

Mr. PLUMB. Well?

Mr. McMILLAN. The appropriation for Duluth Harbor, Lake Superior, was increased $25,000 in answer to the absolute demands of commerce. If the Senator from Kansas thinks that Senators are influenced by any such motive, he follows a rule that is a mistaken one. If he applies it to himself and judges of others by himself, he may be right.

Mr. PLUMB. I started out by saying that I wanted this out now, and I make comment on it for the purpose of saying that I knew that this matter had escaped the attention of those members of the committee who had succeeded in thus increasing their appropriations, the 25 per cent. to the contrary notwithstanding, so as to be prepared, perhaps, for the general reduction. As in the case of a confession made by a homicide, or any other criminal, the confession must be considered in connection with all the qualifying attendant circumstances which surround it before it can be used; and so the confession of a part of this committee exculpates them entirely.

The Senator from Minnesota says that this reduction is made because the committee was run on, like a wagon going down-hill sometimes runs on the team. He did not believe in it at all; it was against his judgment, against his conviction, and everything of that kind, but yet he comes in and supports it. Surely he does not give a candid judgment of the merits of the situation.

Now we have got it finally that in some way underground, by a sewage system that connects the Senate with the White House and which similarly connects it with the House of Representatives, by the fetch-and-carry fellows who always know a good deal of somebody else's business in an inverse ratio to that which they know about their own, if they have any, that the House of Representatives in the first place is going to take the aggressive on this bill if it is made $18,000,000, and that the President of the United States is going to veto it if it is made $18,000,000. What there is magical in the particular sum of $18,000,000 I do not know.

I do not know that I object to stating my position on this bill. To this bill I am opposed not because of the amount appropriated but because of the method of the appropriation, because I deem it to be wasted in the form in which it must inevitably be expended; and so I presume I shall vote against the bill, but I shall vote against it with a great deal more urgency and a great deal more under a sense of public duty if it is reduced than if it were increased. The reduction only magnifies and increases the objection which I had to the bill at first. It will make the sums more trifling, and make it more perfectly certain that they will be uselessly spent.

The public feeling about this matter is not against the expenditure of money but against the method of the expenditure, and whatever there is in the bill that is entitled to respect, as there always is in a measure which finally comes to a focus, the Government should finally do the thing in a business way, taking up the meritorious streams and appropriating money enough to carry on their improvement rapidly and safely and certainly to completion in order that the public may have the benefit of it and that the public money may be properly spent in producing these needed improvements.

But this now has reached a point where it materially involves the self-respect of the Senate. The theory of our Government is that the House and the Senate are independent of each other. We have that enforced in the rules, which prevent us from alluding to the other House in any way to affect the action of the Senate, and similarly in regard to the Executive. If the Senate is simply to sit here, informed in advance what the House wishes it to do, it had better adjourn and go home, and when it has got safely home it had better stay there.

I do not believe that the President of the United States has ever made an utterance on this subject. I have a great deal more respect for him than to believe that he has violated the essential proprieties of the situation by saying that he would or would not veto this bill. He has no business to say it. He has no business to make any declaration on the subject which will in any way tend to affect the action of either House of Congress upon it or upon any other measure pending before them. I do not believe he has done it; but if he has done it, whatever conviction I might have about the necessity of any appropriation to be made or of any measure to be passed which he had expressed himself upon, I should feel more like clinging to my judgment as a matter of self-respect and the preservation of the co-ordinate power of the Senate in regard to the legislative functions of the Government. And so in regard to the House.

And what have we got finally? We have simply here what is in the air, as the Senator from New York says; men who have come over from the House, tramping over here in some way to see what we were doing, and conveying to us some impression that it would be agreeable to do a certain thing in regard to important matters of public policy. Those men are not authorized to speak for the House. They may be members of it, it is true, but the individual members of the House do not express the judgment of the House collectively, and if they did I should say as I said in regard to a possible declaration of the President, that that would only make me cling the closer to that which was and had been the judgment of the Senate as expressed by a direct vote.

Speaking for myself personally I would rather find that the House of Representatives had made a declaration by a resolution that it would not pass a bill of a given kind that came to them from the Senate, and the open declaration of the President of the United States that his veto would be given to a bill if it passed the Senate, than I would to find these insinuations, this underground communication, this tittle-tattle which is always going backward and forward, and which has just as much force as representing public opinion as the float would have as representing the current of the Mississippi River by which it is carried. It is a wrong to the President of the United States and to the House of Representatives that these things should have been mentioned, and it is a double wrong that they should be used here for the purpose of influencing our action. It is insulting to the President of the United States that it should be so used, and would be degrading to the Senate if it yielded to it.

I could readily see how the committee under certain circumstances might have recommended a reduction of the total amount of this bill, that they might have said that a certain public policy was to be observed in reference to the national finances, that something was to be conserved by keeping the appropriations within certain limits; but it does not come with that foundation or with that argument, but simply as a mysterious intimation that if the bill is to go through it will have to be reduced, followed by the declaration that otherwise it would not pass the House of Representatives, and if it did it would be vetoed by the President of the United States.

I think that ought to be argument enough for the Senate to stick to whatever conviction it has. If it has not any, if it is like a thistle-down, blown by the wind, if it is willing to abnegate its functions on an intimation by some irresponsible parties that the House of Representatives will or will not do something when our action comes under their purview, then, as I said, why keep this ornamental position any longer; why sit here with all power and authority abnegated in advance? Why not better go home and perform some useful function there, it may be, than to stay here to record the decrees made elsewhere?

So, in regard to the matter that is now presented, for the reasons which I have alleged, and the further reason, as I said in advance, that if the bill is to be reduced the money will be more unwisely expended; of course I myself shall vote against this amendment.

I can see, looking over the bill, a great many very important considerations that arise in connection with amendments of this kind. How is this money to be apportioned? How are we to get the money to buy the works of the Portage Lake or Lake Superior Canal Company? We have appropriated a certain amount for the purchase of that canal, to be used of course only in a contingency, and suppose we reduce that amount by 25 per cent.?

Mr. HARRISON. Then do not provide for it at all.

Mr. PLUMB. We do provide for buying the canal and paying a certain sum of money, which I understand represents the cost of the works to the company with interest, and we appropriate $150,000 for that work. We reduce that amount by 25 per cent.; and shall we thereby get the canal? Unless that amount is sufficient, of course we shall not get it.

There are a multitude of complicated provisions in the bill which will be injuriously affected by a proposition to horizontally reduce the appropriations. I do not know, and no member of the Senate knows, what is contained in the bill. No one knows whether the mathematician who went through the bill for the purpose of ascertaining what 75 per cent. of the sum already provided for will amount to, has done his duty faithfully or not, and nobody knows what other provisions are contained in it.

Of course, I do not mean by that to doubt in any way the sincerity or the candor of the Senator from Minnesota. He, of course, had to trust this matter to somebody else. Here is an amendment covering the entire ground of this bill, which it is proposed to pass without its even having been read.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It was read.

Mr. PLUMB. It has not been read.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The amendment?

Mr. PLUMB. No, sir; it has not been read.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I asked that it be read and the clerks started on the reading.

Mr. PLUMB. I know they started, but they incontinently stopped.

Mr. HOAR. The Senator from Vermont left the Chamber.

Mr. PLUMB. "When the cat's away the mice will play."

Mr. EDMUNDS. Will the Senator from Kansas allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. PLUMB. Yes, sir.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The Senator from Vermont left the Chamber after asking to have the amendment read, as everything ought to be read, to do his duty in the committee to which he belongs, in respect of the business of that committee which is pressing, concerning matters that can not be spoken of with propriety here, and, therefore, the Senator from Vermont supposed that the amendment would be read, if anybody wanted it to be. He is not complaining that it was not read, having looked at it himself since all through.

Mr. PLUMB. Is the Senator from Vermont satisfied with the amendment in its terms?

Mr. EDMUNDS. I am satisfied that the amendment does what the committee proposes to do, and that is to take the text of the bill in respect of all its provisions, as it has been agreed upon so far as we have gone, and to reduce the items of appropriations and aggregates by 25 per cent. I have examined its provisions sufficiently to be satisfied of that fact. That I am satisfied with all of the items from top to bottom, or any part of them except about one-third, is quite another question.

Mr. PLUMB. If the Senator from Vermont is satisfied and the Senator from Minnesota is satisfied, that makes two members of the Senate out of seventy-six, and of course if the number could be enlarged from time to time by the voluntary confessions of different members it might obviate the necessity of reading the amendment at all.

But it is deliberately proposed upon the part of this committee to pass a bill carrying about $15,000,000 without actually having it read to the Senate at all. I do not think there is anything in the history of legislation, even during that time when the laws were supposed to be comparatively silent, which equals the carelessness and slipshod method proposed here at this time, when we have "ample room and verge," when in fact we are just getting down to summer work, and a bill, as I said, carrying $15,000,000 is proposed to be passed without a reading at all.

It has got to be so in regard to rivers and harbors that it is supposed to be only those who get a part of the pork, and they only to the extent of being certain that they get what they want, without inquiring about the means whereby they get it, who ought to be consulted in regard to the material disposition of the question. I think here is an illustration of what my friend the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN] who is now absent would call the driblet of legislation.

I propose as far as I can that the bill shall be read, so that if we can not have the substance of legislation, that consideration which ought to attach to all measures especially those which go to take away the substance of the people of the United States, the form at least shall be observed if the substance is not; and that we shall not insult the intelligence of the people of the United States by taking up a bill carrying $15,000,000 and putting it through nem. con. on the word of the Senator from Vermont and the Senator from Minnesota that they are satisfied. There is something due at least to form, and the forms sometimes become essential, and this I think is one of those cases.

If this bill is to be passed let it be passed on the ordinary reading. Let it be passed by a pretense of preserving that which is observed in regard to a bill carrying a pension of only $8 a month, or authorizing some transaction which must necessarily be the subject of legislation before it can occur, but which in no way affects the great mass of the people of the United States.

Mr. MCMILLAN. Will the Senator from Kansas permit me to state to him that the reading of the amendment was commenced under the call of the Senator from Vermont, and the reading of it, after progressing for a while, was waived by unanimous consent at the request of a Senator upon the floor of the Senate; and if the Senator from Kansas had been present he certainly could have interposed an objection if he desired to have the amendment read, or he can have it read yet?

Mr. PLUMB. I am much obliged to the Senator for that information. I knew that in advance, and I will ask that the amendment be read. ["No!" "No!"]

Mr. CONGER. Mr. President, I will venture to say that there has never been on any committee, on any number of Senators in this body, such an insidious attack on their motives as has run through the entire speech of the Senator from Kansas. Why does he attack this committee? Why does he speak of every single member of it as having been influenced by some corrupt motive?

Mr. PLUMB. I disclaimed that in the beginning.

Mr. CONGER. The Senator has stated it whether he disclaims it or not, and he has said here that there are but two men of all that committee who rose to confess, to own that they were corrupt and unscrupulous in accomplishing their objects. All through his speeeh has run that same attack upon the motives and sincerity and honesty and honor of the Committee on Commerce. What for?

The Senator never voted for a river and barbor bill. Nobody dreams that he would ever give a vote to favor these appropriations, but there never comes a time but that in his peculiar way he attacks the sincerity and the honor and the honesty and integrity of every man upon that committee, and himself the great umpire stands there as a self-constituted judge to execute those who come, as he says, to confess and apologize to him.

The Senator from Kansas is the chairman of the Committee on Public Lands, the advocate of measures that he thinks right in regard to matters under his committee's administration and examination. Whoever attacked him for the innumerable bills that he has presented here relieving his people? Whoever attacked him for trying to save the people along the Des Moines River who had the Des Moines lands when laboring here with a zeal and energy and a pathos that brought tears to my eyes while he described the sufferings of his people? Who attacked him?

Mr. PLUMB. May I——

Mr. CONGER. In a moment.

Mr. PLUMB. I want to give the Senator a lesson in geography; that is all.

Mr. CONGER. Geography does not alter the motives of a man. Whether it is in this country or that country, or along this river or that, where he was advocating the interests of the people of his State is not material. He did it, I will give him credit to believe from a sense of duty; but what kind of a heart, and what kind of a conscience, and what kind of respect for his fellows, as good men as he on this floor, can a man have who will run mad in extravagance and abuse of his comrades and fellows on this floor through speeches, not to-day alone, but on former occasions in regard to this bill, ascribing all kinds of corrupt and all kinds of indecent motives to the members of the Committee on Commerce? He says the committee have engaged by some way unknown, by some secret process, by some sewerage system, to explain what they have done and to defend themselves here by some sewerage system. Ah, sir, that kind of attacks and that kind of sentiments smell of the cloaca. The suggestion of a sewerage system shows and indicates the seeking for motives of men in some filthy place; and I will leave it there with those expressions in regard to men.

How much better is the Senator from Kansas than the gentlemen upon this committee? How much higher in the sight of Heaven, or of his fellows, does he stand than the gentlemen of the committee? Have they done anything to merit that kind of lawless guerrilla attack which he makes upon them and upon their character and upon their reputation to hold them up to the scorn of their fellows in the Senate and of the people of the United States?

I do not come to the Senator to confess. I do not come to his altar to make my confession. I stand, as I suppose every other Senator does, upon his record, upon the general opinion of his fellows as to his integrity and honesty, and it is not that he is on the Committee on Commerce that he is to be condemned because he is on that committee, or that he is chairman of the Committee on Public Lands that he has a right to stand so exalted above his fellows that he can hurl his scorn and his sarcasm against his colleagues here.

Sir, I admit the great superiority of the Senator from Kansas in the use of language, in freedom of debate, in the soaring high, ay, and in the sinking low, when he addresses the Senate over his fellows, over myself or almost any of us; but I do not admit his superior honesty and integrity in the work in the Senate; I do not admit his superior assiduity and industry in trying to promote the general interests of the United States to other Senators here, great as it is. I do not admit his superior honesty or integrity, for I have supposed that among the representatives of the States here there was no State to be attacked because it had sent unworthy men to this body. The reflection goes past the Senators here and goes to the Legislatures which sent them here and to the States which they represent. It is an attack upon the system of government under which we live, if his assaults upon any committee or upon any body of men in the Senate are to be permitted to go unrebuked.

Now I ask, and the committee ask and expect nothing in aid of anything they recommend here, unless it be a bridge bill or some other measure in which his people are interested in Kansas that the Senator may advocate. I know the Senator never has advocated a river and harbor bill of any kind, of a great amount or a small amount. So far as I know, the river and harbor bill, with its rivers, and with its harbors, and with its ponds, and with its brooks, and with its water in its channels has been the play-ground upon which the Senator from Kansas has sported whether in swimming where there was water or in striking gravel along the dry channels of dry streams. That is his favorite stamping-ground. That is the place where he amuses himself. That is the place where he gratifies the tastes of a people who relate year by year that in the State in which he lives, except on one side in the east and at one in the south, there are no rivers and there are no water courses, and the people are compelled by all kinds of machinery and by all kinds of power to bore and dig down into the earth to see if bountiful nature will not send up to them from the recesses of the earth those artesian waters which they can not have upon the surface.

No wonder that he opposes river and harbor bills. No wonder that with the gasping, longing, dying struggle for water in his State he envies States that have water and water courses. A report was made in his State long ago of an invention of some kind of a trap that should go by wind across his prairies, and it was advocated, as I recollect, in published speeches and in printed pamphlets that the dews which fall during the night would aid in the gliding over the prairies of Kansas these ships of the desert. The dew dried up, the ships could not run, as one report said, after 10 o'clock because the dew was gone, and the grass was an obstruction when not wet by dew to the gliding of the sailboats in Kansas.

A man from the dry, arid region where he looks upon a great extent of territory, those boundless prairies that stretch themselves far beyond human vision, sometimes views with a kind of disgust navigable streams and waters and rivers, coming as he does from a region where there are no rivers, where there are no running waters, and where the shrieking sound of the artesian well is all that greets his weary ear.

Now, I do not find any fault with the Senator from Kansas. He has brooded over this subject of the lack of water until it has become a kind of monomania with him. If anybody talks about water courses and rivers and lakes, the Senator from Kansas begins to feel the premonitory symptoms of hydrophobia, of dread of water, and hatred of those who have water.

Mr. PLUMB. The difference between the Senator's State and mine is that in the Senator's State they use water for navigation and in Kansas we drink it. He may not believe it, but it is true.

Mr. CONGER. That is what causes the great trouble there, the great use of water. I have said that. I knew, of course, the Senator would corroborate what I said. I said it a little before it was necessary, but I presume that no Senator here would question the truth of my statement. Some Senators would take what I say without the corroboration of the Senator from Kansas, much as he feels disposed to criticise the honesty of the Committee on Commerce of which I am a humble member.

When did the Senator from Kansas, in all his varied experience in the Senate, with all the vast statesmanship—for the mantle of the statesman has fallen upon his shoulders, and hangs there and lingers there still—when did he ever advocate any of these great measures of such vast importance to so many people and to so many regions of the United States in a river and harbor bill? Never; no, never. Not even the comic-opera exception of "hardly ever" could be applied to him. His speech from year to year is interesting, it is eloquent, it is varied, because the items in the bill are varied. They are not all the same each year, and it gives a trifling kind of a variety to the attack of the Senator from Kansas; not enough to diversify it, not enough to make the lights and shades prominent; but one by careful watching, by a sort of microscopic examination of these speeches that are made from year to year against the river and harbor bill, can detect some little variation in the attack. I confess myself that with a tolerable memory, and having heard these speeches so often, were I a short hand writer I could write from memory a little in advance of the Senator, and very seldom go wrong.

What is the object of this constant and continual and perpetual and perennial attack upon the river and harbor bill? What hostility has the gentleman to oceans and to lakes and to bays and to rivers and to water generally? I can not account for it.

The true statesman—and I say the gentleman from Kansas represents the true statesman perhaps more than any other gentleman on this floor except one that I could mention, and each Senator may apply that to himself [laughter]—the true statesman can look over a country like this, inclosed upon its eastern and western borders by oceans, bounded along much of its northern course by a wonderful chain of lakes which make possible communication by water, on its south by a gulf opening from our own country into the tropical regions—the true statesman could find in the condition of almost a hemisphere, with the Mississippi River and its tributaries rising away over beyond the Rocky Mountains, circling its way far around to the north, with its three great tributaries, the Gallatin and the Madison and some other, uniting to form even beyond the Rocky Mountains in a direct westerly distance the Missouri, a running of a navigable river three or four thousand miles through the very heart of a continent, and our continent, through the heart of a country which is a part of our Republic, peopled by an enterprising, intelligent, thrifty, thriving class of men, the very type and the very perfection of the pioneers of an empire yet to come—I say a statesman might find something in such a vast empire as the Missouri or the Mississippi flows through, the home of millions of people yet to come, to enlist his sympathy, to exercise his judgment, to help devise the better means, if a committee fail to reach them, to benefit that vast region and those teeming millions of people.

The statesman must not get behind his mantle. The mantle of the statesman is on his shoulders, but his eyes and his judgment and his feeling are all before him when he looks out on the great country of which he is the statesman, and sees what is needed; and if one man does not come up to his judgment of what is necessary and what is best, he looks over, with his great giant intellect and his power of comprehension and his quickness of arriving at details, and he tells his fellows who know less than he does how the better way is for the statesman to handle these great questions that affect the interests of millions of the people over whom he towers in his pride of place. The mantle of the statesman is not held before his face so that he shall not see. The solitude and reflection and thought of the statesman are in his closet, and when he comes in here to legislate and to make laws it is his duty to tell his fellows that they are mistaken in this plan, and they are mistaken in that, that there is a better way, that he perceives a better way. The people demand of such a leader in this Senate that he tell his fellows and tell the country what that better way is, and that he work with them and they with him for the good of that great, grand people whom we are all so proud to represent on this floor.

Sir, since 1826, when the Erie Canal connected the great chain of lakes with the great oceans, there is not a State, nor a country, nor a town west of that canal, and northwest of it, and southwest of it that has not felt a million-fold the benefit of that great water communication, which great minds and great statesmen in New York in 1816 and 1817 devised to connect the East with the wild, unknown regions of the West. Did Clinton, when that matter came under his consideration, quibble about the details? Did he try to destroy it because it went in this course or went in that, because the locks had a 7-feet lift or a 10-feet lift? No, sir; the great men of New York, knowing the importance to the whole United States of having a water communication between the system of internal lakes and the seaboard, selected the shortest route, and from the foot of Lake Erie to the Hudson, took that route and labored for it with an energy and assiduity which have made their names immortal among their fellows in the United States.

Mr. President, I challenge contradiction to this statement, that wherever there were either naturally water communications from the Atlantic States far into the interior, or where by the improvement of rivers which could be made navigable communication has been secured, from the beginning of those improvements until this time, settlement, industry, increase of population, wealth, happiness, comfort, the growth of the people have followed steadily in the line of the improvements wherever made and whenever made. To the small appropriations made commencing in 1824 and continuing and increasing most of the years down to the present time this country owes its growth, owes its increase of settlement, owes its increase in the number of its States, owes its increase in population and in wealth and in peace and happiness, more to the river and harbor improvements in this country than to any and all other devices put together, for they were made before even the methods of transportation by rail which followed long after the settlement of the country had been made in our land.

Sir, I call attention to the fact, and if any one desires to be instructed, not to say amused, by witnessing the improvements made by the Erie Canal and the communication by water on the different rivers, and the deepening of our harbors and the access to and from our coasts through the harbors—if any one desires to couple together the great growth, the wonderful prosperity of this country, he will find that these improvements and the growth and extension of our people over this country have run along together until to-day.

But I have been diverted from what I desired to say. I wished to say that I am one of those who have wished the appropriation bill reported to the Senate and agreed upon by the Senate, if possible, passed in that shape. I do not believe the appropriations too large, I have no fear of the result of them to my fellows and my colleague, were it not that some of the committee believe that it would be better if there were a reduction of the bill. I therefore agree to cut off from the bill $323,000 from the apropriation of my State. I agree to it in the feeling that it is best, and so I think other members of the committee have felt. In our bill and in our work the judgment of men equal to that of the Senator from Kansas or any other Senator advised us and urged us that it is better by some means to reduce the amount of the bill and wait until another year for further appropriations to be made. For that reason, and for that reason alone, I am willing to yield my own judgment to the views of my fellow-Senators, whom I respect and whose opinions I am very anxious to conciliate.

Mr. HOAR. I rise merely to say one word before a motion to adjourn is made in regard to the matter of the reading of the bill, which I should like to have go into the RECORD. This bill has been read as much as any bill which ever passes is read. We pass a bill through its several readings. It is read once. Then the changes are made by the action of the Senate; but the actual engrossed copy of the bill is never read aloud to the Senate, nor is it read by the Committee on Engrossed Bills. It is always referred practically to a clerk. Now a clerk, under the direction of this committee, has taken a bill which we have already passed upon and has simply made 25 per cent. reduction on each item where a sum of money is named; but there is no less thoroughness of reading by the Senate than in any appropriation bill or other bill that ever passes.

Mr. MCMILLAN. Mr. President, I ask that this amendment be printed, and I move that the Senate adjourn until to-morrow.

Mr. ALLISON. The Senator means to have the substitute printed.

Mr. MCMILLAN. I mean the substitute.

Mr. ALLISON. The Senator from Minnesota has offered a substitute which comprehends the entire bill, I understand, including the House provisions and the provisions inserted in the Senate.

Mr. MCMILLAN. It presents the bill as it existed at the time the substitute was offered, with the amendments which have been adopted since.

Mr. ALLISON. Now, the suggestion I make is that that portion of the bill known as the House text be printed in the ordinary form of a bill, and that the Senate amendments be printed in italics, so that we may distinguish on the face of the print between the House provisions and the Senate provisions.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Yes; but I ask in addition that the changes which have been made since the chairman of the committee from the committee offered the substitute be also printed in a way to show them.

Mr. MCMILLAN. Let that be done.

Mr. ALLISON. The Secretary can easily arrange the printing.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The request will, without objection, be agreed to.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. I ask that the Senator from Vermont or any one who makes a suggestion for unanimous consent will speak out loud enough that it may be heard.

Mr. MCMILLAN. There was no unanimous consent asked.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. For what?

Mr. MCMILLAN. I proposed to move an adjournment.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. A motion to adjourn does not require unanimous consent.

Mr. MCMILLAN. No. I make that motion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Minnesota moves that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. PALMER. I hope the motion will be withdrawn for a moment.

Mr. DOLPH. I wish to make a report.

Mr. HARRIS. I hope the motion will be withdrawn, and that the Senator from Michigan [Mr. PALMER] and the Senator from Oregon [Mr. DOLPH] may be allowed to present what they want.

Mr. MCMILLAN. I withdraw the motion for the purpose of permitting the Senator from Michigan to present what he wishes to offer.

AMENDMENT TO AN APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. PALMER. I only wish to submit an amendment to be hereafter proposed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. In the absence of objection the Chair will receive it.

Mr. PALMER submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the general deficiency appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

REPORT OF A COMMITTEE.

Mr. DOLPH, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 4839) for the relief of E. P. McNeal, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. MCMILLAN. I renew my motion to adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 6 o'clock and 34 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Friday, July 16, 1886, at 11 o'clock a. m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, July 15, 1886.

The House met at 11 a. m. Prayer by Rev. Dr. BULLOCK, of Washington, D. C.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

MARY E. CASEY.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the bill (H. R. 5003) for the relief of Mary E. Casey, with Senate amendments; which was referred to the Committee on Private Land Claims.

MARTHA A. VORHES.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the bill (H. R. 8066) to pension Martha A. Vorhees, with amendments by the Senate.

The amendments were read, as follows:

In line 3, where it first occurs, strike out the name "Vorhees" and insert "Vorhes."

In line 3, where it occurs the second time, strike out the name "Vorhees" and insert "Vorhes."

Amend the title so as to read: "A bill to pension Martha A. Vorhes."

The amendments of the Senate were concurred in.

MOUTH OF MISSISSIPPI RIVER.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the bill (H. R. 7633) establishing additional aids to navigation at the mouth of the Mississippi River, with amendments by the Senate; which, with the Senate amendment, was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

SENATE BILLS REFERRED.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the following Senate bills; which were read twice and referred as follows:

The bill (S. 1212) for the protection of property from fire, and safety of lives, in the District of Columbia—to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

The bill (S. 1755) for the relief of Eliza Ellen Ehle—to the Committee on Claims.

The bill (S. 1801) for the reappraisement and sale of a certain tract of land of the reservation of the Sac and Fox Indians of the Missouri tribe, in the State of Nebraska—to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

The bill (S. 2431) granting a pension to Henry Shoulders—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

The bill (S. 2485) granting a pension to Robert Boyd—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

The bill (S. 2519) granting an increase of pension to Richard B. Rians—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

The bill (S. 2676) to repeal chapter 360 of the statutes of 1882, entitled "An act to amend section 2133 of the Revised Statutes, in relation to Indian traders"—to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent leave of absence was granted to Mr. STORM, for five days, on account of sickness in his family.

EXTENSION OF APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. RANDALL. I am instructed by the Committee on Appropriations to report the joint resolution which I send to the desk, and to ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

The Clerk read as follows:

A joint resolution to continue the provisions of a joint resolution approved July 1, 1886, entitled "A joint resolution to provide temporarily for the expenditures of the Government."

Resolved, &c., That the provisions of a joint resolution entitled "A joint resolution to provide temporarily for the expenditures of the Government," approved July 1, 1886, be, and the same are hereby, extended and continued in full force and effect to and including 31st July, 1886.

Mr. DUNHAM. Is that a privileged resolution?

The SPEAKER. It is privileged to be reported but not to be considered at this time.

Mr. DUNHAM. It ought to be understood as far as the House of Representatives is concerned that the appropriation bills necessary to carry on the Government have been passed.

Mr. RANDALL. I will not enter on any criticism as to that. I ask to have printed in the RECORD a copy of the original joint resolution bearing date July 1, and also a statement of the present situation of the appropriation bills.

The SPEAKER. Without objection the joint resolution and statement will be printed in the RECORD.

They are as follows:

[PUBLIC RESOLUTION—No. 15.]

Joint resolution to provide temporarily for the expenditures of the Government.

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That all appropriations for the necessary operations of the Government under existing laws which shall remain unprovided for on the 30th day of June, 1886, be, and they are hereby, continued and made available for a period of fifteen days from and after that date, unless the regular appropriations therefor provided for in bills now pending in Congress shall have been previously made for the service of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887; and in case the appropriations, or any of them, hereby continued are or is insufficient to carry on the said necessary operations, a sufficient amount is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to carry on the same: Provided, That no greater amount shall be expended therefor than will be in the same proportion to the appropriations of the fiscal year 1886 as fifteen days' time bears to the whole of said fiscal year: Provided further, That authority is also granted for continuing during the same period the necessary work required for public printing and binding, and for all other miscellaneous objects embodied in the sundry civil and naval appropriation acts, in advance of appropriations to be hereafter made for said objects: And provided further, All sums expended under this act shall be charged to and be deducted from the appropriations for like service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887.

Approved July 1, 1886.

CONDITION OF THE APPROPRIATION BILLS.

The agricultural, Army, consular and diplomatic, District of Columbia, Indian, Military Academy, pension, and Post-Office bills have been passed and agreed upon by both Houses.

The legislative, executive, and judicial bill is in conference.

The sundry civil, naval, and river and harbor bills are pending in the Senate.

The deficiency bill is in the Senate committee.

The fortification bill is in the House.

Mr. MILLIKEN. Some of us would like to know how many more of these extensions will be required.

Mr. RANDALL. They will be required as often as the necessity occurs. The Senate seems to be working night and day.

Mr. MILLIKEN. The appropriation bills have been delayed in the Senate because they were delayed in the House.

The joint resolution (H. Res. 202) to continue the provisions of a joint resolution approved July 1, 1886, entitled "A joint resolution to provide temporarily for the expenditures of the Government" was read a first and second time, and ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. RANDALL moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

FOURTH BRIGADE SOUTH CAROLINA STATE TROOPS.

Mr. DIBBLE. I ask unanimous consent that the Committee of the Whole House be discharged from the further consideration of the bill (S. 582) for the relief of the board of field officers of the Fourth Brigade of South Carolina Volunteer State troops, and that the same be now considered.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Court of Claims shall, notwithstanding the bar prescribed by any statute of limitation, hear, determine, and adjudge any claim or claims of the board of field officers of the Fourth Brigade of South Carolina Volunteer State troops, a municipal corporation of the State of South Carolina, against the United States, for the rent due by them or for the use and occupation by them, prior to the 21st of July, 1874, and subsequent to July 1, 1868, of certain buildings on Citadel Green, in the city of Charleston, after the legal termination of the late war; and that any judgment in favor of the claimant rendered hereunder be paid as other judgments of the said court are paid.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. HOLMAN. On yesterday the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BRAGG], the Chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs, objected to the consideration of this measure, I do not know for what reason. The bill seems to be one that belongs to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. DIBBLE. I will state for the information of the gentleman from Indiana that the gentleman from Wisconsin has consented to withdraw his objection.

Mr. CUTCHEON. I would like to hear some explanation of the measure.

Mr. HOLMAN. I think the report should be read.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection the report will be read.

Mr. DIBBLE. I can state in a few words what the case is.

Mr. HOLMAN. I think it is as well to have the report read:

The report (by Mr. LANHAM) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 582) for the relief of the board of field officers of the Fourth Brigade of South Carolina Volunteer State troops, having had the same under consideration, respectfully report back the same without amendment, and recommend that it do pass.

For the facts upon which this claim is based reference is here made to Senate report No. 287, at this session of Congress.

Mr. DIBBLE. The facts are simply these: This is a claim for rent for the occupation of buildings for the use of the United States in the city of Charleston which the Government occupied and for which they paid rent until the 1st of July, 1868. When the claim was first presented the appropriation was exhausted. The claim was acknowledged and approved by the officers of the Government. Now the bar of the statute intervenes. That is the only trouble, and it is necessary to go to the Court of Claims for the recovery of this amount.

Mr. HOLMAN. How much is involved?

Mr. DIBBLE. The amount involved is about $6,000—between $6,000 and $7,000. It is for rent from the 1st of July, 1868, to the 21st of July, 1874. It is not a war claim. It is a matter that occurred after the war.

Mr. CUTCHEON. I would like to ask the gentleman why this matter has not been adjusted before now. It appears that nearly twenty years have elapsed since the occupation of these premises.

Mr. DIBBLE. No; the occupation was from 1868 to 1874.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. BURROWS. Mr. Speaker, the reading of the report threw no light upon this subject, as it simply referred to the Senate report. I therefore ask to have the Senate report read.

The Senate report was read, as follows:

The Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 582) for the relief of the board of field officers of the Fourth Brigade of South Carolina Volunteer State Troops, submit the following report:

This claim was prosecuted and heard before the Court of Claims upon petition filed July 21, 1880, and the court made therein the following findings as to the facts:

I. The board of field officers of the Fourth Brigade of South Carolina militia was a perpetual corporation created by the State of South Carolina in 1809. The said corporation was vested with power to purchase and hold land not exceeding 300 acres for the use of the militia in the parishes of Saint Philip and Saint Michael's.

On the 25th May, 1835, the said corporation became the owner by purchase of a parcel of land, with the building thereon, on Citadel Green, in the city of Charleston, known as the Picquet Guard-house, and on the 1st August, 1856, of another parcel of land, with a building thereon known as the Boylston House, in the city of Charleston.

II. When the rebellion broke out the confederate forces took possession of the premises, and continued their occupancy for war purposes until they evacuated Charleston in February, 1865. The United States troops then took possession of the premises and turned them over to the bureau of refugees, freedmen, and abandoned lands. In October, 1865, that bureau surrendered them to the city of Charleston, and Charleston in turn delivered them to the claimant.

Whether the officers of the claimant consented to the occupancy of the premises by the confederate forces does not appear. They were themselves actively engaged in the rebellion.

III.—August 20, 1867, the United States forces again took possession of the Picquet Guard-house and of the Boylston House, and occupied the former until November 1, 1874, and the latter until April 1, 1879.

For this occupancy the United States paid rent to the city of Charleston until July 1, 1868; for the Picquet Guard-house at the rate of $50 a month, and for the Boylston House at the rate of $92 a month.

Since July 1, 1868, no rent has been paid to the claimant and no express lease appears to have been made.

The rate of rent paid prior to July 1, 1868, would be a reasonable compensation for the use of the buildings subsequent to that date.

IV.—On the 8th June, 1877, the board of field officers of the Fourth Brigade of South Carolina Volunteer State Troops was created a corporation by the State of South Carolina and vested with the rights, franchises, and property of the board of field officers of the Fourth Brigade.

CONCLUSION OF LAW.

Upon the foregoing findings of facts the court decides as conclusions of law that the claimant is entitled to recover for the use and occupation of the Picquet Guard-house from July 21, 1874, to November 1, 1874, at the rate of $50 a month, $116 12; for the Boylston House from July 1, 1874, to April 1, 1879, at the rate of $92 a month, $5,181.67; making in all $5,347.79.

The court, in its opinion, says:

"We agree to the position taken by defendant's counsel that so much of the claim as originated prior to July 21, 1874, is cut off by the statute of limitations (R. S. 1069). As no time was fixed for the payment of the rent, it must be deemed to be payable as it accrued. The petition was not filed until July 21, 1880."

It having been made to appear to your committee that this claim had been presented from time to time to accounting officers and special boards charged with the settlement and adjudication of such claims from 1869 to 1879, inclusive, and that the claim had never been disallowed, but had been several times reported upon favorably, it seems to them that justice requires that the claimant should be permitted by law to present its whole claim to the court untrammeled by the statute of limitations.

Your committee therefore recommend that the bill be amended by inserting in the third line, between the words "shall" and "hear," the following words: "Notwithstanding the bar prescribed by any statute of limitations;" and by inserting in the eighth line, between the words "them" and "of," the following words: "Prior to the 21st day of July, 1874, and subsequent to July 1, 1868;" and that, so amended, the bill do pass.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. DIBBLE moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Mr. PRICE. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. ROWELL. Regular order.

Mr. OATES. I ask the gentleman to withdraw the demand for the regular order so that I may have the reference of a bill changed. The bill (H. R. 2475) for the relief of Samuel Noble was referred to the Committee on War Claims. A bill for the relief of the same person is being considered by the Committee on the Judiciary, and I ask that the reference to the Committee on War Claims be annulled and the bill referred to the Judiciary Committee.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. PRICE. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman on my right [Mr. ROWELL] who called for the regular order agrees to withdraw the call to enable me to ask the consideration of a bill.

Mr. ROWELL. I withdraw the demand for the regular order.

Mr. PRICE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to discharge the Committee of the Whole House from the further consideration of the bill H. R. 2775. It is simply a bill to give us a term of the United States court at Eau Claire, Wis. It will not cost the Government a cent. The bill has been agreed upon unanimously by the Committee on the Judiciary; that is, they have agreed to report a substitute for the original bill. I do not think the bill ought to excite any discussion, as no man on earth is opposed to it.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That there shall be one term each of the district and circuit courts of the United States for the western district of Wisconsin held yearly at the city of Eau Claire, in said State of Wisconsin, which terms shall begin on the first Tuesday of December of each year.

SEC. 2. That the clerk of said courts and the marshal of said district shall each appoint a deputy who shall reside and keep an office at said city of Eau Claire, in which offices, respectively, shall be kept all such books and records as appertain to the business of said offices and are usually kept in the offices of the clerk of said courts and the marshal of said district, respectively; and said deputy clerk shall keep in his office full records of all actions, proceedings, and judgments in said courts.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands that the Committee on the Judiciary reports a substitute for this bill, and that the original bill is to be laid on the table.

Mr. HOLMAN. I will ask the gentleman from Wisconsin whether this bill is reported to the House by the Committee on the Judiciary?

Mr. PRICE. It is, through Mr. CASWELL.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is advised that there is no substitute reported.

Mr. PRICE. I have handed up the substitute. Mr. CASWELL, as a member of the Judiciary Committee, has charge of the bill; but he is at home sick, and he wrote me requesting that I would get it out of his desk and have it presented to the House.

The SPEAKER. But the report does not appear to have been made.

Mr. PRICE. I am making it now verbally for Mr. CASWELL, and it will be made in writing.

The SPEAKER. But the gentleman's motion was to discharge the Committee of the Whole from the further consideration of the bill.

Mr. PRICE. Well, I am not particular about the motion; but I want this bill to pass.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is informed that the bill is on the Calendar, but that the Committee on the Judiciary have not reported a substitute.

Mr. PRICE. But I have presented the substitute now for Mr. CASWELL, a member of the Committee on the Judiciary. The only difference between the substitute and the original bill is that the substitute saves the cost of the deputy marshal and deputy clerk.

Mr. HOLMAN. Is the bill which has been read the substitute?

Mr. PRICE. No, sir; that is the original bill.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the substitute.

The substitute was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the regular terms of the circuit and district courts in the western district of Wisconsin shall be held at the times and places following: At Eau Claire on the first Tuesday in June; at La Crosse on the third Tuesday in September, and at Madison on the first Tuesday in December in each year.

SEC. 2. And be it further enacted, That after the commencement of either of said terms of said court to be held at Eau Claire and La Crosse, respectively, as hereinbefore provided, and until the first day of the next succeeding regular term of said circuit and district courts herein appointed to be held in said western district, it shall be lawful for either or both of said circuit and district courts at any time to be open at Madison, and to there do and transact any business whatsoever therein not requiring the aid or intervention of a jury.

SEC. 3. And be it further enacted, That all provisions of law inconsistent with this act are hereby repealed; but nothing in this act shall interfere with the power now possessed by the judges of said courts to order special terms of the same, as now provided by law: Provided, however, That nothing herein shall be so construed as abolishing the provisions of law for a clerk and clerk's office of said court at La Crosse and Madison, Wis., but the same shall remain as now constituted, except that the clerk residing at Madison shall attend all terms of said court at Eau Claire as clerk thereof.

Mr. HOLMAN. Can the gentleman tell us at how many points courts are now held?

Mr. PRICE. Two, and this makes three. Madison and Eau Claire are about 200 miles apart; from Madison to La Crosse is about 150 miles, and from La Crosse to Eau Claire is about 125 miles. There you have a valley with a population of 130,000 or 140,000 who are distant from a circuit court from 125 to 200 miles. The consequence is that it costs a great deal to get juries and causes great inconvenience to the people. The difference between the substitute and the original bill is that the substitute saves the cost of a deputy marshal and a deputy clerk, and provides distinctly that this court shall not interfere with the terms held at either of the other points. The judge of the circuit is in favor of it; La Crosse is in favor of it; Madison is in favor of it; the whole State is in favor of it; the Committee on the Judiciary were unanimously in favor of it. I trust that there will be no objection to the passage of the bill. It will not put the Government to any additional expense, while this term of court will be a great convenience to the people.

Mr. MCMILLIN. I would ask the gentleman whether there is a public building at that point in which the court can be held?

Mr. PRICE. No, sir; but we provide in the bill that it shall not cost the Government anything for a building.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Is there a report from the committee; and if so, has it been read?

Mr. PRICE. Yes, sir.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. If there is a report from the committee I hope it will be read.

Mr. PRICE. I have already stated, and will state again, that my colleague [Mr. CASWELL], who was authorized by the Committee on the Judiciary to report on this subject, was called home by a telegram in consequence of sickness in his family. He wrote to me to have his desk opened by Mr. Chancey and this bill taken out and presented to the House for action. That is the way it has come into my hands.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, the original bill will be laid on the table.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

The substitute (H. R. 9857) was read a first and second time, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. PRICE moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I call for the regular order.

MRS. CATHARINE M'CARTY—ELIZABETH LUCE.

Mr. MATSON. I rise to a privileged question, and submit the views of a minority of the Committee on Invalid Pensions on two veto messages which were referred to that committee.

Mr. HEMPHILL. Has this matter precedence of the regular business set for to-day—business of the Committee on the District of Columbia?

The SPEAKER. Leave was heretofore given for the presentation of these minority views, and they are therefore privileged. If there be no objection they will be printed in the RECORD.

There was no objection.

Views of the minority on House bill No. 5603 and the veto message of the President accompanying it.

That this soldier died in the service is not disputed; that his death was the result of his own carelessness can not be disputed; and the evidence tends to show that it was an act of very gross carelessness and recklessness that led to his death, and that it was in no way connected with his military duty. Besides this, Hon. Wayne McVeagh, then Attorney-General of the United States, on the 14th of July, 1881, gave an official opinion to Hon. J. J. Kirkwood, then Secretary of the Interior, against the right of the widow and a pension in this very case. We think the objections of the President are well taken.

Views of the minority on House bill No. 5997 and the veto message of the President.

The objection made by the President to this bill is that there could be no connection between an injury to the urethra and the gastritis of which the soldier died many years afterward. We have taken some pains to inquire into this question, and can find no respectable physicians nor any medical authority against the opinion of the President, and therefore feel compelled to say that the bill ought not to be passed, and that the objections of the President ought to be sustained.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT GALVESTON, TEX.

Mr. CRAIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask to make a personal explanation.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas asks leave to make a brief personal explanation. He will proceed if there be no objection.

Mr. CRAIN. Mr. Speaker, on yesterday, when the bill amendatory of the act providing for the construction of a public building at Galveston, Tex., was under consideration I stated, in response to inquiries propounded by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BURROWS] and the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN], that the increase of the limit of cost would amount to $125,000. Within five minutes after the bill had passed the House, while on my way to the Senate Chamber to communicate the fact of its passage to the Senators from Texas, I discovered upon examination of the bill that I had overlooked the fact that there was in it a provision that the limit should be $250,000, being $125,000 more than the amount provided for in the law exclusive of the cost of site. Now the site has already been purchased at a cost of $30,000, the title is vested in the Government, and the building is in process of construction. But I overlooked, I repeat, the fact that this sum of $30,000 ought to have been added to my estimate of $125,000, making the increase $155,000 instead of $125,000.

Immediately upon discovering my error, and within twenty minutes after the passage of the bill, I communicated the facts to the Speaker of the House, went to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] and explained the matter to him and also to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BURROWS], proposing to them both that if they had any objection to urge to the passage of the bill on account of the increased appropriation I would ask unanimous consent to have it recalled from the Senate and reconsidered in the House in order that the objection might be made, or I would ask the Senators from my State to have stricken out the $30,000 which I had overlooked. Both those gentlemen stated that they were satisfied.

Now, in justice to this House and to myself I make this statement, and propose that if any gentleman who was present yesterday when I called the bill up for consideration will say that he would have objected to it if I had not made the mistake to which I refer, I will ask unanimous consent to have the bill recalled and reconsidered.

Mr. HOLMAN. I only wish to say that so far as I am informed the statement of the gentleman from Texas is absolutely correct, and under the circumstances I did not think it necessary to call the attention of the House to the matter.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I call for the regular order.

Mr. WINANS. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WINANS] rise?

Mr. WINANS. To make a privileged report.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I object, unless it has preference to the business of the Committee on the District of Columbia, which was set for to-day.

Mr. ROWELL. I call for the reading of the order fixing District business for to-day.

The SPEAKER. If objection is made, the report which the gentleman from Michigan desires to present is not in order.

QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE.

The SPEAKER. There is a matter of the highest privilege which was pending at the adjournment yesterday, and which now comes up as a matter of course unless the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. LOWRY] who presented it waives it. Does the gentleman from Indiana desire to call it up this morning?

Mr. LOWRY. I desire to call up that resolution for action now.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana calls up the resolution which was pending at the adjournment yesterday afternoon.

Mr. HEMPHILL. To-day was by special order set apart for business of the Committee on the District of Columbia, and the understanding was that we should not lose any portion of the day except by unanimous consent. I think the RECORD will so show.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would not allow any new matter of privilege to come before the House this morning if objected to; but this is a question of privilege relating to the proceeding of the House itself, which comes over from the adjournment yesterday. The Chair thinks that it will take but a few moments to dispose of it.

Mr. LOWRY. Mr. Speaker, I desire to say, having made some inquiry in reference to the circumstances connected with the substitution of one resolution and preamble for another in the RECORD, I have every reason to believe it will prove to be the result of a mistake or an accident, by reason of the wrong paper having been transmitted to the Printing Office, or rather a resolution which had been offered by the gentleman himself on last Monday was on the files of the Printing Office when the report of the proceedings went over, referring the foreman of the RECORD to the foreman of printing for the report of the committee, but the only paper he had there was the resolution which had been introduced by the gentleman on Monday. I deem it proper, however, to have that inquiry made as contemplated by the resolution, and I call for the previous question.

The SPEAKER. As a matter of justice to the Official Reporters of the House the Chair will cause a letter from the Public Printing Office to be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

GOVERNMENT PRINTING OFFICE,
OFFICE OF CONGRESSIONAL RECORD,
Washington, D. C., July 14, 1886.

DEAR Mr. McELHONE: In reply to your note of this date, asking why the matter which appears on pages 7217 and 7218 was printed instead of Mr. LOWRY's report, I have to say that his report was not in the office last night, and finding this and nothing else on the subject I supposed it was what was called for in the copy. Mr. LOWRY's report was not received until this afternoon.

Yours, truly,
AVEN PEARSON,
Foreman Congressional Record.

J. J. McELHONE, Esq.,
Chief Corps of Official Reporters,
House of Representatives.

Mr. GLOVER. May I be heard?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana has demanded the previous question.

Mr. GLOVER. I hope the House will vote down the demand for the previous question. I should like to address some remarks to the gentleman from Indiana by way of thanks for the honor of his public mention.

Mr. LOWRY. I did not hear the remark of the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. GLOVER. I will give it to you.

Mr. LOWRY. I desire to say if the gentleman from Missouri supposes there is any cause for him to make any statement or explanation I have no inclination to keep him from doing so.

The SPEAKER. How much time does the gentleman yield?

Mr. LOWRY. I will yield to him for three minutes.

Mr. GLOVER. I want ten minutes; I can not get through short of ten minutes.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Give it to him.

Several MEMBERS. Let him have it.

Mr. LOWRY. Be kind enough to repeat your remark.

Mr. GLOVER. I desire ten minutes. I do not feel able to deal with the gentleman from Indiana short of ten minutes.

Several MEMBERS. Give it to him.

Mr. LOWRY. I do not know what is intended by this observation of the gentleman, but I am willing he shall have full opportunity to make any statement he desires to make, reserving such time as may be necessary.

The SPEAKER. How much time does the gentleman yield?

Mr. LOWRY. Ten minutes, if he desires it.

Mr. GLOVER. Mr. Speaker, not having been in the House when the resolution was called up, a fact I have no doubt which was the result of contrivance rather than of accident, I learned this morning through the kind attention of a friend——

Mr. ZACH. TAYLOR. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. ZACH. TAYLOR. There is so much confusion in the House we are unable to hear what is going on.

The SPEAKER. Gentlemen will resume their seats and preserve order. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. GLOVER] will proceed.

Mr. GLOVER. I say, Mr. Speaker, under those circumstances I learned by accident this morning, through the information kindly extended by Mr. TAULBEE, that an effort had been made in this House to adopt, not by inadvertence, but by design, and in my absence to persuade the House I had been guilty of interpolation of the RECORD.

The fact that the resolution had been misprinted was called to my attention when I read the RECORD, and naturally as any man would, actuated by an honest desire and not by a malicious purpose, I went to the first source I could reach to make inquiry thereupon. The reporter at that desk told me it was a mistake. I stepped to Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky and asked his explanation.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. The gentleman does not mean Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky, but Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas.

Mr. GLOVER. Yes, I intended to say Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. We concluded the gentleman from Indiana must by accident have incorporated it in his report.

Now, I say if the gentleman from Indiana had not been actuated by a feeling unworthy a member upon this floor he would have made the same inquiry and have arrived at the same conclusion; and since the gentleman from Indiana, as I understand it, disclaims any imputation upon me in that connection and does not charge or insinuate that I have been guilty of fraud, he will take no exception to the remark I make that any man who would make that statement, since the remark does not apply to a member of this House, is a blackguard and a liar.

Mr. LOWRY. Mr. Speaker, on the third day——

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. Will the gentleman from Indiana yield to me for a moment?

Mr. LOWRY. I will yield to the gentleman from Arkansas five minutes, if he desires it.

Mr. GLOVER. Before the gentleman proceeds permit me a moment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has four minutes of his time remaining.

Mr. GLOVER. I see that there are two resolutions which were offered by the gentleman from Indiana on yesterday. I did not see but one resolution when I first rose, and I desire to be heard for a moment upon the other one.

The SPEAKER. Both resolutions were offered by the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. GLOVER. I did not observe the first one when I spoke a moment or two ago.

Mr. BLAND. I understand the gentleman from Indiana withdrew the first.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understood the gentleman from Indiana to withdraw the resolution in relation to the report.

Mr. BLAND. Not at all. There were two separate and distinct resolutions, embodying two separate and distinct propositions. One related to a colloquy which had taken place some time before between the gentleman from Indiana and the gentleman from Missouri. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HATCH] suggested that Mr. GLOVER was absent, and that the resolution ought not to be considered in his absence. The gentleman from Indiana thereupon withdrew the resolution entirely. The last resolution, the pending one, is simply an inquiry whether or not the RECORD was changed by accident or mistake or otherwise. That resolution was not withdrawn, and is the pending proposition.

The SPEAKER. But as the Chair understands there are two distinct charges made in the RECORD as embodied in the resolutions, one in relation to the remarks of the gentleman from Missouri and the other in relation to the substitution of the paper which was printed in the RECORD instead of the report of the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. BLAND. But the resolution in reference to the remarks of the gentleman from Missouri has been withdrawn. It was originally proposed, but was withdrawn by the gentleman who introduced it and the latter resolution substituted. This substitution of the paper which has been printed in the RECORD for the paper that should have been printed purports to change the whole action of the House. It has got there evidently by a mistake, but how it got there should be explained.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana on yesterday offered two resolutions, one of them relating to the remarks of the gentleman from Missouri, which it was alleged had been interpolated in the RECORD; but on being requested to withhold that because the gentleman from Missouri was not present, as the Chair understood, the gentleman from Indiana consented that it should take that course. The Chair did not understand at the time that it was intended to be withdrawn, but simply passed over for the time being.

Mr. BLAND. I so understood.

Mr. HOLMAN. My colleague distinctly in terms withdrew the first resolution.

Mr. LOWRY. That is correct.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands now that that resolution is withdrawn?

Mr. LOWRY. Yes, sir.

Mr. BLAND. The RECORD shows it.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana demands the previous question upon the adoption of the resolution.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. The gentleman from Indiana has yielded to me.

Mr. LOWRY. I yield to the gentleman from Arkansas three or four minutes.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. I want to explain, Mr. Speaker, in connection with the remark of the gentleman from Missouri a few moments since, that he called my attention to the error in the RECORD as published on yesterday. My attention was not called to the error in detail, but to the first line, in large type, in the second column on page 7218, where it says:

The previous question was ordered upon the adoption of the report.

It all hinged upon the word "report" instead of the word "resolution," which word should have been used in that connection. All I saw by glancing over the column without reading it was what appears to be an abstract of title to certain property in Saint Louis, and that is spoken of as a "report," as I have just stated. I remarked that I had supposed Judge LOWRY would make a short report; but I was surprised to see that he had passed it with all that matter; but I did not examine it or the resolution printed in the RECORD at the end of this matter. I now look and find the resolution printed to be entirely different from the resolution agreed to by the committee—wholly different. How it got into the RECORD I am of course entirely unable to say. The present resolution does not meet my views at all. I was entirely ignorant of the resolution as printed in the RECORD; and when I spoke on yesterday to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. GLOVER] I had reference only to what I supposed was but a trivial error, namely, the substitution of the word "report" instead of the word "resolution."

I suggested to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. GLOVER], supposing the resolution printed was the resolution adopted, that if he would go to Mr. McElhone, our Chief Reporter, he would correct the word "report" and insert "resolution." Going further, in the subsequent report of the proceedings I found the clerical error was not repeated, and that instead of its being said the "report" was adopted, it properly said the "resolution" was adopted.

To sum up, the resolution incorporated in the RECORD is entirely unlike the one adopted by the committee, and, I presume, put in by the chairman, and I am wholly unable to account for how this matter got into the RECORD, and I have not attempted to explain it. I pass no judgment on it now.

Mr. GLOVER. I desire to ask the gentleman from Arkansas a question. Do you not recollect in our conversation having surmised that the abstract of title might have been incorporated by Mr. LOWRY in the report?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. I have so stated.

Mr. LOWRY. I feel quite sensible, Mr. Speaker, that this matter is being altogether unduly magnified. On the 30th June last a motion was made by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. GLOVER] to discharge the Committee on Expenditures in the Treasury Department from the consideration of a resolution which he had had referred to that committee. I resisted that motion, stating to the House that an understanding had been arrived at between the gentleman from Missouri and myself as to the consideration of the resolution being proceeded with by the committee at a given time, and that that was satisfactory to the gentleman from Missouri and that he assented to it. He then came before the House to move the discharge of the committee before the time arrived at which it was understood the resolution was to be considered. The gentleman controverted the statement I made. I undertook to say to the House that I did not deem the matter of sufficient importance to enter into any controversy with him about it; but if I had any further intercourse with him I would take occasion to have some other party present at the interview. On scanning the RECORD I found there had been appended to the colloquy which took place between the gentleman and myself the further statement——

Mr. GLOVER. I rise to a point of order. The gentleman stated that resolution was withdrawn or I would have noticed it effectually when on the floor. Now he is speaking to it.

Mr. LOWRY. The gentleman has imputed to me personal motives in the introduction of the resolution.

Mr. GLOVER. Which I do not disclaim.

Mr. LOWRY. As bearing on that question I am referring to the circumstances connected with the origin of this whole affair. Now, on scanning in the RECORD the report of the colloquy which took place between the gentleman and myself——

Mr. GLOVER. I rise to a question of order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the gentleman from Indiana has a right to state the circumstances under which he offered the second resolution.

Mr. GLOVER. I wish to say on the point of order, if the gentleman desires to dwell on that proposition, I desire to have the resolution introduced and passed, and not have it discussed in this shape.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana has a right to state the circumstances under which he has offered the resolution now before the House. Of course if he makes reflections on the gentleman from Missouri the point of order can be made.

Mr. LOWRY. I found inserted in that report as contained in the RECORD a statement following the remarks made by myself coming from the gentleman from Missouri that if a third party had been present at the interview in question I would not have ventured to have made the statement on the floor.

Mr. GLOVER. Which I reiterate.

Mr. LOWRY. Knowing that was not spoken on the floor of the House I repaired to the Printing Office——

Mr. GLOVER. I make the point of order. I did not understand the gentleman from Indiana when I met him on the floor. I understand him now.

Mr. LOWRY. I hope the gentleman from Missouri will not be permitted to interrupt me.

Mr. GLOVER. I hope the gentleman will not be permitted to go on in this line of discussion.

The SPEAKER. There was a resolution charging that those words were interpolated in the report; but the statement would have no connection with the resolution now pending.

Mr. LOWRY. The gentleman imputed to me personal feelings toward himself. I am now explaining to the House that I have been animated by motives of patience, forbearance, and charity to the gentleman instead of being animated by any feeling of ill-will and malice or anything akin to it, so far as the gentleman is concerned. I wish simply to state what transpired.

Mr. GLOVER. I insist on the point of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri insists that the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. LOWRY] shall not be permitted, in discussing a resolution which relates to the correction of the RECORD in one particular, to charge that matter has been improperly interpolated in the RECORD on another occasion.

Mr. LOWRY. Now, Mr. Speaker, my purpose is to show that I was not actuated by personal feeling——

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands the gentleman's purpose, but the point of order is made that that purpose can only be executed by introducing a resolution for the investigation of the question whether or not the alleged interpolation was improperly made in the RECORD, and that it is not proper to discuss that question on this resolution.

Mr. LOWRY. May I not be permitted to respond to the charge which the gentleman has made that I am animated by personal ill-will to him?

The SPEAKER. Of course the gentleman has a right to disclaim any such purpose, but the Chair thinks he has no right to make another charge against the gentleman from Missouri in discussing the resolution which is now before the House, having previously withdrawn the resolution which made that charge.

Mr. LOWRY. My purpose, however, was to show that I have been forbearing with the gentleman from Missouri and that I have not been actuated by personal feeling.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has a right to disclaim any personal feeling.

Mr. LOWRY. Now, Mr. Speaker, I say that upon finding that statement in the RECORD——

Mr. GLOVER. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a point of order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has already decided that the gentleman from Indiana has no right on this resolution to discuss another matter, the resolution in relation to that matter having been withdrawn.

Mr. MILLS. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Indiana may make his statement in whatever way he pleases, and then that the gentleman from Missouri be allowed to reply in his own way.

Mr. GLOVER. I object.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I object to any more statements. If these gentlemen wish to settle this matter let them settle it outside. [Laughter.]

Mr. GLOVER. I accept that amendment.

Mr. LOWRY. Now, Mr. Speaker, I took no notice of that matter in the RECORD——

Mr. GLOVER. I call the gentleman to order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is not out of order.

Mr. GLOVER. He is still "harping on my daughter."

Mr. LOWRY. I presume the House will be gratified to learn that the gentleman has a daughter. [Laughter.]

Mr. GLOVER. It was the gentleman from Indiana's daughter, not mine.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana will proceed in order.

Mr. LOWRY. Now, Mr. Speaker, for two whole weeks I took no notice of the interpolation in the RECORD, but upon this other matter appearing in the RECORD yesterday morning——

Mr. GLOVER. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a point of order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has already stated that the only question now before the House is the resolution offered by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. LOWRY] to inquire into the circumstances under which a certain alleged report was printed in the RECORD of yesterday. It is competent for the gentleman to show that such a resolution ought to be passed; it is competent to show, if the gentleman can, that that publication was improperly made; it is proper also for the gentleman to explain, if he desires to do so, that he has no personal feeling in the matter; but the other alleged interpolation of certain words in the RECORD on a former occasion is not now before the House.

Mr. LOWRY. Mr. Speaker, when my attention was called to the fact of the appearance of this lengthy preamble and resolution which was printed in the RECORD of yesterday morning in place of the report of the committee I immediately addressed myself to making inquiry in reference to it. I consulted with several members of the committee, the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE], the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. ZACH. TAYLOR], and the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BLAND]. All of those gentlemen were consulted by me, and I also spoke with the Chief Reporter of the House in regard to the matter. My colleagues upon the committee all concurred in the opinion that there ought to be an investigation with a view to ascertaining how this extraordinary occurrence had taken place, for it was a matter of amazement to each and every one of them that any such publication should have been substituted for the original report of the committee. I took the precaution of consulting these gentlemen, and the resolution introduced by me yesterday was submitted to each and every one of them and was introduced with their concurrence and approbation. Now it has been said by the individual who represents one of the Saint Louis districts that the opportunity was sought to introduce that resolution at a time when he was not present in the House.

The gentleman seems to have a consciousness of his own presence which is sufficient, I think, for the entire balance of the House. I must be permitted, however, to say that I was entirely unaware of the fact that that august presence did not honor one of the seats in this Hall at the time the resolution was introduced, and when my attention was called to the fact by his colleague [Mr. HATCH] it will be seen by the report in the RECORD that I immediately indicated my purpose to withdraw that resolution which had some reference, and a very significant reference, as the House will see when I bring to its attention the actual condition of the RECORD in that particular——

Mr. GLOVER. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. LOWRY. I decline to be interrupted, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. GLOVER. I rise to a point of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. GLOVER. I want to know whether it is in order for the gentleman from Indiana, having deemed it more prudent to withdraw his insinuation, to now insist upon it?

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not know what the gentleman is insisting upon.

Mr. GLOVER. I doubt whether the gentleman from Indiana himself knows either.

Mr. LOWRY. Immediately following the reading of the resolution yesterday the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HATCH], as the RECORD sets forth, said:

I suggest to the gentleman from Indiana that my colleague [Mr. GLOVER] is not present, and it is proper of course that he should be here before action is taken upon such a resolution.

The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BLAND] then addressed the Chair, and the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HENDERSON] suggested that the resolution be read and go into the RECORD, so that it could be seen. Then the report continues:

Mr. LOWRY. I will withdraw that resolution for the present and offer the other one—

Which is the resolution now under consideration. Yet the gentleman, judging of the motives of others by the standard by which he is actuated, assumes that my inclination was to press that personal resolution upon the consideration of the House at a time when he was absent from his seat, although immediately upon my attention being called to the fact that he was absent the resolution was not only laid over but was withdrawn.

So far as the pending resolution is concerned I will simply repeat that I have reason to believe the resolution which was substituted for the original report of the committee was inserted in the RECORD purely by accident; and I anticipate that such will be found to be the fact upon inquiry being made, if one is instituted, by the Committee on Rules. In common with my colleagues on the committee I deem it proper, however, under all the circumstances, that an investigation should be had and the facts reported to the House.

The gentleman has made an allusion which, although I did not fully comprehend it, was evidently intended by him as personal to myself. I have regretted exceedingly, Mr. Speaker, to be obliged to trouble the House with any question of this kind. It is an unwelcome duty that has been thrust upon me in connection with this matter. I repeat what I said upon another occasion—that if I sought an altercation with any gentleman on this floor I think I should select some other than the Representative from Missouri. I think, Mr. Speaker, I should select game worthy of the candle. If I understand the character of the expression——

Mr. DANIEL. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a point of order. I ask whether the gentleman's language is parliamentary.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that these personal allusions are all out of order whenever the point is made.

Mr. LOWRY. I beg to ask my friend from Virginia [Mr. DANIEL] whether he heard the remark of the gentleman from Missouri?

Mr. DANIEL. No, sir, I did not; my suggestion is made without reference to anything which may have been said by any one else.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state that if a point of order had been made upon any personal allusion of the gentleman from Missouri the Chair would undoubtedly have sustained the point. The question before the House is not a personal matter, but a matter affecting the House itself.

Mr. LOWRY. I deem it due to myself and the House to withdraw anything that I may have uttered which may be regarded as in the least degree unparliamentary.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will proceed in order.

Mr. LOWRY. Recurring again, however, to the personal allusion of the gentleman from Missouri, as to which he was not called to order by the gentleman from Virginia (nor did I myself deem it important to do so), I have only to say that the language which has fallen from him is characteristic, I apprehend, of those who are in the habit of associating with people accustomed to the use of such expressions.

Mr. GLOVER. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. LOWRY] is still entitled to the floor.

Mr. GLOVER. Is the gentleman completely done?

Mr. LOWRY. Now, Mr. Speaker, I feel that some apology is due to the House for occupying so much time as has been occupied with this matter. There are some gentlemen who seem to be irrepressible in their pursuit of those against whom they entertain feelings of personal dislike. There are others who are irrepressible in the way of being conspicuous doing mischief upon all possible occasions. There has been a description given of a character of this kind, to the effect that he was like a flea, a fly, and a flitch of bacon: Like a flea, he was on everybody's back; like a fly, he was in everybody's broth; and like a flitch of bacon, he would never have his deserts until he was hung up. I regret to say there are some gentlemen who have membership in this House who, I think, will answer that description.

I yield to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. ZACH. TAYLOR].

Mr. HEMPHILL. I call the previous question on this resolution. I will state, Mr. Speaker, that on Monday last the House by unanimous consent set apart this day for business of the Committee on the District of Columbia. We have a great many matters of importance to attend to, and as these personal explanations have been made on both sides I trust that this matter may be brought to a close.

Mr. GLOVER. There are four minutes of my time remaining.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. HEMPHILL] demands the previous question. The gentleman from Missouri reserved four minutes of his time, but any gentleman who has the floor in his own right can call the previous question at any time.

Mr. GLOVER (while the Speaker was proceeding to put the question on ordering the previous question). I merely desire, in closing this matter, to say I agree with the gentleman from Indiana that the next time he starts out on this tack he will select somebody else as the object of it.

Mr. ZACH. TAYLOR. I hope the House will vote that down. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

The SPEAKER. The regular order is demanded. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. JOHNSON] asks to make a personal explanation.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I object.

The SPEAKER. The ayes seem to have it.

Mr. ZACH. TAYLOR. I call for a division.

The SPEAKER. The question is on ordering the previous question.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 95, noes 59.

Mr. ZACH. TAYLOR demanded tellers.

Tellers were ordered, 41 (more than one-fifth) voting therefor.

Mr. HEMPHILL and Mr. ZACH. TAYLOR were appointed tellers.

Mr. ZACH. TAYLOR. I ask, Mr. Speaker, by unanimous consent to offer an amendment, which will, I think, excite no debate. I will then withdraw my objection to ordering the previous question.

The SPEAKER. The previous question might be ordered if the amendment is to come in by unanimous consent.

Mr. KING. Is that in order?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent.

Mr. PETTIBONE. Have the proposed amendment read.

Mr. BLAND. Let it be read. It is a proper amendment to the pending resolution.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection the Clerk will read it.

Mr. ZACH. TAYLOR. I move by unanimous consent the following amendment to the pending resolution.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read it, after which the Chair will ask for unanimous consent.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by adding:

"Resolved further, That that portion of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of date July 14, 1886, beginning with, and including, first line on top of right-hand column, page 7217, and ending with the line preceding the line on page 7218 which reads: 'The previous question was ordered upon the adoption of the report,' near the middle of the right-hand column, page 7218, shall be expunged."

Mr. GLOVER. I object, as that is the matter to be investigated.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri objects, and the amendment is not before the House.

Mr. ZACH. TAYLOR. I withdraw my objection to ordering the previous question.

The SPEAKER. The ayes have it and the previous question is ordered.

The resolution was adopted.

Mr. LOWRY moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

WASHINGTON CABLE RAILWAY COMPANY.

Mr. HEMPHILL. Under instructions of the Committee on the District of Columbia, I propose to take up for consideration the bill (H. R. 8976) to incorporate the Washington Cable Railway Company of the District of Columbia; and I therefore move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar for the purpose of taking it up for consideration; and pending that motion I move that all general debate be closed in one minute after its consideration has been resumed.

Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois. Has the committee reported it favorably or adversely?

Mr. COBB. I move the time be extended to two hours.

The SPEAKER. One at a time.

Mr. COBB. This is an important bill and ought not to be considered hastily.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana moves to amend the motion of the gentleman from South Carolina to extend the general debate to two hours.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I would like to make a statement by unanimous consent. I know this is not debatable.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. IKE H. TAYLOR. I object.

The SPEAKER. The question recurs on the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana to the motion of the gentleman from South Carolina to extend the general debate to two hours.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 42, noes 95.
Mr. COBB. No quorum has voted.
Mr. COBB and Mr. HEMPHILL were appointed tellers.
The House again divided; and there were—ayes 22, noes 133.
So Mr. COBB's amendment was rejected.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

Mr. DANIEL. Mr. Speaker, I ask by unanimous consent to make a simple personal explanation.
There was no objection.
Mr. DANIEL. I would have made no point of order in reference to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. LOWRY], when he was speaking, if I had been aware previous personalities had been indulged in.

WASHINGTON CABLE RAILWAY COMPANY.

The SPEAKER. The question recurs on the motion of the gentleman from South Carolina to close general debate on the bill (H. R. 8976) to incorporate the Washington Cable Railway Company of the District of Columbia.
The motion was agreed to.
The question recurred on the motion to go into committee; and it was agreed to.
The House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, Mr. MCMILLIN in the chair.
The CHAIRMAN. The House resumes the consideration of the bill (H. R. 8976) to incorporate the Washington Cable Railway Company of the District of Columbia, and by order of the House all general debate is closed in one minute.
Mr. HEMPHILL. Mr. Chairman, this bill was fully discussed by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HEARD], who had it in charge and explained its provisions to the House, a few weeks ago, and was replied to by the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr GIBSON]. I do not think it is important to discuss it here again in a general way, and as the bill will be read by sections and certain amendments offered, it will give every opportunity for gentlemen to express their views upon it. I move, therefore, that the bill now be read by sections for debate and amendments.
The first section of the bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That William M. Galt, Albert W. Fletcher, Charles Payson, Lawrence Gardner, James E. Fitch, William Dickson, Charles J. Bell, William W. Dudley, A. T. Britton, O. G. Staples, E. K. Johnson, and B. H. Warner, all of Washington, D. C.; William Hanway, of Maryland; John R. Read, of Philadelphia; William Gladding, Charles E. Henry, and George M. Roads, of Pennsylvania; and John W. MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. RICHARDSON took the chair as Speaker pro tempore.
A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment the bill (H. R. 1062) for the relief of Ernest H. Wardwell.
The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (H. R. 8974) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government, and further insisted on its disagreement to certain amendments; and asked a conference with the House on said amendments.
The Committee of the Whole resumed its session.

WASHINGTON CABLE RAILWAY COMPANY.

Mr. HOPKINS. I offer the amendment I send to the desk.
The Clerk read as follows:

In line 95, after the word "railways," add:
"And provided further, That in case of the construction of said railway along any of the streets above named, such railway shall either first obtain the consent of the owners of the property along and abutting upon such street or streets, or pay such owner or owners a just compensation for the injury or damage to said property accruing by reason of the construction of said railway along such street or streets.
"The supreme court of the District of Columbia shall have jurisdiction to try and determine the question of such injury or damage; and in determining such question and ascertaining the amount of compensation therefor, either party to such proceeding may have the same ascertained and determined by a jury as in common-law cases in said court."

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. I offer the following amendment to the amendment.
The Clerk read as follows:

Provided further, That if the construction of such road adds to the value of the property, that the owners thereof shall pay to said corporation a sum equal to such increase.

Mr. CURTIN. Before passing from that section I want to offer an amendment as to a change of route, and have read a communication bearing upon the subject.
The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will be recognized for that purpose later on. At present two amendments are pending.
Mr. COBB. I wish to offer a substitute for the amendment, if in order.
The CHAIRMAN. There is an amendment and an amendment to the amendment pending. When the amendment has been perfected a substitute will be in order.
Mr. HOPKINS. Mr. Chairman, when this subject was before the House the other day the question was asked the gentleman who had charge of it, Mr. HEARD, if any provision had been made in the bill looking to the protection of the property-owners along the line of the proposed road as indicated in the amendment I have sent to the Clerk. He said no provision of that kind was in the bill, and justified that position by stating in his remarks to the House that the property-owners to the number of several thousand along the proposed route had given their consent to the construction of this road. Now, if the property-owners along the line of the road have given their consent to its construction, and have no desire to ask any damages, no harm is done by the adoption of the amendment, but any person who has not given his consent and whose property is damaged should have the right to recover a just compensation for such damage.
Any person, Mr. Chairman, who has had experience with railroads in general, or with street railroads in particular, I care not whether they be of the character of this proposed road or the ordinary horse street railways, knows that they do injure certain kinds of property along their lines. In a broad street like Pennsylvania avenue, with business houses on either side of it, perhaps no direct injury would result from the construction of the road. But anybody whose attention has been drawn to the subject knows that if a street is narrow, and a residence street, a road of this character will materially damage property along its line. Now, I see by an examination of the plan proposed by the incorporators of this road that it is designed to go along many streets where the width of the roadway does not exceed 30 feet between the curbs. They propose still further, Mr. Chairman, to build a double track along many of the streets, and that track will absorb over 15 feet of the 30, and right in the middle of the street. It does not require much of mathematical knowledge to determine the fact that upon neither side of the street after the construction of such a double-track road through its center will there be room for a carriage or vehicle to stand in front of a residence along such street.
Now, any man who is interested more in the protection of public and private property than in granting franchises to corporations of this kind ought not to object to voting for an amendment of the character I have offered. In the discussion of this question the other day the gentleman who had charge of the bill seemed to think it was a contest between the horse-railroads now existing and that which is proposed to be built.

So far as I am concerned, sir, I am not interested directly or indirectly in the present railroads, nor am I interested in the proposed one; but I believe just what every text-book that has ever treated of private corporations states, that the granting of these franchises is not for the individual benefit of private incorporators, but the primary and great object is the benefit of the public.

The gentlemen who are demanding this bill and are eager for the establishment of this proposed road seem to forget there is a public. They seem to forget that the property-owners in the city of Washington have some rights which should be protected in this case. They seem to think that all that is necessary is for Congress to vote a franchise. And the moment it passes both Houses of Congress and is signed by the President it is worth a million dollars, and that, too, without the expenditure of a cent in the actual construction of the road by the corporators.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. HOPKINS. Yes, sir.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. Does the gentleman know of the condition he proposes having been annexed to any charter of this kind in any city in all the past, in New York, Chicago, Cincinnati, or anywhere else?

Mr. HOPKINS. I am glad of the opportunity of answering the gentleman from Indina. At common law the rights I propose to protect by this amendment are ignored, and the reason is because these corporations and the class of rights proposed in this bill were unknown at the time of the adoption of the common law in this country. But I will state for the information of the gentleman from Indiana that so great is the evil I propose to provide against in this amendment, and so great had it grown in the State of Illinois, that in 1870 when the people sent their delegates to the capital of the State to draught a new constitution one of the important things placed in the constitution was the right which is contemplated in the amendment I have submitted.

Mr. COBB. This bill comes before the House asking for great franchises which are perpetual. The tendency of the construction of this line of street railway will be to injure property-holders along its road, no matter whether corporate or individual property-holders. This franchise is a valuable one. It is sought by the gentlemen whose names appear in the bill for the purpose of accumulating large wealth in the future. I believe the spirit of the amendment is right and proper. This House ought never in my judgment to pass a bill to grant such rights and franchises as are provided in this bill without requiring the corporation to compensate those who are injured by the construction of their road. It may be contended that the construction of this line of street railway will be of service to the public. That may be true. It may be a great convenience to the public. But these gentlemen who come here and ask this franchise are not asking it in the interest of the public. They are asking it in their own interest. Their object is to accumulate large wealth out of this charter; and they will probably do so in the future. Why, then, should they not be compelled to compensate the property-holders along their line where the construction of the road injures private property? To say it will not injure private property is to say what no one can believe. It will injure property.

I have here a remonstrance, coming, as I am informed, from every property-holder along one of the streets to be traversed by this railway against its construction. But I go further. I insist that incorporators under such circumstances as these ought to be required to compensate the public or to pay to the public for their franchise what it is reasonably worth. If we grant these franchises to these men we give them in perpetuity what will be worth millions to them. It builds up a monopoly that we ought not by legislation to encourage. We ought on the other hand to discourage as far as practicable for the public good the accumulation of large wealth in the hands of a few; and one way by which we can prevent the accumulation of vast wealth is, when we grant franchises like this, to require corporators to return to the public a portion of the value of their franchise. I will, at the proper time, offer an amendment requiring these corporators to do so. It may be regarded as a new thing in legislation of this character, but I submit it is the only way in which we can prevent great monopolies, not only of power, but of money, in this country. When we grant to a body of men a franchise which will result ultimately in the accumulation of capital by them, we should require them to return to the public some of the value of the great franchise we grant them, so as to prevent them from accumulating vast wealth, enabling them to control and domineer over the public. This is one of the cases, I think, where such a provision is right and proper. These men ought not to have this great franchise without compensating the public in some way or other. They should also be required to compensate the property-holders for injuries they sustain, as the amendment provides.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. Concerning the question of compensating the owners of property along the line of this proposed road, I wish to say that the effect of this amendment if adopted is to kill this bill. The experience of cable roads in every city where they now exist is that instead of being a detriment they are a benefit to the property adjoining their lines. This fight against any competitor prevails in all the large cities. I have seen it in my own city.

I was a member of the municipal assembly there for four years, and I never knew of any case where a new company proposed to come in and compete with an old one, whether it was a competing gas company or a competing railway company, that the same miserable makeshift objections were not raised against it. The plain question is, Will you allow this new line of railway to come in and compete with the present monopoly which controls the streets of this city?

I have seen all the cable roads from New York to California, and in every instance they give better service than the horse railroads. They remove a nuisance from the streets; they guarantee unimpeded travel; they preserve the streets from wear; they give more rapid transit; they are in the line of the improvements of to-day, and the man who now stands up and opposes the cable road places himself in the same position as those who opposed the original introduction of railroads. It is the moss-back, reactionary element, which gets in the way of progress of every kind, whether it is a cable road, electricity, or anything else suggested by the growth of intelligence. I hope this amendment will be voted on, and that the House will stand up for this bill and pass it. I reserve the remainder of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has two minutes remaining.

Mr. PAYSON was recognized and yielded his time to Mr. HOPKINS.

Mr. HOPKINS. Mr. Chairman, in answer to the gentleman from Missouri I wish to say that this amendment is not offered in the interest of the existing railroad, that it is not offered in hostility to the incorporators of the proposed cable road; it is designed simply for the protection of the property-owners along the line of the proposed road.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. Will the gentleman allow a question?

Mr. HOPKINS. Yes, if you will restore me the time.

Mr. O'NEIL, of Missouri. Does the gentleman imagine that these railroads are built solely for the convenience of the property-owners along their route? They are for the benefit of the general public.

Mr. HOPKINS. Yes; but, Mr. Chairman, the only reason they ask the House to grant them this privilege is because Congress can exercise the right of eminent domain. That right as it is set forth in the law books and generally understood is to be used for the benefit of the public and not for the benefit of private incorporators, and I defy the gentleman to show where the right of eminent demain is exercised in any State for purposes like this without a provision to protect the rights of the property-owners whose property is injured by reason of the public improvement. Now, that is just what my amendment contemplates.

If this proposed road is constructed along any of the streets that are dedicated to private residences, and those residences are injured or damaged in any way by reason thereof, then this amendment provides for the impaneling of a jury and the determination of the question of damages, just as would be done in a case where a person is injured and sues for personal damages. No man, as it seems to me, can deny the justice and equity of this amendment.

Mr. PAYSON. I hope my colleague, in the time that I have given him, will explain to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BROWNE] what is the constitutional provision in our own State with reference to this question.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. I do not understand, Mr. Chairman, that the constitution of Illinois applies to the District of Columbia.

Mr. PAYSON. No, but the gentleman from Indiana challenged my colleague to show any instance where any such provision was made for the protection of the property-owners.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. I challenged him to show an instance where such a condition was made a part of the charter.

Mr. PAYSON. But this is a constitutional provision. Every corporation organized in that State is of course subject to that constitutional provision, and therefore it applies to every city and town in the State of Illinois.

Mr. HOPKINS. I will say in answer to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BROWNE] on that branch of the case that in 1870, so great had grown the evil in the State of Illinois from the granting of charters to railroads and street railroads without some such provision as is contained in this amendment, that the people of the State arose in their might and demanded protection, and when we adopted our new constitution we included in it a provision making it a part of the organic law of the State that where private property is taken or damaged by reason of any public improvement of the character contemplated in this bill just compensation shall be made to the owners of the property. The gentleman from Indiana asks why this provision in the constitution of the State of Illinois should have any bearing upon the discussion of the question here. For the reason, sir, that there is no provision in the Constitution of the United States for the protection of property-owners in the District of Columbia, and the only way in which a man's rights can be protected where his property is taken or injured by the construction of a road such as is proposed is by the adoption of an amendment of this character. In the city of Chicago the street railways are constructed subject to this condition, and so with the railways in every city throughout the State.

Mr. ROWELL. I wish to ask my colleague if he means to state that in Illinois it is made a condition precedent to granting authority for the laying down of a street railway that the parties shall go on and ascertain the damages to property where no part of the property is taken?

Mr. HOPKINS. Yes, sir.

Mr. ROWELL. The gentleman is mistaken. That is not a part of the law, and there never was such a law. But you may recover damages, not as a condition precedent, but by filing a bill showing damages.

Mr. HOPKINS. The provision of the Constitution is that private property shall not be taken or damaged for public use without just compensation; and the courts of Illinois have uniformly held that the compensation must be determined and paid before the private property is taken for public use.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I confess that I do not understand why this charter is to be embarrassed by this extraordinary provision. I assert that in this shape it is extraordinary. At common law the power of the common councils of towns and cities over the public streets was plenary. They might direct any character of improvement, and it could not work injury to the property-holder for which he could claim damages. That was the common law. It has been so adjudged by almost every court in the Union. But that rule, while it was a good one, while there should have been no innovation upon it so far as concerns the streets, has been by legislation in some particular localities somewhat qualified. For instance, in the State of Illinois if the improvement works actual damage a suit may be instituted by the property-holder and recovery had. But how is it here? You propose, as I understand this amendment, to provide as a condition precedent to the right of the corporation to occupy the street that there shall be an assessment and payment of damages. That is extraordinary. I might have, perhaps, less objection to it if it simply permitted the property-holder to institute suit in case actual damage had been committed by the construction of the road. But why make this a condition precedent?

This city is checkered all over with the tracks of your bob-tail horse-cars, in which a man pays 5 cents for standing up and having his corns tramped on the whole distance he may desire to ride.

Mr. MILLIKEN. And travels at the rate of 3 miles an hour.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. And when we propose to provide some measure of convenience for the traveling public to relieve them from this iniquitous imposition, we are asked to embarrass the measure by requiring all kinds of damages in advance of a corporation that may seek to invest its capital not only for the profit of the investors, but for the convenience of the people.

The city of Washington is not like other cities of the United States—New York, Cincinnati, Chicago, &c. Here the people of the United States pay one-half of the expense of these street improvements. Your constituency and mine pay their proportion; and, so far as I am concerned, I intend that when my constituents come here they shall be permitted to ride in some kind of vehicle which affords convenience and accommodation. They help to pay for this opportunity, and I intend they shall have it.

These horse-car tracks encumber the streets all over; the companies tear up these nice pavements and put down stones, over which the cars rattle and clatter day and night; and their roads are almost impassable to vehicles that want to pass from one side of the street to the other. The noise on these roads keeps people awake a large part of the night. And yet when we propose to construct a road which shall be convenient, which shall not interrupt the passage of the streets by vehicles, which shall not cause these nightly disturbances, there are certain gentlemen here who say it shall not be done.

Mr. HEMPHILL. Mr. Chairman, it seem to me we have had sufficient discussion on this question. I move that the committee rise for the purpose of limiting debate on this section and on amendments thereto to one minute.

Mr. HOLMAN. I suggest that the gentleman first ask unanimous consent to limit debate.

Mr. HEMPHILL. Very well; I will ask unanimous consent.

Mr. DANIEL. I would like to have a few minutes to oppose the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. HEMPHILL] asks unanimous consent to limit debate upon the section and amendments thereto to one minute.

Mr. PERKINS. Will that cut off debate on other amendments?

The CHAIRMAN. It will not cut off the offering of other amendments, but will cut off debate on them. Is there objection?

Several members objected.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I move that the committee rise for the purpose of limiting debate.

The question being taken, there were—ayes 90, noes 17.

Mr. COBB. I make the point that no quorum has voted.

The CHAIRMAN. A quorum is not required upon a motion that the committee rise. The motion is agreed to.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Before the committee rises I want to make a suggestion.

The CHAIRMAN. Nothing is in order, the committee having determined to rise.

The committee accordingly rose; and Mr. WELLBORN having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. MCMILLIN reported that the Committee of the Whole, having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 8976) to incorporate the Washington Cable Railway Company of the District of Columbia, had come to no resolution thereon.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. MCCOOK, its Secretary, announced that the Senate had passed the joint resolution (H. Res. 202) to continue the provisions of a joint resolution approved July 1, 1886, entitled "A joint resolution to provide temporarily for the expenditures of the Government."

WASHINGTON CABLE RAILWAY COMPANY.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I move that the House again resolve itself into Committee of the Whole for the consideration of House bill No. 8976, and pending that motion I move that all debate in Committee of the Whole on the first section of the bill and all amendments thereto be limited to ten minutes. On this motion I call for the previous question.

Mr. SOWDEN. I move to extend the time——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The previous question is demanded.

The question being taken on ordering the previous question, there were—ayes 108, noes 5.

Mr. COBB. No quorum.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. HEMPHILL and Mr. SOWDEN were appointed.

Mr. BROWNE, or Indiana. We may as well have the yeas and nays; it will prevent confusion. [Cries of "Oh, no!"] Gentlemen on the other side intend to filibuster.

Several MEMBERS (to Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana). Withdraw the call.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. I withdraw the call for the yeas and nays.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 160, noes 4.

So the previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question recurs on Mr. HEMPHILL'S motion that all debate on the first section of the bill and all amendments thereto be limited to ten minutes.

The motion was agreed to.

The question then recurred on Mr. HEMPHILL'S motion that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar for the purpose of further considering the bill (H. R. 8976) to incorporate the Washington Cable Railway Company of the District of Columbia.

Mr. COBB demanded a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 125, noes 5.

Mr. COBB. No quorum.

The SPEAKER pro tempore appointed as tellers Mr. COBB and Mr. HEMPHILL.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 159, noes 6.

So the motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, Mr. MCMILLIN in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee resumes the consideration of the bill (H. R. 8976) to incorporate the Washington Cable Railway Company of the District of Columbia; and by order of the House all debate on the pending paragraph and all amendments thereto will be closed in ten minutes.

Mr. HEMPHILL. If I am recognized, Mr. Chairman, I will yield for five minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. REAGAN].

Mr. REAGAN. Mr. Chairman, if the construction of this road shall result in damaging property along the line of the road, that damage has to be paid for by the railroad company for whose benefit this act of incorporation is to be passed, or it will have to be paid out of the Treasury of the United States as growing out of the action of the Government.

I do not know whether that claim could be enforced in strict law against the Government, but ultimately it would be enforced, and the Government would have to pay the damage.

Taking this view of the matter, Mr. Chairman, it seems to me only right the amendment proposed should be adopted. My view is, if that is the true construction, that along the road as built the Government should be held liable for damages done there; every house along the line of it would consider itself damaged, and the people of the country at large would be asked to pay that damage. If the railroad company had to pay the damage, and was here to contend against the local interests and get all the money it could, it would see to it that no damage should be recovered unless actual damage had been inflicted in the construction of the road.

I would, Mr. Chairman, if I had framed the amendment, make an addition to it, that the enhanced value of the property by reason of the construction of the road should be an offset against any damage which might accrue by the construction of the road. This, I take it, any court would do at all events.

The question is a simple one. I am not saying that any property will be damaged. It may be that no property will be damaged, but the property along the line of the road which is enhanced in value more than it is damaged should be compelled to pay for the damage to the extent which it has been enhanced in value.

Mr. MILLIKEN. Let me ask the gentleman from Texas a question.

Mr. REAGAN. I only have five minutes.

Mr. MILLIKEN. If it is right to pay damages for property which has been injured, should not the property which has been bettered pay for that betterment?

Mr. REAGAN. That is going a little farther than any law I know of.

Mr. MILLIKEN. We have such laws.

Mr. REAGAN. There may be such laws.

Mr. BRUMM. I ask the gentleman to yield to me for a question.

Mr. REAGAN. I have only five minutes.

Mr. BRUMM. Is it not true, as a principle of law, that property necessarily on streets is subject to any change which may be made even to vacating the streets without being subject for damages?

Mr. REAGAN. I could not undertake to say that.

Mr. BRUMM. Is not that the law?

Mr. REAGAN. It raises a question of law, of course. Now, Mr. Chairman, I wish to guard the Treasury against a raid upon it by all property-holders along the line of this road when it is constructed. There is no way to guard the Treasury against that raid but by this amendment. If the amendment is agreed to and put upon the bill, then the railroad company will take care that no damages are recovered against it.

Mr. BRAGG. Mr. Chairman, there seems to be a disposition on the part of some members of the committee to wander away from the law of this case or the law which is applicable to it. I confess I may be myself in the same error that some gentlemen on this side of the House are in; but I doubt it.

The rule of damages and liability to pay damages I do not think has been correctly stated, for the reason that there has been no distinction made in the cases. In all cases where the public have only an easement for a highway, and the lands abutting upon the highway own the fee of the road, if an additional servitude be imposed upon the highway, the lot owners upon either side have a claim for damage. But if the fee of the highway is in the public, then no damage arises for any use of that highway to the lot-owner upon either side of it. That I believe to be the law.

To make it applicable in the District of Columbia the fee of the roadway exists in the Government.

The lot-owner abuts upon the Government's land, which is the strip over which the highway runs; and therefore the use of that highway creates no claim for damage upon the part of the lot-owner abutting upon the highway.

Mr. DANIEL. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. BRAGG. Certainly.

Mr. DANIEL. Is it a fact that the fee here is in the Government?

Mr. BRAGG. That is a fact.

Mr. DANIEL. For that would settle the whole question in controversy.

Mr. HOLMAN. That is the claim, anyway.

Mr. BRAGG. We are proposing by this amendment to change the rule of damages entirely, and to make the rule applicable to a corporation which seeks to come here for the purpose of giving to the public better facilities than they have for transportation about the city.

Mr. MILLIKEN. Let me ask the gentleman from Wisconsin a question. Was this rule applied to the present corporation that now run their horse-cars on the streets of the city and give about the worst service in the country?

Mr. BRAGG. No, sir. It has never been applied to any of them, and there is no reason why there should be a distinction here for the purpose of preventing new and better facilities to the public, and by preventing it keep alive the old monopolies, which furnish their bob-tail cars in the summer with a 3-cent fare until they succeed in running off opposition, and as soon as they do run it off go back again to 5 cents.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Chairman, I think the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HOPKINS] ought not to be agreed to by the House. I concur with the statement of the gentleman from Wisconsin just made, and I add to it this proposition, that it makes no sort of difference, so far as justice to the people along the line of these streets is concerned, whether the fee of the street is in the public or in the property-owners, subject to the paramount easement of the public for a highway.

Mr. BRAGG. The fee is in the public.

Mr. GROSVENOR. That makes stronger the case in behalf of the negative of this proposition. But in either event there is no danger that there will be a failure of justice if this amendment is not adopted; and there is a certainty that there will be a failure of justice beyond any doubt if it is agreed to.

Mr. HOPKINS. Let me ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Yes, sir.

Mr. HOPKINS. If the amendment is not adopted what remedy has the property-holder?

Mr. GROSVENOR. I am coming to that. That is the whole question. In the State of New York this question has been litigated. The gentleman from Illinois is greatly mistaken when he supposes that the common law does not apply to a creature which was not in existence when the common law was adopted in this country. My friend himself was not in existence at that time, and yet nearly all of the rights that he has come to him under the common law.

Mr. HOPKINS. Does not the gentleman know that the supreme courts of Ohio and Illinois have so decided?

Mr. GROSVENOR. I know that they decided exactly the reverse in Ohio. As to what may have been decided by the supreme court of Illinois I have no knowledge. I am talking of the common-law principle which gives the property-owner the right to recover damages for any injury to his property independent of a statute. Now the court of appeals in New York, in an exactly similar case, held that the property-owners all along the line traversed by the elevated roads had a right, notwithstanding the lapse of time and the bar of the statute, to recover damages under the common law for the ordinary injury done to their property by the construction of the roads; and that right is beyond all question reserved to the people along the line of these streets. Therefore I think the amendment is well calculated only to hinder the bill and damage its passage. It is not required in the interest of the public. I want to say further that the public are interested in these streets. They own them. The paramount right to the occupation of them is in the public, and the public has a right to make such use as it sees fit to do, saving always the right to the property-owners to recover damages for the occupation of their property by act of Congress.

Mr. HOPKINS. If the common law is as you state, what harm is there in adopting the amendment I offer, which is a re-enactment, according to your own statement, of the common-law doctrine?

Mr. GROSVENOR. For the reason, as has been already stated, that these are speculative damages. They are damages that can not be ascertained before this corporation goes into the occupation of the streets. It is simply impossible that any jury can estimate the damage to the property by the mere presence in the street of a traction railroad.

The CHAIRMAN. The time for debate on the pending section and amendment thereto has expired.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. I desire to withdraw my amendment to enable the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ADAMS] to substitute another in its place.

Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois. I desire to offer as a substitute for the pending amendment the provision which is in the Chicago ordinance.

The Clerk read as follows:

At the end of section 1 insert the following:

"And said company shall be liable for all damages to the owners of property abutting upon roads, streets, highways, or public property upon or over which its said road is to be constructed which said owners may sustain by reason of the location, construction, or operation of said company's road."

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. Is this proposed as an amendment to the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HOPKINS], or as a substitute?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ADAMS] said he desired to offer it as a substitute.

Mr. HOPKINS addressed the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is not in order.

Mr. PAYSON. I ask that the substitute be read again. Owing to the confusion in the Hall it was not distinctly heard.

The proposed substitute was again read.

Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois. May I ask that the original amendment be read? I may have misunderstood the scope of it.

The amendment of Mr. HOPKINS was again read.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the substitute offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ADAMS] for the amendment offered by his colleague [Mr. HOPKINS].

Mr. EVERHART. Is an amendment to the substitute in order?

The CHAIRMAN. It is not.

The question being taken on the substitute, there were—ayes 19, noes 41.

Mr. COBB. No quorum.

The CHAIRMAN. A quorum not having voted, the Chair will appoint tellers.

Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois. Is it in order for me to withdraw my amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection it can be withdrawn.

There was no objection.

Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois. I withdraw the substitute in order to save time.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HOPKINS].

The question being taken, there were—ayes 33, noes 66.

Mr. HOPKINS. No quorum.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair appoints as tellers the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HOPKINS] and the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. HEMPHILL].

ENROLLED JOINT RESOLUTION.

The committee informally rose, and the Speaker resumed the chair.

Mr. NEECE, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found duly enrolled a joint resolution of the following title; when the Speaker signed the same.

Joint resolution (H. Res. 202) to continue the provisions of a joint resolution approved July 1, 1886, entitled "A joint resolution to provide temporarily for the expenditures of the Government."

WASHINGTON CABLE RAILWAY.

The Committee of the Whole resumed its session.

The tellers reported—ayes 66, noes 102.

So the amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. CURTIN. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk, with a memorandum attached assigning the reasons for it.

The Clerk read the amendment, as follows:

Amend section 1 as follows:

Strike out all of lines 19 to 37 inclusive, on page 2, and lines 38 to 55, and to and including word "line," in line 55 inclusive, on page 3, and insert as follows:

Commencing at the corner of Eleventh and M street southeast, thence along Eleventh to B street northeast; thence along B to Tenth street northeast; thence along Tenth to M street southeast; thence along M to Eleventh southeast, with a single track.

Also, from Tenth street northeast along B to North Capitol street; thence along North Capitol to C street northwest; thence along C to First street, with double track; along G street to Market Space, with single track; also along Indiana avenue from First street to Louisiana avenue; thence along Louisiana avenue to Market Space, with a single track along Market Space to Eighth street northwest; along Eighth to E street; thence along E to Fourteenth street northwest; thence along Fourteenth to G street; thence along G to Fifteenth street; thence along Fifteenth street to Pennsylvania avenue; thence along Pennsylvania avenue to Seventeenth street; thence along Seventeenth to G street; thence along G to Twenty-second street northwest, with double track; thence along Twenty-second to M street, and along M to Twenty-fourth street, and along Twenty-fourth to G street, and along G to Twenty-second street, with single track. Also, along M from Twenty-fourth street northwest, crossing Rock Creek Bridge to Twenty-ninth street; along Twenty-ninth to N, or Gay street, with double track, and along N or Gay to Fayette or Thirty-fifth street; along Fayette or Thirty-fifth to T or Seventh street; along T or Seventh street to High street; along High to Stoddart or Q street; along Stoddart or Q to Twenty-ninth street; along Twenty-ninth to N or Gay street, with a single track, with privilege of extending said line with double track from the corner of T or Seventh street, and Thirty-fifth or Fayette street, along the prolongation of said T street, called the New Cut road to Conduit road, and along Conduit road to to the District line.

Also, commencing at P and Water street southwest; along Water to Twelfth street; along Twelth to B street northwest, with a double track.

Also, along Twelfth from B street northwest, to the Boundary; thence along Boundary to Thirteenth street; thence along Thirteenth to B street northwest; thence along B to Twelfth street, with a single track, with privilege of extending with double track along Thirteenth street beyond Boundary to Whitney avenue and Soldier's Home, with double track.

Also, commencing at Twelfth and B northwest; along B to Sixth street; along Sixth to G street northwest, with double track.

Also, along Sixth to S street; to Eighteenth; along Eighteenth to T street; along T to Sixth street and Boundary; along Boundary to Fifth street northwest; along Fifth to G street, and along G to Sixth street, with a single track.

The Clerk read the following memorandum accompanying the amendment:

The changes to be effected by this amendment are as follows:

1. The double track on G street northwest from Twenty-seventh street to Twenty-fourth street is taken off.

2. The double track on E street from Eighth street to Sixth street is taken off.

3. The double track on C street northwest is replaced by a single track as far as First street.

4. The double track on Twenty-second street from G street to M street is replaced by a single track.

5. The single track on U or Eighth street, Georgetown, is taken up, and the single track put on T or Seventh street instead.

6. The double track on Twelfth street northwest is replaced by a single track from B street to Boundary, and a returning single track laid on Thirteenth street from Boundary to B street, with privilege of extending out Thirteenth street beyond Boundary to Soldier's Home.

7. The double track on Eighteenth street is taken off from G street to S street.

8. The double track on M street from Eighteenth to Twenty-second street is taken off.

9. A single track is laid on Indiana avenue and Louisiana avenue from First street to Market Space, and from Sixth street to Market Space on C street.

10. The double track on Sixth street from G street to Boundary is replaced by a single track, and a single track is put on Fifth street from Boundary to G street.

11. A single track is put on Twenty-fourth street from M street to G street.

These amendments take all double tracks off of streets less than 40 feet wide, and take from the route as in the bill described about 3½ miles of track.

The amendment conforms exactly to the map exhibited upon the desk, and is offered to cure objections raised to the route as laid down in bill, and to lessen the length of line and make it practicable in construction.

Mr. GAY. I rise to inquire if it is in order to offer a motion to refer this amendment and the whole measure back to the Committee on the District of Columbia? This contemplates so great a change in the route that I do not think we can understand it from merely hearing it read.

The CHAIRMAN. That might be done when the bill has been reported to the House; but such a motion is not in order in Committee of the Whole.

The question being taken on Mr. CURTIN'S amendment, it was agreed to.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I send up an amendment to come in at the end of the section, after the word "railways."

The amendment was read, as follows:

Add to the section the following:

"And said companies shall sell tickets in packages of six for 25 cents and twenty-five for $1."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MCADOO offered the following amendment:

Page 1, strike out lines 3 to 12 inclusive, and all of line 13 down to the word "to," and insert in lieu thereof the following: "The following shall be the route through which, in the District of Columbia, authority is hereby given." Also after the word "line," in line 55, insert these words: "The franchise to lay and operate this road shall, after due advertisement of not less than ten days, in at least two daily newspapers published in the city of Washington, be sold by the district commissioners of the District of Columbia to the highest bidder, and the money obtained therefrom turned into the United States Treasury for the benefit of the District of Columbia, and the successful bidder shall take the name of The Washington Cable Railway Company of the District of Columbia, on filing a proper certificate of incorporation in the office of the clerk of the supreme court of the District of Columbia."

Mr. MCADOO. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is exhausted upon this paragraph.

Mr. WILSON. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer a substitute for the amendment of the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. MCADOO].

The proposed substitute was read, as follows:

Amend section 1 by adding thereto,

"And the said Cable Railway Company, for and in consideration of the rights, privileges, and franchises granted in this act, shall, on the 1st day of July, 1888, and on each 1st day of July thereafter, pay to the Treasurer of the United States, to be used in the payment of interest on the debt of the District of Columbia guaranteed by the United States, the sum of 5 per cent. of the gross receipts of said company: Provided, also, That if default be made in the payment of the said sum for thirty days in any year after the same shall have become due, its collection may be enforced by the same remedies and processes as are provided for the collection of taxes in this act."

Mr. MCADOO. Mr. Chairman, can the committee, by unanimous consent, allow me five minutes?

Mr. BRUMM. Regular order.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection is made to the request of the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. MCADOO]. The question is on the substitute offered by the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. WILSON].

The question was taken; and there were—ayes 27, noes 67.

Mr. WILSON. No quorum.

The CHAIRMAN. The point being made that no quorum has voted, the Chair appoints the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. WILSON] and the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. MCADOO] to act as tellers.

The committee again divided; and (the point of no quorum having been withdrawn) the tellers reported—ayes 54, noes 100.

So the substitute was rejected.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer a substitute for the amendment of the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. MCADOO].

The proposed substitute was read, as follows:

And provided further, That in consideration of the valuable franchise granted herein, the said railway company shall, by its proper officers, quarterly pay to the Treasurer of the United States 20 per cent. of the gross receipts of the company received from the carrying of passengers during the preceding three months, the money so paid to the Treasurer of the United States to be reserved as a fund with which to meet and pay the current expenses of the District of Columbia.

The question was taken; and the substitute was rejected—ayes 26, noes 59.

Mr. HOLMAN offered an amendment as a substitute for the amendment offered by Mr. MCADOO.

Mr. MCADOO. Mr. Chairman, I ask that my original amendment and the proposed substitute be both read, so that the committee may understand them together.

The amendment offered by Mr. MCADOO was again read.

Mr. BRUMM. Mr. Chairman, in case that amendment should pass, would it not enable the present street railway company to buy up the franchise and thus defeat the building of this line entirely?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks that is a matter of argument.

Mr. MCADOO. The amendment gives everybody a right to bid.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the substitute proposed by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] for the amendment of the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. MCADOO].

The Clerk was proceeding to read the substitute when Mr. HOLMAN temporarily withdrew it, stating that this was not the proper point in the bill at which to offer it.

The question was taken on the amendment offered by Mr. MCADOO, and the chairman declared that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. MCADOO. I call for a division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 23, noes 6.

Mr. MCADOO. Mr. Chairman, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MCADOO. Can I have a vote in the House on this amendment by now giving notice that I desire such a vote?

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment would not be reported to the House unless it was adopted, and therefore no vote could be had upon it except by unanimous consent.

The committee again divided; and there were—ayes 24, noes 60.

Mr. MCADOO. No quorum has voted.

The CHAIRMAN. The point being made that no quorum has voted, the Chair appoints the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. MCADOO] and the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. HEMPHILL] to act as tellers.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 23, noes 88.

Mr. MCADOO. I merely wanted to test the good faith of the House about this matter. I withdraw the demand for a further count.

The CHAIRMAN. The demand for a further count being withdrawn, the amendment is rejected. The Chair may not have been sufficiently explicit in response to the parliamentary inquiry made by the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. MCADOO] a few moments ago. The Chair was correct in saying that there would be no report of this amendment to the House unless it should be adopted; but the statement should have been added that if in the House the previous question should not be ordered, the amendment might be again offered and a vote obtained upon it. But no such right would exist on the basis of any proceedings in Committee of the Whole unless the amendment were reported from the Committee of the Whole to the House as having been adopted.

Mr. SCRANTON. I move that the committee rise for the purpose of laying aside this bill and going on with other business of the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. HEMPHILL. Mr. Chairman, I desire to state that in the Committee on the District of Columbia the question of the consideration of this bill in the House was taken up, and on motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SCRANTON], who now makes this motion, it was agreed that the bill should be brought before the House in order that we might test the probability of its passage. We have not yet gone through with the first section, and there are twenty-two sections in the bill. We have about two hours and a quarter of the day remaining; and it is the opinion of those members of the committee with whom I have consulted that it is impossible to get the bill through to-day.

Mr. BRUMM. Can we not extend the time for adjournment?

Mr. HEMPHILL. We can not do it under the order of the House. There are many other bills which we think will not create any discussion, and which it is important should be passed, a number of them having come from the Senate. We do not expect to have another day assigned for the consideration of District business, and therefore if we consume the whole of to-day upon the pending bill without any possibility of its passage the time will have been absolutely wasted. Therefore I concur most heartily in the proposition of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SCRANTON] that, having given this question a fair test and having seen that we can not pass the bill, it is proper to ask the House to lay it aside in order to take up some other matter.

The CHAIRMAN. That will be a question for the House after the report of the Committee of the Whole shall be made. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SCRANTON] that the committee rise.

Mr. HOPKINS. I desire to ask the gentleman in charge of this bill what bills he proposes to take up if the House should agree to the present request.

Mr. HIESTAND. I object to any inquiry of that kind.

Mr. GROUT. The idea of fighting this bill in order to fight another is wholly unfair.

Mr. HOPKINS. When the gentleman assumes that, his assumption is entirely gratuitous.

Mr. GROUT. I do not assume it.

The question being taken on the motion of Mr. SCRANTON that the committee rise, there were—ayes 61, noes 76.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I call for tellers.

The question being taken on ordering tellers, there were 31 voting in the affirmative—not a sufficient number; and tellers were not ordered.

The CHAIRMAN. The Committee of the Whole refuses to rise.

Mr. DUNHAM. I call for the regular order.

Mr. COBB. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. —. Before the said company shall be permitted to construct any part of said road, the President of the United States shall appoint a commission of five persons, three of whom shall be officers in the Corps of Engineers of the Army, and shall include the Chief of Engineers, and two of whom shall be disinterested persons appointed from civil life, whose duty it shall be to examine into the utility and practicability of operating street railways in the city of Washington by means of the cable system, and shall report their conclusions in that behalf to the Secretary of the Interior. And said commission shall also report to the Secretary the value of the franchise created by this act, if they shall report in favor of the utility and practicability of said system as applicable to the said city of Washington, and the effect of the use of the road on the proposed lines of private property. And the said company shall within six months pay into the Treasury of the United States the sum so fixed as the value of the franchise. If said company shall fail to pay said sum within the time aforesaid the franchise hereby created shall be deemed to be forfeited, and shall thereafter, without any proceedings for forfeiture, be deemed to be null and void; and no part of said road shall be constructed until a report favorable to the utility and practicability of said system has been made. Nor shall any obligation be created by said company until said money is fully paid. Nor shall any part of said road be constructed if said report shall show that the injury to private property exceeds the value of the franchise.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. What is now the condition of this question? Is this the only amendment pending?

The CHAIRMAN. This is the only amendment pending.

Mr. PARKER. I raise the point that this is not an amendment to the pending section, but an additional section, to come in somewhere else—naturally at the end.

Mr. OWEN. That is correct; the amendment is called "Section —."

The CHAIRMAN. It could be inserted as section 2.

Mr. PARKER. But we are not yet through with section 1; and therefore this is not in order.

The CHAIRMAN. If there is no other amendment pending this is in order.

Mr. PARKER. I wish to offer another amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is recognized for that purpose. The amendment of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. COBB] will be withheld for the present.

Mr. PARKER. I move to amend by striking out "5," in line 91 of section 1, and inserting "4;" so as to reduce the rate of fare on this road to 4 cents.

Mr. COBB. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. COBB. Is the amendment to the provision I asked to be put in the bill?

The CHAIRMAN. This amendment is to the section as reported by the committee.

Mr. COBB. What becomes of my amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. This is an amendment to the text, and of course takes precedence.

Mr. DANIEL. Is it in order to move an amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. It is.

Mr. DANIEL. I move to strike out "4" and insert "3."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Virginia to the amendment.

Mr. REAGAN. I have not prepared an amendment; but I will make the suggestion of an amendment.

Mr. BRAGG. Regular order.

Mr. REAGAN. That is to reserve the right to fix the rate of charge——

Mr. BRAGG. I demand the regular order. Debate is not in order.

The CHAIRMAN. The regular order is demanded, and debate is not in order.

Mr. REAGAN. I beg pardon. I did not know that.

The question recurred on Mr. DANIEL'S amendment to the amendment.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 34, noes 62.

Mr. COBB. No quorum.

The CHAIRMAN appointed as tellers Mr. COBB and Mr. DANIEL.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 62, noes 101.

So Mr. DANIEL'S amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The question recurred on Mr. PARKER'S amendment, to strike out "5" and insert "4."

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 72, noes 22.

Mr. COBB. No quorum.

The CHAIRMAN appointed as tellers Mr. COBB and Mr. PARKER.

Mr. PARKER. I trust the gentleman will not insist on his objection.

Mr. WILSON. I move the committee rise.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee is dividing, and that motion is not in order.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 73, noes 59.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman insist upon his point of no quorum?

Mr. COBB. I do.

The CHAIRMAN. In accordance with the rule of the House, the committee finding itself without a quorum, the roll will be called.

The roll was called, and the following members failed to answer to their names:

Aiken,	Dawson,	Lore,	Steele,
Anderson, C. M.	Dougherty,	Louttit,	Stone, E. F.
Anderson, J. A.	Ellsberry,	Lowry,	Stone, W. J., Ky.
Arnot,	Gallinger,	McCreary,	Storm,
Barbour,	Geddes,	Miller,	Taylor, E. B.
Barksdale,	Gibson, Eustace	Nelson,	Taylor, Zach.

Bayne,	Green, W. J.	O'Donnell,	Thomas, O. B.
Beach,	Guenther,	O'Ferrall,	Throckmorton,
Belmont,	Hale,	O'Hara,	Tucker,
Boyle,	Hall,	Phelps,	Van Schaick,
Breckinridge, WCP.	Hammond,	Pidcock,	Viele,
Brown, C. E.	Hanback,	Ranney,	Wade,
Buchanan,	Heard,	Reese,	Wakefield,
Caldwell,	Henley,	Robertson,	Ward, J. H.
Campbell, Felix	Howard,	Rockwell,	Ward, T. B.

Cox,	Laird,	Snyder,	Wheeler,
Davenport,	Landes,	Spriggs,	Wise.
Davidson, R. H. M.	Le Fevre,	Springer,

The committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. MCMILLIN reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 8976) to incorporate the Washington Cable Railway Company of the District of Columbia, and finding itself without a quorum, had caused the roll to be called, and had directed him to report the names of the absentees to the House to be spread upon the Journal.

Mr. HENDERSON, of North Carolina. I wish to state, Mr. Speaker, that my colleague [Mr. COWLES] is detained at home by reason of sickness.

The SPEAKER. The names of the absentees will be entered upon the Journal. From this report it appears that there are 89 members absent and 234 members present. Being more than a quorum, the committee will resume its sitting without a motion.

Mr. MORRISON. I have a resolution which I would like to introduce at this time from the Committee on Rules.

The SPEAKER. It could only be done by unanimous consent.

Mr. ROWELL. I ask unanimous consent to make a brief statement.

The SPEAKER. The only business now in order is for the Committee of the Whole to resume its sitting.

The Committee of the Whole resumed its session.

Mr. ROWELL. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to make a short statement.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

Mr. ROWELL. Mr. Chairman, there are a good many bills from the District Committee that are entirely unobjectionable and can be passed in a short time. It is evident that the whole day will be wasted and nothing accomplished by going on with this bill; and I hope, in the interest of practical legislation, that the committee will rise and allow this bill to be postponed.

I therefore move that the committee rise.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. I ask to be indulged by unanimous consent also to make a brief statement.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, the friends of this measure have been willing at all times to vote upon all propositions to amend it and accept the results without calling at any time the question of a quorum. They are still willing to do this. The obstruction has come from those who are neither willing to pass the bill as it is nor pass it in any other shape. That is the fact——

Mr. COBB. That is not true with reference to the opposition of myself.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. Everybody who has observed these proceedings knows that the opponents of the bill have exhausted the time and are neither willing to pass it as it is nor amend it. Now this is the question:

If the committee should rise and proceed to go into the consideration of other business may not a half-dozen gentlemen obstruct their consideration, and is it not therefore in the interest of the proper and legitimate exercise of the business of this House to see to it that members are present, a quorum, and that they shall vote upon the proposition?

There is no absence of a quorum here, but there is simply an indisposition on the part of gentlemen to vote upon propositions and questions pending before the House or the committee.

The bill now under consideration is as important and has as many rights as any bill represented by the Committee on the District of Columbia; and as one of the Representatives on this floor I object to passing over the consideration of a measure legitimately before the committee for the purpose of accommodating any gentleman who is disposed to filibuster against it.

Mr. HEMPHILL. Can I be indulged to say a word since something has been said against this suggestion? [Cries of "Regular order!"]

Mr. ROWELL. Evidently the committee is unwilling to rise, and I withdraw the motion.

The CHAIRMAN. The question recurs upon the amendment proposed by the gentleman from New York, on which the committee was dividing when a quorum failed to appear.

Mr. HEMPHILL. Would a motion to rise be now in order?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks it would.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I make that motion, and would like to say to the members of this House that the gentleman who made the motion before in committee to take up this particular bill stated that the projectors of the bill (and if I am not correct he is present and can correct me)—that the projectors of this bill would be satisfied if an honest effort was made to pass it; and if after two hours it was found that could not be done, the bill should be laid aside and other business taken up. Of course that is not binding upon the House, but it shows the spirit in which it was brought here. We have other measures just as important, and it is evident, as we have but one day, that all of the business of the committee will be blocked during this session by this bill in view of the fact that there is so much opposition to it.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. This bill can pass by an overwhelming majority.

Mr. HEMPHILL. Then why do you not pass it?

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. Because they will not make an honest effort to pass it.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I am satisfied the gentleman does not apply that to me, for a statement that I am not making an honest effort to pass it would not be true.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that when he responded to the gentleman from South Carolina that the motion was in order, he was forgetful of the fact that a vote was pending upon the amendment of the gentleman from New York.

Mr. COBB. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. Before the call of the House was had the House was taking a vote by tellers. What has become of that?

The CHAIRMAN. That is the vote now to be taken, and the Chair will again submit the question.

The question was taken; and on a division there were—ayes 127, noes 4.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I offer an amendment to the first section.

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided, That it shall be unlawful for the company hereby incorporated to consolidate with any other railroad company now in existence, or which may hereafter be chartered; and any such consolidation shall of itself operate as a forfeiture of all chartered rights and privileges heretofore granted to said company.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. EVERHART. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add at end of section 1 the following:

"Provided, That the said company shall be liable for damages, if any, resulting to the adjoining property-owners on account of said road; but the advantages resulting to the said property-owners therefrom shall be taken into consideration in making any award."

Mr. EVERHART. This is part of the amendment which I offered some moments ago to the substitute of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ADAMS], and which the Chair, through a misunderstanding, ruled out of order.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. I make the point of order that that has been substantially voted on by the committee already.

Mr. COBB. Regular order.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. I will advise my colleague that I am in the regular order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BROWNE] raises the point of order, which is in order.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. The amendment of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HOPKINS] contained the substance of what is now suggested.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks there is sufficient difference to justify the submission of the amendment to the committee.

The question being taken on the amendment, it was disagreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will now report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. COBB] as a new section.

The Clerk commenced to read the amendment.

Mr. SPRINGER. I make the point of order that this is not the place to move an additional section. It should come in, if anywhere, at the end of the bill. It is not germane to the first section.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is informed that the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. COBB] moves this as an additional section, to be inserted after the first section.

The Clerk read the proposed amendment, as follows:

SEC. —. Before the said company shall be permitted to construct any part of said road the President of the United States shall appoint a commission of five persons, three of whom shall be officers in the Corps of Engineers of the Army, and shall include the Chief of Engineers, and two of whom shall be disinterested persons appointed from civil life, whose duty it shall be to examine into the utility and practicability of operating street railways in the city of Washington by means of the cable system, and shall report their conclusions in that behalf to the Secretary of the Interior; and said commission shall also report to the Secretary the value of the franchise created by this act. If they shall report in favor of the utility and practicability of said system as applicable to the said city of Washington, and the effects of the use of the road on the proposed lines on private property, and the said company shall within six months pay into the Treasury of the United States the sum so fixed as the value of the franchise. If said company shall fail to pay said sum within the time aforesaid the franchise hereby created shall be deemed to be forfeited, and shall thereafter, without any proceedings for forfeiture, be deemed to be null and void, and no part of said road shall be constructed until a report favorable to the utility and practicability of said system has been made; nor shall any obligation be created by said company until said money is fully paid, nor shall any part of said road be constructed if said report shall show that the injury to private property exceeds the value of the franchise.

Mr. SPRINGER. I make the point of order that the amendment is not in order at this part of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks it is in the power of the committee to number this, if adopted, as section 2, and to change the numbering of the other sections.

The question being taken on agreeing to the amendment, there were—ayes 18, noes 125.

Mr. COBB. No quorum.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair appoints as tellers the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. COBB] and the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BROWNE].

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 19, noes 147.

So the amendment was disagreed to.

The Clerk read the following section:

SEC. 2. That said roads shall be deemed real estate, and they, together with other real property and personal property of said body corporate, shall be liable to taxation as other real estate and personal property in the city aforesaid, and the property and franchise of said company shall be liable to sale for the non-payment of taxes.

Mr. PAYSON. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk:

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert after the word "property," in line 2, section 2, the words "and including the franchise."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HOLMAN. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add to the section the following:

"And in addition to the payment of such tax, in common with other owners of real property and personal property in said body corporate, the said Washington Cable Railway Company, in consideration of the franchises granted by this act, shall annually, on the 1st day of January of each year, pay into the Treasury of the United States a special tax equal to 5 per cent. on the gross earnings of said company during the preceding year, which shall be applied to public purposes in the District of Columbia, in the discretion of Congress, the payment of which special tax shall be enforced in like manner with other taxes assessed in the said District.

"The foregoing provision shall apply to all street railway companies heretofore organized or that shall hereafter be organized in the District of Columbia under the authority of any act of Congress."

Mr. GROUT. I desire to offer a substitute for the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. BRAGG. I reserve the point of order.

Mr. GROUT. My object is to reduce the special tax to 2 per cent.

The Clerk read Mr. GROUT'S proposed substitute, as follows:

And the said cable railway company, for and in consideration of the rights, privileges, and franchises hereby granted, shall, on the 1st day of July, 1888, and on each 1st day of July thereafter, pay to the Treasury of the United States, to be used in the payment of interest on the debt of the District of Columbia guaranteed by the United States, the sum of 2 per cent. of the gross earnings of said company: Provided, also, If default be made in the payment of the said sum for thirty days in any year after the same shall have become due, a collection may be enforced by the same remedies and processes as are provided for collection of taxes in this act.

Mr. HOLMAN. I have but a single remark to make in regard to the proposition.

Mr. BRAGG. I reserved the point of order. My point of order is that it is not germane to a bill incorporating this company to put in a section which shall be part and parcel of the incorporation of other companies already existing.

Mr. HOLMAN. The gentleman's point of order is made too late.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BRAGG] reserved the point of order.

Mr. CANNON. A substitute has been offered, and now comes the point of order. I submit that it is made too late.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin reserved the point of order when the substitute was offered.

Mr. HOLMAN. I did not hear the gentleman from Wisconsin reserve the point of order.

Mr. BRAGG. I did, although the gentleman did not hear it.

Mr. HOLMAN. I heard the gentleman reserve the point of order as soon as the amendment last offered was read.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks the point of order was reserved about the time the gentleman from Vermont sent his amendment to the desk; but whether it was before any portion of it had been read or not the Chair does not distinctly remember.

Mr. CANNON. I make the point that it is not competent for a gentleman to reserve the point of order on an original amendment till after a substitute is offered. I do not know of any rule under which that can be done. It can only be done by unanimous consent.

Mr. HOLMAN. There was no announcement made of the reservation of the point of order. The Chair gave no intimation that the point of order was reserved, and the committee is generally informed when a point of order is reserved. But after the first proposition was submitted then the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. GROUT] submitted his, and then for the first time the committee was informed that the point of order had been reserved. I think it came too late, sir, according to the usual practice of the Committee of the Whole. But I wish to say a word in regard to the point itself. Here is a bill proposing to organize a given system of street railways in the District of Columbia, and here is a proposition that is germane to that, but goes beyond and applies to street-railroad companies in general here. I think it is clearly germane to this bill. The power of amendment is a power reserved in all the acts incorporating companies for the construction of street railways in this District. Congress has reserved that power and it may be properly exercised. On the main question, I hope the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. GROUT] will remember that his proposition does not go far enough, and I will tell him the reason why. This funded debt of the District of Columbia is a temporary debt, and the annual bonus reserved by the Government ought to go into the Treasury and be disposed of for the public purposes of the District of Columbia.

Mr. GROUT. Mr. Chairman, I ask leave to withdraw my substitute with a view to amending the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana, so as to make the rate 2 per cent. instead of 5. That is satisfactory to the friends of this bill.

Mr. HOLMAN. I trust that where such a valuable right is given away some reservation will be made.

Mr. BRAGG. Mr. Chairman, on the subject of the point of order I wish to say, that I started from my seat the very moment the proposition was read and came down to the front to attract the attention of the Chair; the Chair recognized me, and then I allowed the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. GROUT] to proceed. I do not believe that we have any business, when we are considering a question of incorporating one company, to insert a provision applicable to some other corporation not under consideration before the committee. That is the reason I insist upon the point.

Now, upon the main question, the proposition is to reduce the rate to 2 per cent. That may be all right, but if the tax is to be laid upon the earnings of the road, then the tax upon the franchise which has just been inserted should be stricken out. This company should not be made to pay a tax the same as upon other property, and then pay a tax upon the value of the franchise in addition and then pay upon what makes the franchise of value.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule upon the point of order. The Chair is of opinion that the point of order is well taken. That portion of the amendment which seeks to affect other charters is clearly not germane to the bill.

Mr. SPRINGER. I call for a vote.

Mr. GROUT. What was the ruling of the Chair?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair rules out so much of the amendment as seeks to regulate charters heretofore granted.

Mr. GROUT. Then let mine stand as an amendment to the remainder of the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment to the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out "5 per cent. on the gross earnings of said company" and insert "2 per cent. on the gross earnings of said company."

Mr. PARKER. Mr. Chairman, I am opposed to that amendment for this reason: I do not believe it is just or proper to charge every person who rides on the cars of this contemplated cable railway a higher rate of fare than is required to meet the running expenses and yield a fair profit merely for the purpose of creating a fund for the benefit of the District of Columbia or of the United States.

Mr. LONG. The bill limits the rate of fare to 5 cents.

Mr. PARKER. Congress should so provide that if it shall appear upon the running of the road that a lower rate of fare can be endured by the company a lower rate may be charged. Again, I think it is not either worth while or proper to tax this road which is proposed to be chartered in order to bring up the fares, or to keep them up, for the benefit either of this road or of the roads now existing. This is a movement to "level up" the rates of fare for the benefit of existing roads and for the benefit of tax-payers of the District, and I submit that it is wrong. The gentleman from Vermont [Mr. GROUT] has spoken of what the friends of this bill and of this proposed road are willing to accept. I am not a friend of the one road or of the other, but I say, in the interest of those who will have to pay the fare, that this tax is wrong in principle and ought not to be placed in the bill.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN].

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask that it be again read.

The amendment was again read.

The question was taken; and there were—ayes 55, noes 86.

Mr. HOLMAN. No quorum has voted.

The CHAIRMAN. The point being made that no quorum has voted, the Chair will appoint the gentleman from Indiana, Mr. HOLMAN, and the gentleman from Indiana, Mr. BROWNE, to act as tellers.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 45, noes 120.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. JOHNSTON, of North Carolina. I move to amend by adding at the end of section 2 the proviso which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided, That the assessed value of said roads for the purpose of taxation shall not be less than $30,000 per mile of single track.

Mr. JOHNSTON, of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I offer this amendment in good faith, and for this reason: It is provided in the bill that this company shall have the right to issue mortgage bonds to the amount of $40,000 per mile of single track. It seems to me that if they have property capable of bearing mortgage bonds to that amount their property ought to be taxed upon a valuation of at least $30,000 per mile of single track.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me important that the franchise granted to this company by the provisions of this bill should be the subject of taxation, but any attempt to tax that franchise will, I think, prove entirely inoperative, unless a definite valuation be fixed. I therefore suggest to the gentleman from North Carolina, if he intends that the franchise shall also be taxed, that the amount named in his amendment should be increased so as to embrace some definite sum as the basis for the taxation of the franchise which the bill proposes to grant.

Mr. MILLIKEN. Mr. Chairman, I would like to inquire in the first place whether any such provision as that just offered has been applied to any railroad now operated in this city. The only purpose I have in this matter is to see a cable road built in the city of Washington; and I do not wish to see the provisions of the bill so embarrassed that the road will not be built. I think that if we should get off of this question a little of the shell which we have seen here to-day and get at the meat of it, we should find that the opposition to this bill—I do not wish in saying this to reflect upon any member of the House—is stimulated by the corporation now existing in this city, and which, I have no hesitation in saying, gives the worst service of any horse-railroad in this country whose line I have ever had the fortune or misfortune to ride upon. It is only a winter or two ago that a number of gentlemen who were members of this House went whirling down the hill in one of these cars at the rate of 50 miles an hour, and some of the passengers suffered severe personal injury—why? Because the cars were not in such condition that the brakes could be put on and the cars stopped. Then, as we all know, we have to stand up in the cars; we have to act as car conductors, putting our own tickets into the boxes and the tickets of others. After we have paid our fare we have to pass along the tickets of other passengers.

A MEMBER. That is "a labor of love."

Mr. MILLIKEN. I understand that in many cities in this country where this narrow-gauge, small-size, bob-tail car business has been tried the people would not submit to such an imposition—would not consent to act as conductors and pass up fares; and consequently such roads have been obliged in other cities to provide conductors. But in this capital of the nation, where citizens from every State in the Union visit, and where we ought certainly to have decent and dignified accommodations, we are accustomed to act as the messengers and car conductors of this monopoly which to-day is fighting this bill in this House; and fighting it, why? Because it is desired that this monopoly shall be continued.

The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. COBB] spoke to-day about creating a monopoly. If I understand what the word "monopoly" means, it is the control of any business by one person or one corporation. You have such a monopoly here now; and gentlemen are fighting here to continue that monopoly. Citizens from various parts of the country visiting this city are obliged now to put up with such street-car accommodations as the poorest cities in this country will not submit to, because this one corporation must maintain the power and the remuneration which it is enjoying from the charter it now holds.

The railroad which is to be built if this bill passes will come in competition with the existing monopoly, and will gentlemen tell me that the competition will not be healthful? Why, the difference between a first-class cable road, as every man knows who ever rode over one, and such an apology for a horse-railroad as you have in this city, is the difference between swift, comfortable conveyance and that which is slow, shabby, and in the last degree mean. I hope that in the interest of rapid and easy transportation, and in the interest of such traveling accommodations as the people here demand, and such as are enjoyed in almost every other city in this country, this company will not be refused the opportunity to give us such accommodations in the capital of this nation as they are now offering to furnish.

Mr. JOHNSTON, of North Carolina. I modify the proviso I have offered by inserting the words "in addition to the value of the franchise."

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment of the gentleman as modified will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided, That, in addition to the value of the franchise, the assessed value of the said roads for the purpose of taxation shall not be less than $30,000 per mile of single track.

Mr. JOHNSTON, of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, when I offered this proviso I stated that I did so in good faith. In reply to what I said my friend from Maine [Mr. MILLIKEN] takes the floor and launches off upon his hobby of "monopolies," maintaining that the Washington and Georgetown Railroad is a monopoly.

Mr. MILLIKEN. I will say to my friend that I have no such "hobby" at all.

Mr. JOHNSTON, of North Carolina. So far as I am concerned, I want it particularly understood that I have not talked with a single gentleman outside of this House upon this question. I offer this amendment to prevent this miserable "monopoly," that the gentleman is here undertaking to create by this bill, from escaping the taxation they ought properly to bear.

He is willing to vote for a corporation here with millions of capital and let them pay tax on the value of a little road of six or eight miles long. This House can judge who is in favor of monopolies, whether the gentleman or any one else, when he desires to vote that a corporation with $2,000,000 of capital shall pay a tax only on $100,000 or less.

I undertake to say, Mr. Chairman, this corporation ought not to be allowed to have the benefit of any such provision, but on the contrary should be taxed according to the value of the property they have. They themselves value it at $40,000 a mile. They get a mortgage of $40,000 a mile, and they are asked to pay a tax only on $30,000. Yet my friend from Maine gets into a terrible state about monopolies. I do not know whether this is in any charter of any corporation in the city of Washington, nor do I care. It is so much the worse for the country I was not here to put it in. [Laughter and applause.] It ought to go in and it ought to be in every charter.

These gentlemen should be required to pay tax according to the value of the property they have. If any individual citizen in this city owns a valuable piece of property he has to pay tax on it nearly to its value. He has no right to put mortgages on it to a fictitious value.

Mr. MILLIKEN. Does Congress fix the value of any private property in this city?

Mr. JOHNSTON, of North Carolina. I do not think it does. But gentlemen in voting for this bill should see it taxes the value of this road at $40,000 a mile. [Cries of "Vote!"] I know it hurts these gentlemen. I shall propose to put in another amendment. [Cries of "Vote!"] I shall do that to show the sincerity of these gentlemen. I am opposed to grinding these people to death by a few men in position who wish to make an immense fortune, leaving the little stockholders to be deprived of all their property.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. BRAGG. Mr. Chairman, I trust my friend from North Carolina [Mr. JOHNSTON] does not propose to make a different rule of taxation for one kind or class of people than for another. I understand him to say in the District of Columbia the people were obliged to pay tax on what their property was worth. Section 2, as it now stands, provides that this railway company shall pay precisely the same tax and pay at the same rate as all other property-holders in the District do.

Mr. MILLIKEN. Do you believe that under the Constitution it is competent for Congress to fix the price of property for the purpose of taxation?

Mr. BRAGG. I was going to say that the rule of taxation in order to be constitutional must be uniform. That uniformity is regulated by a board of assessors, or in whatever method it is assessed, so the property is assessed on the same scale, so that each piece of property pays pro rata its proportion toward the expense of the government which it is taxed to support.

I do not believe this Congress, or any other legislative body would desire to act as a board of assessors in advance and pick out one particular piece of property in the District before it was born to determine what its valuation should be in the future as a basis upon which taxation should be levied, and particularly so after the franchise—that invisible and incorporeal right which may have value and may not have value—has been inserted as a specific object of taxation. It seems to me when we establish a uniform rule to prescribe the franchise shall be estimated pro rata as other property in the District we have done all that sensible legislators ought to do. We can not do what some people who are in the lobbies desire us to do, so to hamper one corporation that another may ride over us for the next few years to come.

Mr. MILLS. The gentleman from Wisconsin has stated the rule correctly in ordinary taxation, that it must be on a uniform basis; but when the Government is granting a charter, that is a contract between the parties, the Government being one and the beneficiaries of the charter the other—under those circumstances, in granting that charter the Government can make such conditions as the parties may agree to.

Now it is known that, a charter having been granted a railroad or other corporation, to exempt that from taxation, when the general rule is in favor of taxing all property, is an injustice to all other property; but when the charter is granted, the courts have held that it is a contract, upon and beyond which the Legislature can not encroach and they can not repeal. This is not an ordinary levy of taxation upon a railroad corporation different from other corporations or upon other property. But here comes up a party asking us to make a contract with them, and we are stipulating the terms upon which that contract shall be granted, and one of the provisions is the proposition of the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. JOHNSTON] that they shall not be assessed at a less valuation than $30,000 per mile for purposes of taxation; and that is a provision which I claim is perfectly legitimate and proper to impose.

The question was taken on the amendment of Mr. JOHNSTON, of North Carolina; and on a division there were—ayes 41, noes 102.

So the amendment was rejected.

Section 3 was read, as follows:

SEC. 3. That the said railway shall be laid in the center of the avenues and streets, as near as may be, to be constructed of good materials and in a substantial manner, with the rails of the most approved patterns, to be approved by the Engineer Commissioner of the District, laid upon an even surface with the pavement of the street, and the gauge to correspond with that of other city railroads.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I offer the amendment I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

That said company shall divide the seats in all the cars by a rail or partition so as to designate a seat for each passenger; and when all the seats in a car are taken and occupied by passengers the car shall not be stopped to receive any other passenger, and any passenger not provided with a seat shall not be required to pay fare.

The question was taken; and on a division there were—ayes 48, noes 76.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I think the committee did not understand the purport of the amendment or they would not have voted against it. [Cries of "Regular order!"] Then I make the point of order that no quorum has voted. [Cries of "Too late!"]

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks the gentleman rose in time for that purpose.

Mr. HEMPHILL. With permission of my friend from Tennessee, I desire to move that the committee rise for the purpose of allowing the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means to submit certain resolutions providing that evening sessions be set apart for the consideration of specified business.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I withdraw the point of no quorum.

So (no further count being demanded) the amendment was not agreed to.

The motion of Mr. HEMPHILL was then agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. MCMILLIN reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union having had under consideration House bill No. 8976 had come to no resolution thereon.

COMMITTEE APPOINTMENT.

The SPEAKER announced the appointment of Mr. WALLACE as a member of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and also of the Committee on Railways and Canals, to fill vacancies occasioned by the death of the late Mr. COLE, of Maryland.

EVENING SESSIONS.

Mr. MORRISON. Mr. Speaker, I am directed by the Committee on Rules to submit the resolution which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That on this afternoon at 5 o'clock the House shall take a recess until 8 o'clock p. m., the evening session to be devoted exclusively to the consideration of such measures as may be presented by the Committee on Labor; and that on Saturday afternoon next at 5 o'clock the House shall take a recess until 8 o'clock p. m., the evening session to be devoted exclusively to the consideration of such measures authorizing public printing as may be presented by the Committee on Printing. That the evening sessions herein provided for shall not extend beyond 11 o'clock p. m.

Mr. HISCOCK. Does that hour apply to both sessions, or to only one session? I understood the Clerk to read it "the evening session."

The SPEAKER. It applies to the sessions of both days.

Mr. MORRISON. I move the previous question upon the adoption of the resolution.

The previous question was ordered; and under the operation thereof the resolution was agreed to.

Mr. SPRINGER. I ask unanimous consent to make a report from a committee, as we have had no call of the committees for a day or two.

LEGISLATIVE APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HOLMAN. If other business can be transacted I shall have to call up the report of the conferees on the legislative bill.

I ask unanimous consent that the session may be continued this afternoon until this report be disposed of, as it is important to get this bill before the President to-morrow.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. Let the report be read first.

The Clerk proceeded to read the report.

Mr. HOLMAN (two minutes before 5 o'clock). Mr. Speaker, I renew my request for unanimous consent that the time for the recess be extended long enough to permit the reading to be completed.

Mr. BURROWS. Why not dispense with the further reading and agree that it shall be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. HOLMAN. I have no objection to that, and let the accompanying statement be also printed.

The report of the conference committee and the statement are as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on cetain amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 8974) "making appppropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887, and for other purposes," having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

WM. S. HOLMAN,
GEO. C. CABELL,
J. G. CANNON,
Managers on the part of the House.

And then (the hour of 5 o'clock having arrived) the House, in obedience to its previous order, took a recess until 8 o'clock p. m.

EVENING SESSION.

The recess having expired, the House reassembled at 8 o'clock p. m.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. Under the order of the House, the session this evening is to be devoted exclusively to the consideration of measures presented by the Committee on Labor.

Mr. LAWLER. In the absence of the chairman of the committee, I would ask if the Clerk has got in his possession the bills on the Calendar reported by the Committee on Labor?

The SPEAKER. Those bills, of course, are at the desk.

Mr. LAWLER. I call up the bill H. R. 5541.

Mr. BRAGG. Having received a summons from the Committee on Labor to be present this evening, I obeyed it at considerable personal inconvenience. And being here, and casting my eye about, I do not see the chairman of that committee present. I almost feel like what is expressed in a piece of poetry that comes to my mind, something like this:

The war trump has sounded,
The stream must be crossed,
Why lingers our leader afar?

I ask if the House will be willing to take a recess until our leader appears, so that he may designate what business he desires the friends of labor to consider this evening?

Mr. LAWLER. I insist that we proceed with the regular order of business.

CONVICT AND ALIEN LABOR.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill which has been called up.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 5541), to prevent the employment of convict labor and alien labor upon public buildings and other public works, and convict labor in the preparation or manufacture of materials for public buildings or other public works, and to regulate the manner of letting contracts therefor.

Be it enacted, &c., That in all advertisements for the erection or construction of public buildings or other public works, or for materials to be used in their erection, construction, or completion, and for all supplies of every description to be furnished to or for the use of any of the Departments, and in all contracts made under or in pursuance of such advertisements, there shall be inserted a condition that no convict or prison labor whatsoever, or the product thereof, shall be employed or used upon any public building or other public work, or in preparation or manufacture of any of the articles, materials, or supplies contracted to be furnished therefor; and there shall also be inserted in said contract the further condition that no person who is not a bona fide resident within the limits of the United States, and who has not declared his intention to become a citizen thereof in the manner provided by law, shall be employed in the erection, construction, or completion of any public building or other public work.

SEC. 2. That any willful breach of any of said conditions by any contractor shall authorize and work a forfeiture of the contract, and shall constitute a complete defense in bar against any claim or action against the United States for the recovery of any sum or sums under said contract, and it shall be the duty of the officer letting any such contract, upon being advised that any contractor has knowingly violated the terms of such contract, to declare the same forfeited.

Mr. TARSNEY. I desire to make a brief statement relative to this bill. It comes as a report from the Committee on Labor, and is believed by that committee to be the only bill upon the Calendar of this House which really tends in the direction of the protection of American labor. All along our northern boundary, extending from the Atlantic on the east to the Pacific on the west, we find that aliens from another country come across our boundary line at a 5-cent fare, enter into free competition with American labor, earn our money and take it back home with them. We find the same condition of things existing on the Pacific slope, where the imported Chinee is competing with free American labor. We find the same condition of things to exist in the south with the greaser from Mexico. All that we ask in this bill is that the Congress of the United States will see that decent, respectable American labor, that has come here to make this its home and Americanize with us, shall not be placed in competition, first, with convict labor; and, second, that it shall not be placed in competition with alien labor that does not come here to make this its home, but simply to maraud upon us, and earn our money and take it back from our country.

I demand the previous question on the bill.

The previous question was ordered, and under the operation thereof the bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time.

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask that the bill may be again reported.

The bill was again read.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. I move the previous question on the passage of the bill.

Mr. COBB. Before that question is taken I ask the gentleman to allow me a moment. I may not have understood the reading of the bill, but there seems a clause in it that prohibits the use of any material that may have been produced by foreign labor.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. No, sir. The provision referred to by the gentleman prohibits the use of the product of convict labor.

Mr. COBB. I think there is a provision subsequent to that such as I have indicated.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. The gentleman is mistaken.

Mr. COBB. If that is not in the bill I have no objection to it.

Mr. McKINLEY. I desire to make a single inquiry of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. TARSNEY], whether this bill applies to the laborers employed in the several Departments of the Government; if not, why not?

Mr. TARSNEY. The bill does not apply to laborers employed in the Departments. It applies only in cases where advertisement is made for the letting of contracts for the construction of a public work.

Mr. McKINLEY. I suggest whether it ought not to apply to laborers in the Departments.

Mr. TARSNEY. I am inclined to think it ought.

Mr. McKINLEY. It seems to me that ought to be added.

Mr. HOLMAN. I wish to inquire why the principle of this bill might not be extended so as to embrace persons in the employment of the various departments of the Federal Government who have never declared their intention to be citizens of the United States? Why apply it, in other words, to laboring men and not extend it to those employed in what are more properly official positions?

Mr. TARSNEY. I will answer the question of the gentleman from Indiana. My friend can go no further than I am willing to go in order to properly protect respectable American labor; and if there be in any of the Departments of this Government people employed who are not with us and of us and will not Americanize, then I simply say that the head of that Department ought to exercise the power that he possesses and turn those men out of their places. But this measure, sir, is a measure directly in the interest of the protection of American labor. It is something that American labor has never yet had, with all our pretenses of protection.

Labor and the air we breathe are about the only two things that flow across the national boundary line free of duty. It comes in, walks the docks of our customs offices, bids good morning to the customs officers, and enters into free competition with the American labor that has come here to make this its home. And this is one of the things that have produced the result that you find in this country to-day.

With over a million and a quarter of men idle from one end of this land to the other we find, with all our pretenses of protecting labor, that we are inviting aliens to come in and compete with American laborers. This bill simply provides that upon our public works—I do not now ask that it shall go further—the men who pay the taxes, the men who are here with us as Americans and as citizens of the United States, should be entitled to the benefits of the money that we in Congress here vote to expend upon public works. There is no knownothingism in this business. We shut nobody out; we invite them all to come in; but we compel them to become a part of us when they do come.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. The previous question is pending, I believe, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. It has been withdrawn.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. Then I renew the demand for the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. TARSNEY moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

EXCLUSION OF CONTRACT LABOR.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I call up the next bill on the Calendar (H. R. 9232) in regard to the importation and immigration of foreigners and aliens under contract.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That an act to prohibit the importation and immigration of foreigners and aliens under contracts or agreement to perform labor in the United States, its Territories, and the District of Columbia, and to provide for the enforcement thereof, be amended by adding the following:

"SEC. 6. That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby charged with the duty of executing the provisions of this act, and for that purpose he shall have power to enter into contracts with such State commission, board, or officers as may be designated for that purpose by the governor of any State to take charge of the local affairs of immigration in the ports within said State, under the rules and regulations to be prescribed by said Secretary; and it shall be the duty of such State commission, board, or officers so designated to examine into the condition of passengers arriving at the ports within such State in any ship or vessel, and for that purpose all or any of such commissioners or officers, or such other person or persons as they shall appoint, shall be authorized to go on board of and through any ship or vessel; and if in such examination there shall be found among such passengers any person included in the prohibition in this act, they shall report the same in writing to the collector of such port, and such persons shall not be permitted to land.

"SEC. 7. That the Secretary of the Treasury shall establish such regulations and rules, and issue from time to time such instructions, not inconsistent with law, as he shall deem best calculated for carrying out the provisions of this act; and he shall prescribe all forms of bonds, entries, and other papers to be used under and in the enforcement of the various provisions of this act.

"SEC. 8. That all persons included in the prohibition in this act, upon arrival, shall be sent back to the nations to which they belong and from whence they came. The Secretary of the Treasury may designate the State board of charities of any State in which such board shall exist by law, or any commission in any State, or any person or persons in any State, whose duty it shall be to execute the provisions of this section without compensation. The Secretary of the Treasury shall prescribe regulations for the return of the aforesaid persons to the countries from whence they came, and shall furnish instructions to the board, commission, or persons charged with the execution of the provisions of this section as to the time of procedure in respect thereto, and may change such instructions from time to time. The expense of such return of the aforesaid persons not permitted to land shall be borne by the owners of the vessels in which they came.

"SEC. 9. That all acts and parts of acts inconsistent with this act are hereby repealed.

"SEC. 10. That this act shall take effect and be in force from and after its passage."

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, this bill extends the scope of the law which now applies to paupers and criminals so as to make operative the bill passed by the last Congress prohibiting the importation of contract labor. It has been found that that law is to a certain extent a dead letter by reason of the fact that the only manner of its enforcement is by lodging a complaint with the United States district attorney. This empowers the officials who are now clothed with the power of preventing the landing of paupers and criminals to prohibit also the landing of persons whose importation is prohibited by the act passed last year, and to compel their return to the country whence they came. I now move the previous question upon the bill.

Mr. CANNON. I wish to call the attention of the chairman of the Committee on Labor to what I take to be a defect in one provision of the bill. On page 3, lines 35 to 39 it is provided that "the Secretary of the Treasury may designate a State board of charities of any State in which such board shall exist by law, or any commission in any State, or any person or persons in any State, whose duty it shall be to execute the provisions of this section without compensation." Now, does the gentleman think that this provision that the agents designated shall serve without compensation is likely to lead to a very vigorous execution of the law?

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I had some correspondence with the New York board of immigration on this subject. Members of that board wrote me in regard to this very question, and said that if we would make this change they were confident they could carry out the law, and this suggestion in the first place came from that board. They have there an organized board, and the present law which prohibits the landing of these other classes of persons, criminals and paupers, is word for word and letter for letter this law. This bill simply extends the scope of the existing law in regard to paupers and criminals so as to include the other class of persons which the law passed by last Congress provided should not be allowed to come into this country.

Mr. CANNON. How about the execution of the law along our northern border, and along our western coast, and along our eastern coast from New York to New Orleans and Galveston?

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. Unless you establish a cordon of sentinels all along the border I do not see how you can prevent some of these people coming in. This is the best we can do.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask the chairman of the Committee on Labor a question or two. I do not like to see as important a bill as this passed under the previous question without some fuller explanation. I am in entire sympathy with the purpose of the bill, but I beg to ask the chairman of the committee whether this section, which is to become the eighth section of the act, does not leave its meaning somewhat uncertain? The general purpose of that section is to direct that persons arriving here in violation of the prohibition shall be sent back. That is the order of the section, "that all persons included in the prohibition in this act, upon arrival, shall be sent back to the nations to which they belong and from whence they came." Then it goes on to provide that "the Secretary of the Treasury may designate the State board of charities of any State," and certain other persons "to execute the provisions of this section without compensation."

Now, it seems to me that the exact thing which it is desired that the State board of charities or the other persons referred to shall do ought to be specifically stated. I presume it was not the intention of the Committee on Labor to report a bill providing that the State board of charities, or the other persons indicated, should send these people back without compensation, for in the latter clause of the same section it is provided that "the expense of such return of the aforesaid persons not permitted to land shall be borne by the owners of the vessels in which they came." Yet there is the distinct direction in the first part of the section that the State board of charities or other persons shall send these immigrants back without compensation, and that is all there is in the bill to be executed.

Now, it seems to me that a very brief amendment should be inserted at the point I have indicated.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. What would the gentleman suggest?

Mr. GROSVENOR. I would suggest language which would limit the duty to be performed without compensation by these State boards of charities to the search for (as I understand it to be their duty to search for) these individuals arriving contrary to law. Without an amendment of this kind a misunderstanding might grow out of the provision of this section.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. Would it not meet the gentleman's suggestion if we should strike out line 39 and the word "compensation," in line 40?

Mr. GROSVENOR. That would cover it.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. I have no objection to that.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I think the gentleman's suggestion a very proper one—to strike out the whole of line 39 and the word "compensation," in line 40.

The provision would then be in the shape that the Secretary of the Treasury could designate these authorities to make these examinations and discoveries, and it would be incumbent upon the owners and masters of the vessels to pay the expense of the return of persons prevented from landing.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. The intent of the section as it now stands in the bill is simply that these boards of charities shall not be paid for their services by the General Government. It does not apply any further than that.

Mr. GROSVENOR. If there is no provision for their payment they will not be paid.

Mr. CANNON. I suggest an amendment, to strike out "without compensation," in line 40, and insert "and shall be entitled to reasonable compensation therefor, to be fixed by regulation prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury."

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. I accept the amendment.

Mr. HOLMAN. The gentleman has no power to accept the amendment.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. I am aware of that. The gentleman, of course, understands what I mean—that I have no objection to its adoption.

Mr. HOLMAN. I do not see the motive of making this change. I take it for granted the Committee on Labor has reached the conclusion that this service will be performed by these organizations without charge to the Federal Government; and the service is a matter of as much moment to the State or local authorities as to the General Government; in some instances of more moment. On this account, it seems to me the matter may well be left in a large degree under the charge of the State authorities, subject to regulations to be prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury. Otherwise you bring together much more directly the exercise of power by the local authorities and by the Federal Government than you would by the provision as it stands. Under the provision in its present form the local authorities will exercise power permissively, so to speak, as regards the General Government; under the provision as proposed to be amended those local authorities will become in a certain sense officers of the Government.

Mr. CANNON. In reply to the gentleman from Indiana I desire to say that section 8 without this amendment will make it the duty of certain boards or persons to be designated by the Secretary of the Treasury to perform certain duties without compensation. Now, to my mind that is pure trifling, because everybody understands that when you devolve a duty upon any persons and for this purpose make them officers of the General Government, while at the same time you say the duty shall be performed without compensation, the provision is in effect—I speak without disrespect—a cheat and a fraud, because everybody knows that something can not and will not be done for nothing.

Now, if this legislation means anything, it is designed to prohibit the importation of this class of labor and to provide the money necessary to make this prohibition effectual; otherwise it is a mere empty enactment, abounding in words only, and without practical strength or force.

Mr. HOLMAN. In that view of the matter, would it not be better to leave the exercise of the duties contemplated by this bill to the collectors of the ports rather than make these local organizations in this indirect way employés of the Government? I think that these powers can all be exercised more properly by collectors of the ports and persons under them than by anybody else.

Mr. CANNON. If the power is to be exercised by these officers upon their mere motion, why legislate at all? The Secretary of the Treasury controls the collectors of the ports, and we give him authority, if this amendment be adopted, to make effective regulations; and more than that, we give him money to enforce them.

Mr. HOLMAN. Why not put the entire duty on the collectors of the ports?

Mr. CANNON. It will rest upon them under suitable regulations, because their chief, the Secretary of the Treasury, is charged with the making of the regulations.

Mr. HOLMAN. Is it not much safer and better to devolve the duty directly upon officers of the Federal Government than upon other persons?

Mr. CANNON. I go, and so does the bill, to the fountain-head. The man who controls all the collectors of the ports is responsible. I see no necessity for imposing these duties upon any subordinate class of officers. Why not take the Secretary of the Treasury, who controls the machinery at all our ports and all our boundaries, and make him responsible?

Mr. HOLMAN. But he has to act through other persons.

Mr. CANNON. Certainly.

Mr. HOLMAN. Somebody at the port of entry must act in this matter, and why should not that officer at the port of entry be a responsible officer of the Government?

Mr. PETERS. Why not leave them in the discretion of the Secretary of the Treasury?

Mr. HOLMAN. That would do.

Mr. McMILLIN. I think the bill we have before us ought to prevail. I was most heartily in favor of the act of which it is amendatory, and I am for any amendment which increases the efficiency of that act.

And I agree with the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] it is best to leave the execution of the act with the officers of the Government of the United States.

I have no objection if State boards of immigration and others charged with the duty of looking after immigration are called upon to assist in this work if they will act, in conjunction with the officers of the Government of the United States as provided by the bill, without compensation.

But if there are to be specific fees provided and officers employed I see no reason why we should go outside, say in the port of New York, of the thousands of officers we have already there and employ a new corps. We already have a vast number of officers. We have a corps in New York more efficient if we devolve this duty on them than could be organized outside of them. I am strenuously opposed to the employment of more officers when we can very efficiently perform the work by those already in the employment of the Government.

I realize that this bill strikes at the very root of the evils complained of as to our labor troubles. It is useless for us to talk about protecting American labor and assisting the American laborer when we permit contracts to be executed and enforced by which criminals and paupers, who could not otherwise get here and who come not for love of our institutions but for the plunder they can get by coming, come in and compete with our laborers.

I trust this duty will be devolved where it properly belongs, upon the Treasury Department and by Treasury officials, by whom it can be done more efficiently and more cheaply.

I hope the bill will pass. I suggest to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. O'NEILL] in charge of the bill we might add some clause which would fix a penalty upon vessels bringing them here so as to make the act more effectual.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. I ask by unanimous consent to correct the title, and also to amend the first section of the bill by inserting the words "approved February 26, 1885."

Mr. SPRINGER. After the word "Columbia."

There was no objection, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. RICE. What right have we to impose duties on State boards?

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. If the gentleman will pardon me I will say this imposition of duties is asked for by the boards which now undertake to prevent the landing of paupers and criminals.

Mr. RICE. I am aware of that.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. It does not impose any other duty than that.

Mr. RICE. But suppose there should be no such boards in some of the States, or suppose some of the boards in some of the States should refuse to execute this duty; have you any provision for such a case?

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. We have not.

Mr. RICE. It seems to me we ought to have.

Mr. CANNON. Look at line 38, where it says "or any person or persons in any State"——

Mr. RICE. I noticed that.

Mr. CANNON. "Whose duty it shall be to execute the provisions of this section without compensation."

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. In the absence of State boards individuals can be designated. The gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. McADOO] informs me they have two extremely efficient and competent boards at New York and Jersey City, where most of the immigrants of the country come, and they are asking for power to be conferred by this act to prevent these people violating the present law.

Mr. RICE. No doubt of that.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. I call for the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

Mr. GROSVENOR. What is the amendment?

The SPEAKER. The question recurs on the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. NEECE. I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

At the end of section 8 add the following:
"All necessary expenses of the execution of this act shall be paid out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated."

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. That is not necessary.

Mr. SPRINGER. Yes; it is.

Mr. HOLMAN. There is this objection to it, that it makes another permanent appropriation.

Mr. NEECE. No, sir.

Mr. HOLMAN. It makes another permanent appropriation. I concede that there are some purposes for which permanent appropriations seem proper; but it should never be allowed, it seems to me, except in extreme cases and where it can not otherwise be avoided. It has been the effort of late years to get rid of permanent appropriations entirely, except in a certain few instances; and there is a bill pending for that purpose.

The gentleman's amendment would be simply to add to the long list of permanent appropriations which are now so objectionable.

Mr. NEECE. I can see no use in passing a bill of this character without appropriating the necessary money to carry it into execution. The officers charged with its execution are not going ahead to do anything in reference to it unless they have the money to do it with.

Mr. HOLMAN. But there is no limit imposed by the amendment; there is no safeguard whatever.

Mr. BRAGG. My friend from Indiana, it appears, can not be too friendly to labor; but yet he wants the labor and is unwilling to appropriate for it.

Mr. HOLMAN. I want to appropriate for it by annual appropriations; not by permanent appropriations.

I think it is well enough to keep our expenditures under our own control. Let them be estimated for every year and the appropriations made according to the necessities.

Mr. McMILLIN. Let me suggest to the gentleman from Indiana that if he will add to the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois the words "for the fiscal year" that amendment will divest it of the objection of being a permanent appropriation, but will require the appropriation to be made year by year to keep it up.

Mr. NEECE. I will so modify the amendment.

Mr. HOLMAN. Say for the present fiscal year.

Mr. RYAN. I want to ask the gentleman in charge of the bill a question as to one of its provisions.

I find at the close of section 8 it is provided:

That the expenses of such return—

That is, the return of the prohibited class—of the aforesaid persons not permitted to land shall be borne by the owners of the vessels in which they came.

How do you enforce that provision? I regard it as important, but would like to know how you would enforce it.

Mr. McMILLIN. If the gentleman from Kansas will permit me I have an amendment to that section, which I will read and send to the desk, which I think will cover that point.

Mr. BLOUNT. I ask that the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. NEECE] be read as modified.

Mr. RYAN. In my time I would like to have the suggested amendment of the gentleman from Tennessee read for information.

The SPEAKER. That can be done.

Mr. McMILLIN. I will state the amendment I propose to add to this section first. It is as follows:

And any vessel refusing to pay such expenses shall not thereafter be permitted to land at any port of the United States.

I think that will cover the case.

Mr. BLOUNT. I ask that the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois be read as modified.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the amendment as now modified.

The Clerk read as follows:

That the necessary expense in the execution of this act, for the present fiscal year, shall be paid out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

The amendment of Mr. NEECE as modified was agreed to.

Mr. McMILLIN. I now send the amendment I suggested to the desk to be read to be added at the end of line 48. Before it is read I will suggest a modification of the amendment by the incorporation of the words "or clear from," and send it to the desk to be read in that form.

The Clerk read as follows:

And any vessel refusing to pay such expenses shall not thereafter be permitted to land at or clear from any port of the United States.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. I do not think that is necessary.

Mr. McMILLIN. It will put the vessel in a position to require it to carry out the law and will prove to be one of the greatest adjuncts we can have in enforcing the law. I am for the law most heartily, and for having it to mean something when it is passed.

Mr. PLUMB. I would like to ask the gentleman from Tennessee one question. I desire to know whether this provision contained in his amendment will not interfere with some existing treaty stipulations?

Mr. McMILLIN. Well, it will not interfere with any that ought to exist; and it is well for us to begin at once, if we are going to pass this act, to prepare for it. I think we ought to make it amount to something, by requiring that it shall mean what it says and say what it means.

Mr. PLUMB. I have no objection to that. I am for the act as well as the gentleman and will go as far as the gentleman will go in securing the adoption of such a measure; but I am anxious to have it modified if necessary so as to make it effective. Now, this in my judgment is one of the most effective means to protect labor in the United States; but when it is enacted I desire that it shall be enforced without trouble, and therefore I raised the question for information, not being able to answer it myself.

Mr. McMILLIN. I have not had occasion to examine the question, but I do not remember of any treaty stipulations which would be violated by it.

Mr. RICE. It being a provision applicable to the vessels of all nations, I do not suppose it would come in conflict with any treaty.

Mr. McMILLIN. I think not.

Mr. PETERS. Will not that amendment allow all vessels of foreign countries to land here once before it can take effect?

Mr. McMILLIN. Yes, sir; but there will not be any inducement to land with the second amendment, which prevents them from clearing.

Mr. WILSON. But suppose the vessel contracts to bring over one load?

Mr. McMILLIN. If it does that and does not pay the expenses under this act, it shall not clear from our ports.

Mr. PETERS. But it may land, and do the very damage you seek to prevent.

Mr. McMILLIN. But it is not to be supposed that the vessel will tie itself up in an American harbor to rot simply to bring over one load of these people.

Mr. PETERS. It might have a species of cargo which would enable it to do that with profit.

Mr. RYAN. It is very much of an improvement on the text.

Mr. McADOO. The great trouble in New York is to enforce the penalties on landing paupers and idiots. If the amendment of the gentleman from Tennessee is not in contravention of any treaty, I think it is a most excellent one and ought to be adopted.

Mr. WILSON. I ask that the amendment may again be reported.

The amendment was again read.

Mr. WILSON. I suggest that instead of the words "any vessel refusing to pay such expenses," &c., it should read "the owner of any vessel."

Mr. SPRINGER. It is right as it stands.

Mr. McMILLIN. Let it operate on the timbers.

Mr. ZACH. TAYLOR. I offer a substitute for the amendment.

Mr. McMILLIN. If the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. ZACH. TAYLOR] will withhold his amendment for a moment I think we might probably amend the phraseology by making it read "any vessel whose owner refuses."

Mr. ZACH. TAYLOR. I ask that my substitute may be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

And the owners of vessels who refuse to pay such expenses shall be subject to a fine of $200 for every such person so brought to the United States, to be recovered in any court of competent jurisdiction thereof.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. ZACH. TAYLOR] offered as a substitute for the amendment of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MCMILLIN].

Mr. MCMILLIN. Before we act on that, I wish to state to my colleague that I think his amendment would make some of the penalties smaller than they are now. The act passed in last Congress of which this is amendatory already provides penalties which I think are more severe than what are provided in his amendment.

Mr. ZACH. TAYLOR. I am willing they should be made as severe as the gentleman may desire.

Mr. BRAGG. I ask the gentleman from Tennessee how he is to enforce that penalty against an alien non-resident owner of a vessel?

Mr. MCMILLAN. I think the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BRAGG] is right. There should be something added to the amendment in regard to that. I have no objection to amend it in such a way as will make it more effective.

Mr. ZACH. TAYLOR. I withdraw my amendment.

Mr. WILSON. I offer as a substitute what I send to the desk.

The SPEAKER. A substitute for what?

Mr. WILSON. A substitute for the amendment of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MCMILLAN].

The Clerk read as follows:

Add to section 8 the following:
"And such vessels shall not be permitted to clear from any port of the United States until the owners thereof shall, by bond or other assurance satisfactory to the collector of said port, undertake to bear this expense."

Mr. DINGLEY. I suggest to the gentleman who has offered that amendment that it would have no force in the case of a large class of vessels known as tramps, that do not return to this country. I suggest that he add to the language of the bill simply this: "And constitute a lien on said vessel."

Mr. MCMILLIN. It might be made to read in this way:

And the penalties provided shall constitute a lien on said vessel.

Mr. DINGLEY. I would suggest that you simply add the language I have indicated to the bill.

Mr. MCMILLIN. I have no objection to that being added to the amendment.

Mr. STEWART, of Vermont. Then it would be necessary to provide for the enforcement of the lien by an additional amendment.

Mr. MCMILLIN. I have no objection to that as an amendment to the amendment.

The SPEAKER. But the gentleman from Maine is talking about the amendment offered by the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. NELSON].

Mr. MCMILLIN. I did not so understand him.

Mr. DINGLEY. What is the amendment pending?

The SPEAKER. The amendment of the gentleman from Tennessee provides if the vessel refuses to return these persons at its own expense it shall not be permitted to land at or clear from any port of the United States. The gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. WILSON] offers an amendment providing the vessel shall give bonds or other assurance that it will return these persons at its own expense.

Mr. MCMILLIN. I suggest to the gentleman from Maine [Mr. DINGLEY] that we may add the substance of his amendment to that which I have offered.

Mr. DINGLEY. I merely make the suggestion to the gentleman from Tennessee, who can incorporate it if he chooses.

Mr. MCMILLIN. Then it can be made to read in this way:

And any vessel refusing to pay such expenses shall not be permitted to land at or clear from any port of the United States, and such expenses shall constitute a lien on said vessel.

I will add that last clause, and I think it will cover what the gentleman from Maine has suggested.

Mr. STEWART, of Vermont. But how are you going to enforce the lien?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee modifies his amendment in the way he has stated.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. I demand the previous question on the pending amendments.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The first question is on the amendment of the gentleman from West Virginia, offered as a substitute for the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MCMILLIN].

Mr. WILSON. I ask that it be again reported, and I ask the Clerk to read along with my amendment the last sentence of the eighth section.

The Clerk read as follows:

The expense of such return of the aforesaid persons not permitted to land shall be borne by the owners of the vessels in which they came. And such vessels shall not be permitted to clear from any port of the United States until the owners thereof shall, by bond or other assurance satisfactory to the collector of the said port, undertake to bear this expense.

Mr. MCMILLIN. Now let the Clerk read my amendment as modified, for which that is offered as a substitute.

The Clerk read as follows:

And any vessel refusing to pay such expenses shall not thereafter be permitted to land at or clear from any port of the United States, and such expenses shall be a lien on said vessel.

The question being taken on Mr. WILSON's substitute, there were—ayes 17, noes 74.

So (further count not being called for) the amendment was not agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question now is on the adoption of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MCMILLIN].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SPRINGER. I desire to move an amendment to section 10. That section provides that this bill shall take effect from and after its passage. It will be observed that by the amendments which we have just adopted vessels bringing these persons are charged with the expense of returning them to the country from which they have come. Now, such vessels may be on the sea when this bill becomes a law, and they ought not to be mulcted in these damages unless they have had notice or have had a chance to be notified of the existence of the law.

The amendment was read, as follows:

SEC. 10. That this act shall take effect at the expiration of thirty days after its passage.

Mr. ZACH. TAYLOR. Mr. Speaker, it does not take a vessel thirty days to come from Europe. I move to amend the amendment by striking out thirty and inserting ten.

Mr. SPRINGER. But you should notify them of the law before they leave the other side.

Mr. STEWART, of Vermont. What about sailing vessels? They take more than ten days to come from Europe.

The amendment of Mr. SPRINGER was agreed to—ayes 62, noes 8.

Mr. OATES. Mr. Speaker, I desire to offer an amendment to come in as an additional section.

The amendment was read, as follows:

That no alien or person who is not a citizen of the United States shall acquire title to or own a greater interest than a leasehold for five years in any lands anywhere within the United States of America and their jurisdiction; and any deeds or other conveyances of lands acquired after the approval of this act by any alien or unnaturalized foreigner, or by any company, firm, or corporation composed of such, shall be void.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. I make the point of order on that amendment that it is not germane to the bill.

I am heartily in favor of his proposition, but it does not belong on this bill. Besides, there is a bill now on the Calendar covering that subject.

Mr. OATES. It seems to me that it is.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the point of order well taken.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. I move the previous question upon ordering the bill to be engrossed and read a third time.

The previous question was ordered.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

WAGES OF MECHANICS, LABORERS, AND SERVANTS.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. I call up the bill (H. R. 5310) to protect mechanics, laborers, and servants in their wages.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That for all personal services rendered by any person acting in the capacity of mechanic, laborer, or servant in the District of Columbia and Territories of the United States, to an amount not exceeding $100, no property shall be exempt from seizure and sale under execution: Provided, That in order to secure the benefits of this act such mechanic, laborer, or servant shall commence their action within six months next after the last service shall have been rendered.

SEC. 2. That all acts and parts of acts inconsistent with this act are hereby repealed.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, this bill simply proposes to protect mechanics, laborers, and servants in their wages by providing that no one can set up an exemption law against a judgment obtained for such a debt. It protects those who can not protect themselves, and who are compelled to trust their labor before asking for compensation. I move the previous question.

Mr. SPRINGER. The bill relates only to the District of Columbia.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. Only to the District of Columbia and the Territories.

The previous question was ordered upon the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PAY FOR DECORATION DAY.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I now report back from the Committee on Labor the joint resolution (S. R. 40) providing for the payment of per diem laborers in Government employ on the 30th of May of each year as on other days, and I ask that it be put upon its passage.

The SPEAKER. The joint resolution will be read.

The joint resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, &c., That all per diem employés of the Government, on duty at Washington or elsewhere in the United States, shall be allowed the 30th day of May of each year, commonly called "Decoration Day," as a holiday, and shall receive the same pay as on other days.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. I move the previous question on the passage of the joint resolution.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I move to amend by inserting, after the words "30th day of May," the words "and the 4th day of July."

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. That would send it back to the Senate, and might defeat it.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. Will the gentleman allow me to make this inquiry: Suppose the 30th day of May should fall on Sunday, as it did this year, under the provisions of this resolution would not these employés receive pay for a day on which they would not be required to work at all or be permitted to work if they desired?

Mr. BRUMM. In such a case Decoration Day is usually observed on the succeeding Monday.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. But this resolution provides specifically for paying them for "the 30th day of May of each year."

The previous question was ordered on the engrossment and third reading of the joint resolution; and it was ordered to be engrossed and read the third time.

Mr. HOLMAN. I understood there was an amendment, to insert "the Fourth of July."

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BROWNE] requested the gentleman from Missouri to withdraw the demand for the previous question in order to allow that amendment to be offered; but it was not done.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. An amendment has been suggested to which I have no objection, to insert the words "except when it falls on Sunday."

Mr. BINGHAM. Why not put in simply the words "Decoration Day?"

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. That is the language of the bill.

Mr. HOLMAN. I move to amend by inserting "the Fourth of July."

The SPEAKER. The bill has been ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and it can only be amended by unanimous consent.

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope unanimous consent will be given for that amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent to insert "the Fourth day of July." Is there objection?

Mr. BENNETT. I wish to make a parliamentary inquiry. I would like to know whether there is now in our legislation a provision similar to this in regard to other national holidays.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks not; but that is not a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. BENNETT. I ask the attention of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. O'NEILL]. I wish to know whether "the per diem employés of the Government on duty at Washington and elsewhere in the United States" are allowed by existing statute the benefit of other national holidays with pay?

Mr. HOLMAN. There is no such law.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. I do not think there is any such law.

Mr. BENNETT. Then there is a matter of law which may be worthy the attention of the gentleman from Missouri. I believe it is the practice of the Government to give these laborers the benefit of these other national holidays with pay?

Mr. HOLMAN. That is not the law at this time.

Mr. BENNETT. I say it is the practice of the Government.

Mr. HOLMAN. I think not as to persons employed by the day.

Mr. BENNETT. If my friend from Indiana is correct, the force of my inquiry is broken. But if the per diem employés of the Government are now allowed pay on these other national holidays, then this bill, if enacted, would as a matter of law exclude these employés from the benefit of pay on those days, and would make Decoration Day the only holiday for which they would receive pay.

Mr. CANNON. I would like to ask the gentleman from Missouri a question. I would be glad to know whether his committee has considered and reported a bill allowing to that multitude of laborers who are not in the employment of the Government, but who pay the taxes in order to meet this appropriation, a day's pay on Memorial Day or any other holiday?

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. I think that bill is being considered by members in the abstract.

Mr. CANNON. How about the concrete? [Laughter.]

Mr. CRAIN. I ask unanimous consent to insert "Memorial Day" in place of "Decoration Day."

The SPEAKER. There is one request for unanimous consent now pending.

Mr. LOVERING. I trust I may be permitted one word of explanation as to how this bill came to be asked for. In the employ of the Government are many members of the Grand Army of the Republic—old soldiers—who desire to turn out with their posts on Memorial Day. Under the conditions existing at the present time they are obliged in doing so to submit to the loss of a day's wages. They felt it due to them that they be allowed this day as a holiday with pay, so that they might not suffer loss of wages by reason of joining in paying their respects to the memory of those who died in the service of their country.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] asks unanimous consent that this bill be amended by inserting "the 4th day of July in each year." Is there objection? The Chair hears none. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. CRAIN] asks unanimous consent to amend the bill by striking out the words "the 30th day of May in each year," and inserting "Memorial Day."

Mr. CRAIN. "Except when the same falls on Sunday."

Mr. WILSON. Is the language last suggested by the gentleman intended to apply to both days?

Mr. CRAIN. Yes, sir.

Mr. WILSON. I suggest that the words "without reduction of pay" should be inserted. Then if any pay is due these employés they will get it.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is not able to hear what gentlemen are saying, and the clerks are unable to hear the amendments which are being suggested. The gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. WILSON] suggests that the clause "except when said days fall on Sunday," which has been proposed by the gentleman from Texas, be inserted, so as to apply to both days.

A MEMBER. That is unnecessary.

Mr. CRAIN. I withdraw my suggestion as to the words "except when the same falls on Sunday."

Mr. BINGHAM. The designation of the day which shall be a public holiday when Decoration or Memorial Day falls on Sunday varies in the different States. In my own State of Pennsylvania, when the 30th of May falls on Sunday, the Saturday preceding is a legal holiday; but in many other States, and in the District of Columbia, the Monday following is a legal holiday. Hence, if the day be described merely as "Memorial Day," the Government employé, wherever he may be, will get the benefit of the holiday with pay.

The SPEAKER. The amendment suggested—to insert the words "except when the same falls on Sunday"—has been withdrawn. The question is on the passage of the joint resolution.

Mr. LAWLER. Do I understand this joint resolution has been amended to include the 4th of July?

The SPEAKER. It has.

Mr. LAWLER. All that was asked to be included in this joint resolution was embraced in the report made from the Committee on Labor. If it is the intention of the House to amend the resolution I should also like to move an amendment. As stated by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LOVERING] it was reported from the Committee on Labor in good faith. If other days are to be included I should like to move an amendment including Saint Patrick's day. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. BINGHAM. Does that mean Saint Patrick's day in the morning? [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. BRUMM. Yes; I object. [Laughter.]

Mr. McMILLIN. Was the amendment as to the 4th of July when it falls on Sunday adopted?

The SPEAKER. It was not.

Mr. McMILLIN. I hope the gentleman will permit it to be amended in that respect. There is no reason or justice in it nor common sense without that amendment.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the joint resolution had better be again reported as it has been amended.

The joint resolution was again reported.

Mr. McMILLIN. I ask consent to amend by adding the following:

Provided, That no payment shall be made when the 4th of July falls on Sunday.

Mr. SOWDEN. In such a case they celebrate the following day.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the joint resolution. [Cries of "Vote!"]

Mr. BRUMM. I move to insert "except when these are celebrated on the Sabbath."

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the resolution.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 72, noes 10.

So the joint resolution was passed.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri, moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

EMPLOYÉS OF BUREAU OF ENGRAVING AND PRINTING.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. I now call up the bill (H. R. 4857) granting relief to the employés in the Bureau of Engraving and Printing, United States Treasury.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the employés of the Bureau of Engraving and Printing, including pieceworkers, be allowed a leave of absence, with pay, not exceeding fifteen days in any one year, at such time as the Chief of the Bureau may designate.

Mr. McMILLIN. Do not the rules require its first consideration in the Committee of the Whole?

The SPEAKER. It is on the House Calendar.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. This bill does not mention an appropriation.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks not. It requires no additional appropriation.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. I move to amend by adding "provided the pay of the pieceworkers be rated on the basis of the average of their daily earnings for the thirty preceding days." It will not be possible to rate the pay of pieceworkers unless some basis be fixed in the bill by which their pay is to be rated.

Mr. REID, of North Carolina. I desire to offer a substitute for the bill.

The SPEAKER. It can be read, but can not be voted on now.

The substitute was read, as follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the employés of the Bureau of Engraving and Printing who are paid by the piece or by the day shall be allowed a leave of absence with pay, under such regulations and at such times as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe, for a period not exceeding fifteen days for one year's continuous service, and for proportionate periods for shorter terms of service. Such of said employés as are paid by the piece shall receive a daily rate of pay for the leaves of absence granted them equal to the daily average rate of pay earned by them during the remainder of the month in which the said leaves of absence shall be taken.

SEC. 2. That to enable the Secretary of the Treasury to comply with the provisions of this act the sum of $14,550 be and hereby is appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the service of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887, and the said sum shall be added to and made a part of the appropriation for plate printing in the Bureau of Engraving and Printing for the said fiscal year.

Mr. REID, of North Carolina. I now desire to have read a letter from the chief of the bureau explaining the substitute I have offered.

The Clerk read as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
BUREAU OF ENGRAVING AND PRINTING,
July 9, 1886.

SIR: In reply to the oral inquiry made by you as to the additional appropriation required for the support of this bureau in the event of the passage of an act granting fifteen days' annual leave of absence to its employés, I have to say that the enactment of such a measure would not necessitate any increase in the appropriation for the pay of the employés other than the plate-printers and their assistants, inasmuch as such employés are paid by the day and the leaves of absence could be so adjusted that the work of the absentees would be done by those who remain on duty.

The granting of leaves of absence to the plate-printers and their assistants would, however, cause a direct increase of expense for the reason that the printers are paid by the piece and the wages of their assistants are deducted from their earnings. The total number of impressions printed must, therefore, be paid for at the established rates, and the granting of pay to plate-printers and printers' assistants while absent on leave will cause an additional expenditure which must be separately provided for. The estimated amounts required for this purpose are:

For one hundred and eighty plate-printers, fifteen days, at an estimated average of $4 a day	$10,800
For two hundred printers' assistants, fifteen days, $1.25 a day	3,750
Total additional appropriation required	14,550

To enable the bureau to execute the estimated quantity of work the bill providing for the leaves of absence should make an appropriation for this amount to be added to and made a part of the appropriation for plate-printing for the current fiscal year.

Very respectfully,

E. O. GRAVES, Chief of Bureau.

Hon. JAMES W. REID,
Committee on Printing,
United States House of Representatives.

Mr. REID, of North Carolina. In support of the substitute I have submitted I wish to say that if the original bill is passed there will be no provision made to pay for the fifteen days' leave of absence for the engravers and plate-printers and their assistants. The substitute also covers the necessary appropriation. I submit that in every Department of the Government there is provision made for a leave of absence to Government employés except those employed in the Bureau of Engraving and Printing. These plate-printers, who perform disagreeable and hard work over gas-stoves day after day, will not be provided for unless the substitute be adopted, which makes provision for their pay. The amendment provides not only for the fifteen days' leave of absence, but in the second section it also makes provision whereby they may be paid.

The House has just appropriated $90,000 to grant the same leave of absence to the employés of the Government Printing Office, and I submit, sir, that these are the only employés of the Government who are not allowed a leave of absence. If, then, we propose to do the laboring men justice who have the most disagreeable, arduous, and exacting work to perform, this substitute should be adopted. It is simply doing an act of justice to skillful laboring men who undergo faithful and exacting service for the Government, and I repeat if we are going to do equal and exact justice to all Government employés this substitute should pass, so that these employés may be placed upon an equal footing with the other employés of the Government.

Mr. SKINNER. What are they paid now?

Mr. REID, of North Carolina. The plate-printers get about $4 a day, but they pay out of that for their assistants a large amount, which greatly reduces their per diem.

Mr. SKINNER. Do you not think that is pretty good wages?

Mr. REID, of North Carolina. But there are many of the employés there who only get from a dollar and a quarter to a dollar and a half a day.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. The greater number of them get the smaller sum.

Mr. REID, of North Carolina. The superintendent of that bureau says in the letter which has been read that all of the rest of the employés are provided for except the plate-printers, and this is for their benefit.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. Let me ask the gentleman from North Carolina, have you considered the propriety of compelling private employers to grant leaves of absence, with pay, to the large body of workingmen in this country who are not in the Government employ, and who get a much lower rate of pay as a rule than is granted to the Government employés?

Mr. REID, of North Carolina. I have considered that; and if I had the power, as a Representative, I would insist that equal justice should be done to all of the laborers of this country without regard to the character of their employment. That is what I propose here as far as it is within my power.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. I fear you are neglecting the large body of the laboring people of the country.

Mr. REID, of North Carolina. I represent a laboring class of people myself; and that being the case, I want justice done to all laborers, whether they work in the shop or in the field, with their heads or with their hands.

Mr. SKINNER. You do not represent a constituency who get extra pay for doing nothing.

Mr. REID, of North Carolina. I represent a constituency who want justice done to all laborers.

Mr. SKINNER. Nor do you represent a constituency who get $4 a day for their labor.

Mr. REID, of North Carolina. Nor do these men get $4 a day. We give clerks with high salaries and light work thirty days' leave of absence with full pay, and these men who do the hardest work—work with their heads over heated stoves, in trusted and confidential positions—should at least have half as much consideration as their associates, who have light work in easy places.

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Speaker, this substitute is preferable to the original bill, in that it deals frankly with the question and gives the cost to the Government if the legislation shall pass. It is too late now to raise the question submitted by the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. I am raising no question, except in behalf of the whole body of the laboring people.

Mr. SPRINGER. I know; but my friend should have done that when his party friends were in power and granted leave of absence to all of the employés in the Departments at Washington, one month in every year, with full compensation. We have already allowed the fifteen days' leave of absence to the employés of the Government Printing Office. Now, we have granted this leave to all of the employés in this city except those engaged in the Bureau of Engraving and Printing, and it would be an invidious distinction to withhold this privilege from the employés of that bureau.

Mr. HOLMAN. Will the gentleman allow me a moment? My friend has made the suggestion that now, if this bill passes, all of the employés of the Government are provided with a reasonable leave of absence with pay. That is not exactly correct.

Mr. SPRINGER. I mean in this city.

Mr. HOLMAN. No; not in this city. There is a large body of employés here working for the Government at a dollar and a dollar and a quarter a day.

Mr. SPRINGER. I do not include members of Congress either.

Mr. HOLMAN. I did not mean that. I refer now to laboring men who are working under the broiling sun or in rain and shine. They are right around us here on the public grounds.

Mr. REID, of North Carolina. Will the gentleman offer an amendment to include them?

Mr. HOLMAN. Yes, sir; with pleasure. I would add the words, "and all the employés of the Government not otherwise provided for."

Mr. REID, of North Carolina. I will accept the amendment.

Mr. SPRINGER. If that is done I want to increase the appropriation at the same time. But I do not know that the gentleman means to submit it now, as I had the floor and only yielded for a question. I presume it is not intended to be put in, nor is there any estimate for its cost. They are the men who are working on contracts generally; while this is a naked proposition, which ought to pass, to do justice to the employés of the Bureau of Engraving and Printing, I would help my friend from Indiana if he will find from the Architect of the Capitol and the Treasury Department the number of persons embraced in the amendment he suggests, and will bring in a resolution to put them upon an equality with the others and also provide the money, at the same time, to pay them.

Mr. HOLMAN. I think they ought to be provided for.

Mr. SPRINGER. I hope the proposition will not be incorporated, however, in this bill. It is not germane to it, and it ought not to be passed until an estimate and an appropriation is made at the same time.

Mr. SOWDEN. I would like to ask the gentleman from Indiana a question, whether this amendment includes the per diem employés of the House of Representatives?

Mr. HOLMAN. No, sir; it does not. I submit, in all fairness to the gentleman from North Carolina, this question: There are employed under the Supervising Architect of the Capitol and under the Superintendent of Public Buildings and Grounds a large number of persons who receive a very low compensation, all the way up from $1 a day to $60 a month. It seems to me that class of persons ought to receive the generosity of the Government as much as persons who receive more compensation.

Will my friend consent to add to this bill a provision that laborers employed in various Departments of the Government in this capital shall be entitled to a like leave of absence with pay?

Mr. REID, of North Carolina. I will say this to the gentleman: there are in the Government employment in the various Departments men receiving $900, $1,200, $1,400, and $1,600 who receive thirty days' leave of absence to go home to work at the elections.

A MEMBER. Oh, no; not now.

Mr. REID, of North Carolina. They have had it heretofore. But if the gentleman from Indiana will draw his amendment in the way he has stated I will accept it.

Mr. HOLMAN. I will offer that amendment.

Mr. MCMILLIN. If I understand the status of matters the substitute itself of the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. REID] is not yet before the House.

The SPEAKER. It is pending, but can not yet be voted on.

Mr. MCMILLIN. I understood the Chair to say it was read for information.

The SPEAKER. It is pending, but can not be voted on until the text of the original bill is perfected.

Mr. MCMILLIN. When will be the proper time to make the point of order that the substitute must have its first consideration in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union?

The SPEAKER. It is in order to do that now. The Chair stated when the substitute was sent up it could be read for information, but could not be voted on until the original proposition was perfected. That may have led gentlemen on the floor to suppose it was not pending. Under the rules it can be offered and be pending, but it could not be voted on at present.

Mr. REID, of North Carolina. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. REID, of North Carolina. Will the substitute be in order at any time during the pendency of this proposition?

The SPEAKER. It will. The Chair has stated it is in order now to offer it, but it could not be voted on under the rules of the House until the text of the original bill has been perfected. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MCMILLIN] makes the point of order that the substitute must be considered in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union under the rules of the House, inasmuch as it proposes to make an appropriation of money out of the Treasury.

Mr. BLOUNT. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BLOUNT. Does that take the bill to the Committee of the Whole?

The SPEAKER. It does; but there is nothing to prevent the House from immediately resolving itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union to consider it. No time is lost.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. I demand the previous question on the pending amendments.

The SPEAKER. The Chair must first determine whether the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MCMILLIN] is in order. It has not been read.

Mr. MCMILLIN. I did not offer an amendment, but made the point of order.

The SPEAKER. Then there is only one amendment pending.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Illinois. I understood I was recognized by the Chair.

The SPEAKER. But the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. O'NEILL] has demanded the previous question.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Illinois. I ask the gentleman to yield to me for an inquiry. I ask the chairman of the Committee on Labor whether the word "annual" should not be inserted in line 3, before the word "employés," so as to show that the bill only applies to the annual employés.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. It is intended to apply to all.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Illinois. Is the man who is employed for six months only or for three months only to have the benefit of this enactment?

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. Certainly.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Illinois. In that case it ought not to pass.

The SPEAKER. The previous question is demanded on the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BROWNE].

The question being taken, there were—ayes 47, noes 18.

Mr. MCMILLIN. In view of the fact that this motion if passed cuts off all debate, all chance for explanation, and will include those employed only for ten days as well as those serving for years, and the gentleman has said he would accept amendments never reported on and the effect and cost of which we can not tell, I make the point that no quorum has voted, that we may have further explanation and amendment.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. I move a call of the House. If a quorum is to be insisted on, the sooner we find out who are here the better.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion for the call of the House.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. I withdraw it on reflection, in order not to waste time.

Mr. MCMILLIN. I renew it.

The question being taken, the Speaker stated that the "noes" seemed to have it.

Mr. MCMILLIN. I call for a division.

The question being taken, there were—ayes 11, noes 65.

So a call of the House was not ordered.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee having made the point that no quorum has voted, the Chair will appoint as tellers the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. O'NEILL] and the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MCMILLIN].

Mr. SPRINGER. I ask that this bill be laid aside. If we can not pass it without a quorum let us take up some business which we can pass.

Mr. MCMILLIN. I do not consent that this bill shall go through without discussion, without other amendments than those the committee have indicated a willingness to accept, without any chance for a member to express even his opinions upon it.

Mr. SPRINGER. I ask unanimous consent that this bill be laid aside for the present. We can not pass it without a quorum, and if it is kept before the House we will lose the evening for other measures.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. I have no objection to the bill being laid aside since a quorum is demanded and I know there is not a quorum present. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

Mr. BINGHAM. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry. Under the rule of the House will we not adjourn at 11 o'clock?

The SPEAKER. Certainly.

Mr. BINGHAM. Can a quorum be assembled before that time?

The SPEAKER. That is not a question for the Chair to answer. The Chair does not know what would be the result of a call of the House.

Mr. MCMILLIN. I do not wish to stand in the way of the business of the committee and will not, for they have important bills to be acted upon, and I will not object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. O'NEILL] asks unanimous consent to withdraw this bill for the present.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. I desire to call up for consideration——

Mr. BINGHAM. If in order, I desire to ask the chairman of the Committee on Labor if it is his purpose to take up for consideration this evening the bill (S. 2076) to extend to letter-carriers the advantages secured to other employés of the United States by section 3738 of the Revised Statutes, relating to the hours of labor? [Cries of "Regular order!"] I am making an inquiry. That is in the regular order.

Mr. LAWLER. It is on the list.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. Yes; it is on the list to be called up this evening.

Mr. BINGHAM. What is its position on the list?

The SPEAKER. The regular order is demanded.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. I call up House resolution 142——

Mr. BINGHAM. Then the gentleman does not answer my question.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. I tell the gentleman it is on the list, to be called up very soon.

Mr. BINGHAM. Oh, everything is "on the list."

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I call up House resolution 142, which is joint resolution authorizing and directing the Commissioner of Labor to make an investigation as to convict labor.

The joint resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, &c., That the Commissioner of Labor be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, to make a full investigation as to the kind and amount of work performed in the penal institutions of the several States and Territories of the United States and the District of Columbia, as to the methods under which convicts are or may be employed, and as to all the facts pertaining to convict labor and the influence of the same upon the industries of the country, and embody the results of such investigation in his second annual report to the Secretary of the Interior: Provided, That the investigation hereby authorized can be carried out under the estimate of the expenses of the Bureau of Labor for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. I move the previous question on the passage of the joint resolution.

Mr. WILSON. Mr. Speaker, before that motion is put, I would like to call the attention of the chairman of the Committee on Labor to the proviso, which I think needs to be perfected. Its language is:

Provided, That the investigation hereby authorized can be carried out under the estimate of the expenses of the Bureau of Labor, &c.

I submit that it should be amended so as to read "under the appropriations made for the expenses of the Bureau of Labor," &c.

Mr. CANNON. I will ask the chairman of the Committee on Labor whether the Commissioner has not authority to make this investigation now?

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. I do not know that he has.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Missouri withdraw the demand for the previous question?

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. I do, for the present.

The SPEAKER. The amendment proposed by the gentleman from West Virginia will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 14 strike out the words "estimate of" and insert the words "appropriations made," making the proviso read: "Provided, That the investigation hereby authorized can be carried out under the appropriations made for the expenses of the Bureau of Labor for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887.

Mr. MCKINLEY. Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. O'NEILL] whether the expenses contemplated in this bill were estimated for by the Chief of the Bureau of Labor.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. He has an appropriation in gross, and this simply proposes that in his labors he shall give a certain amount of attention to the subject and furnish certain information about it.

Mr. MCKINLEY. But in the appropriation for his bureau has any provision been made for this special work?

Mr. LOVERING. It does not require any special appropriation.

Mr. MCKINLEY. If the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. O'NEILL] accepts the amendment of the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. WILSON] will there be any money to execute the provisions of this bill?

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. The estimates are not in detail; they are in gross.

Mr. MCKINLEY. I am merely asking for information.

Mr. CANNON. I think I can answer the question. I recollect that the Commissioner of Labor submitted a supplemental estimate (the legislative bill carries the appropriation for his bureau), in which he outlined quite a number of investigations, touching labor as connected with railways and labor as connected with the textile industries, and also the question of the employment of women and children; and we appropriated, in pursuance of his suggestions or recommendations, what we deemed sufficient to carry out the work in the lines indicated by him, but my recollection is that this was not included.

Mr. REED, of Maine. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the proviso.

Mr. CANNON. Now, Mr. Speaker, I want to say further to the gentleman that, if my recollection is correct, by passing this specific direction Congress may express an opinion which may perhaps keep the Commissioner from investigating some other matter of more importance than this in its relations to labor.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. There can be no more important subject than to investigate this question of convict labor, which to-day is destroying many of the trades by its unfair competition. Honest labor can not compete with the unpaid-for labor of convicts.

Mr. CANNON. Well, I think the question of labor as connected with railways is pretty important, perhaps more important than this.

Mr. MCKINLEY. What I was apprehensive of was that the proviso might impair the whole force of this joint resolution.

Mr. O'NEILL. I think the proviso might very properly be struck out.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED] moves to strike out the proviso.

Mr. REED, of Maine. Well, Mr. Speaker, I think this is a matter which ought to be discussed a little. I am not sure but there ought to be added an appropriation for this purpose. I do not wish to interfere with the business of the chairman of the Committee on Labor, but I submit to him that if he intends to make this effective he ought to make provision to pay the expense of the proposed investigation. What is the use of ordering a thing to be done when you do not provide any means of doing it? I have called the gentleman's attention to the matter and the responsibility is with him.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LOVERING] who introduced this joint resolution.

Mr. LOVERING. Mr. Speaker, this joint resolution was presented with the knowledge and consent of the Commissioner of Labor. At the time the interview was had with him he was of the opinion that the joint resolution should pass in this form, and that if it did pass sufficient money would be appropriated in a general way to enable him to carry out its provisions.

Mr. REED, of Maine. But the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] has just told us that there has been no appropriation made for this purpose.

Mr. CANNON. My recollection is that the supplemental estimates did not include this particular work.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. I think the Commissioner of Labor itemized the matter.

Mr. REED, of Maine. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] had better send for the estimates, and let us know what we are doing. If this is a legitimate and proper work, it is legitimate and proper that an appropriation be made to carry it on.

Mr. MCADOO. Almost all the great States require work of this character to be done and have bureaus charged with its supervision, so that the expense to be incurred by the United States under the pending measure must be merely nominal.

Mr. CANNON. I am in harmony with gentlemen who desire this investigation; the only question is whether we ought to give more money.

Mr. PERKINS. Why can not the Commissioner of Labor collect this information now?

Several MEMBERS. He can.

Mr. LOVERING. But this bill directs him to make the investigation.

Mr. ADAMS, of New York. As I understand, he is not restricted now to any particular line of investigation. I put to the chairman of the Committee on Labor the direct question whether the power now conferred upon the Commissioner of Labor would not enable him to make this investigation and report, without additional legislation?

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. I will answer the gentleman that the Commissioner of Labor is in favor of the passage of this resolution as it is. If it be found that an additional appropriation is needed, your Committee on Appropriations can incorporate it in some of the bills now pending between the two Houses. I renew the demand for the previous question.

Mr. REED, of Maine. I should like an appropriation of $10,000 made as a substitute for the proviso. If we want this work done, I would rather not trust it to the Committee on Appropriations, who are, perhaps, quite as economical as they are patriotic. [Laughter.]

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. My friend from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] says he will take care of it.

Mr. REED, of Maine. The gentleman from Indiana! [Laughter.]

Mr. HEPBURN. I desire to ask the gentleman from Missouri a question.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Missouri withdraw the demand for the previous question?

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. No, sir.

Mr. HEPBURN. I desire to inquire whether the purpose of this bill would not be better carried out by striking out the word "can," in the thirteenth line. Then the bill will be mandatory.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri insists on the demand for the previous question, and no debate is in order.

The previous question was ordered; there being—ayes 46, noes 14.

The SPEAKER. The question is first upon the amendment proposed by the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. WILSON], which will be again read.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 14, strike out "estimate of" and insert "appropriations made for."

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri, and other members. That is right.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is now on ordering the joint resolution as amended to be engrossed and read the third time.

Mr. HOLMAN. There was no motion to strike out the proviso, I believe?

The SPEAKER. That motion was withdrawn.

Mr. REED, of Maine. No; it was not withdrawn.

The SPEAKER. Then the Chair should have put the question upon it.

Mr. REED, of Maine. I desired to add an appropriation.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will put the question on the motion of the gentleman from Maine to strike out the proviso.

Mr. HOLMAN. Was that made before the previous question was called?

The SPEAKER. It was. The Chair thought it had been withdrawn, but the gentleman from Maine informs the Chair that it was not.

The question being taken on the motion of Mr. REED, of Maine, to strike out the proviso, it was not agreed to.

The joint resolution as amended was then ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri, moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE TO EMPLOYÉS IN NAVY-YARDS.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. The next measure I call up is House bill No. 8819.

The Clerk read the title of the bill, as follows:

A bill (H. R. 8819) to grant leaves of absence to employés in the United States navy-yards.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state that this bill is in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. I ask unanimous consent that the bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. OATES. I object.

Mr. FORAN. I rise to a question of order. Bills are not being called up in their order on the Calendar.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is aware of that. The order made for this evening's session provided for the consideration of such bills as should be presented by the Committee on Labor.

Mr. FORAN. But the Committee on Labor has not authorized the order in which they are being presented.

The SPEAKER. The Chair of course has no knowledge as to that matter.

Mr. McKINLEY. I was unable to hear the remark of my colleague [Mr. FORAN].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman makes the point of order that bills are not being called up in their order on the Calendar, and that the Committee on Labor has not directed any other order to be pursued.

Mr. McKINLEY. Does the gentleman make the point that we are not considering bills in the order in which the committee agreed they should be considered.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman makes the point that the bills are not being considered in the order in which they were reported and in which they stand on the Calendar, and that the committee has not directed any other order to be pursued. The resolution under which the House met this evening provides that the evening session shall be devoted exclusively to the consideration of such bills as may be presented for consideration by the Committee on Labor.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I am calling up bills in the order deemed proper according to the judgment of the committee which gave us this night for the business of the Committee on Labor.

Mr. McKINLEY. What committee is that?

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. The Committee on Rules.

Mr. McKINLEY. They fixed the order?

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. It was arranged in the interest of having the most work accomplished for this reason: There were certain bills to which it was thought there was so much opposition in this House that to call them up first would, on account of the time consumed, involve the defeat of all the other bills reported from the Committee on Labor, and they thought the bills to which there was no apparent opposition should be first considered.

Mr. BROWN, of Pennsylvania. How do you know that?

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. The order under which these bills have been arranged is the order in which I have called them up. The next bill is the one providing for the extension of the eight-hour law to the letter-carriers. The bill following that is the bill providing for the restoration of the wages of the employés of the Government Printing Office.

Mr. FUNSTON. Call up the next bill then.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman called up a bill, which has been read, and the Chair submitted the request of the gentleman from Missouri, that by unanimous consent the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union should be discharged from its further consideration, which was objected to.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. I will withdraw the request in regard to that bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will proceed.

LETTER-CARRIERS.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. I now call up the bill (S. 2076) to extend to letter-carriers the advantages secured to other employés of the United States by section 3738 of the Revised Statutes, relating to the hours of labor.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That eight hours shall constitute a day's work for letter-carriers who are now or who may hereafter be employed by or on behalf of the Government of the United States; and there shall be no reduction in compensation paid for services rendered by reason of the limitation of the hours of labor prescribed by this act.

Mr. WILSON. This seems to be a Senate bill, although the copy I have does not state that it passed the Senate.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. It passed the Senate and is on the House Calendar.

The SPEAKER. The bill passed the Senate on the 1st day of June last.

Mr. BLOUNT. Is this bill in the Committee of the Whole?

The SPEAKER. It is not. The Chair was first under the impression it was.

Mr. BLOUNT. I make the point of order it must have its first consideration in the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. Why?

Mr. BLOUNT. Because it is an additional charge on the Treasury.

Mr. BINGHAM. How does the gentleman know that?

Mr. McMILLIN. Because he has mother wit.

Mr. BLOUNT. There is no doubt that is the purpose of it.

The SPEAKER. The Chair must be governed in deciding the point of order by the contents of the bill. It provides that eight hours shall constitute a day's work for letter-carriers who are now or who may hereafter be employed by or on behalf of the Government of the United States; and there shall be no reduction in compensation paid for services rendered by reason of the limitation of the hours of labor prescribed by this act. Now it may be if the hours of labor of letter-carriers are so diminished as to make it necessary to employ an additional number in that service an appropriation will have to be made for their payment. But that is a matter of argument. The bill does not make an appropriation and on its face does not require any appropriation to be made.

Mr. BLOUNT. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BLOUNT. Has the Chair considered in connection with this bill the communication to this House from the Postmaster-General that it does involve additional expense?

The SPEAKER. That is a matter of argument. The invariable rule is to look at the bill itself and see whether on its face, by its terms, it makes an appropriation or requires one to be made.

If it should involve an increase of the service—an increase of the force necessary to perform the service—there is nothing in the bill requiring an appropriation to pay that increased force, and there is no appropriation in the bill itself.

Mr. BLOUNT. I would like to know if the language of the rule requires an appropriation to be made in order that such a proposition must have its first consideration in the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will cause the rule to be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Clause 3, Rule XXIII:

"All motions or propositions involving a tax or charge upon the people; all proceedings touching appropriations of money, or bills making appropriations of money or property, or requiring such appropriation to be made, or authorizing payments out of appropriations already made, or releasing any liability to the United States for money or property, shall be first considered in a Committee of the Whole, and a point of order under this rule shall be good at any time before the consideration of a bill has commenced."

The SPEAKER. The language of the rule is, making appropriations, or requiring such appropriations to be made, or releasing some liability to the Government.

Mr. CRAIN. I believe the point of order has been overruled?

The SPEAKER. It has been.

Mr. BLOUNT. I would inquire further whether this comes up in the regular way on the Calendar?

The SPEAKER. The Chair has already stated, but a few moments ago, what the order of the House was: that this evening should be set apart exclusively for the consideration of such measures as might be presented from the Committee on Labor; and under that rule the Chair has allowed the gentleman from Missouri, the chairman of the Committee on Labor, without objection from any one on the floor, to make a report from the committee, which has been considered.

Mr. CRAIN. The object of this bill, as shown by its caption, is to give to the letter-carriers——

Mr. BLOUNT. I make the objection that this is not considered in the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair stated that the resolution allowed the presentation of measures from the Committee on Labor. It does not specify their order of presentation.

Mr. CRAIN. I believe I have the floor.

Mr. McMILLIN. I would like to have the report read at some time during the consideration of this measure.

The SPEAKER. It is in the nature of debate, and may be read in the time of any gentleman who gets the floor.

Mr. CRAIN. The object of this bill, as I was about stating when interrupted, is apparent from its caption. Section 3738 of the Revised Statutes provides that eight hours shall constitute a legal day's work for all laborers, workmen, and mechanics in the employ of the Government. Letter-carriers were supposed to be included within that provision, but the Post-Office authorities have held that they are not embraced within that section of the Revised Statutes; and in order to include them within its provisions this bill has been prepared. It has passed the Senate; it contains but one section; it is easily understood, and I think argument upon it is unnecessary. I therefore move the previous question upon the bill.

Mr. McMILLIN. I trust the gentleman will not insist upon that. This should certainly be debated. It is too important a measure to pass without full consideration.

Mr. BLOUNT. The gentleman from Texas certainly should not undertake to cut off debate in that manner upon a proposition involving an increase of expenditures amounting to several millions of dollars, especially in view of the fact that he has an official communication in his possession from the Department that he withholds from the House. I wish to say that I am not willing, so far as I am concerned, to be choked off in that way; and I shall resort to whatever methods I may properly employ to compel a fair consideration of this bill.

Mr. CRAIN. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Georgia is aware of the fact that at 11 o'clock this evening the session must terminate. Now the previous question, as I understand it, will give fifteen minutes' debate on each side, which I take it will be ample for the gentleman to state his objections.

The SPEAKER. Not when there has been debate, as in this case, the gentleman from Texas having debated it.

Mr. CRAIN. We will give, then, some debate if the gentleman wants it.

Mr. BLOUNT. This is a proposition which involves several millions of dollars, and we should certainly have a full opportunity to discuss it.

Mr. CRAIN. And so far as withholding the communication to which the gentleman refers, is concerned, I have only to say that he is mistaken. I have no right to withhold it. I withhold nothing.

Mr. BLOUNT. But you have demanded the previous question.

Mr. CRAIN. That does not prevent the letter from being put into the RECORD.

Mr. BLOUNT. What is the use of putting it into the RECORD after action has been taken upon the bill?

Mr. MCMILLIN. I hope the gentleman from Texas will permit the communication from a Cabinet officer of the Government to be read for the information of the House before the previous question is insisted upon.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has demanded the previous question, and the only thing in order is a vote on that demand.

The question was taken; and on a division there were—ayes 48, noes 68.

So the previous question was not ordered.

Mr. CRAIN. Mr. Speaker, I now resume the floor, and wish to say——

Mr. BLOUNT. The gentleman has lost the floor and lost control of the bill.

Mr. CRAIN. I am willing to give the gentleman ten minutes if that will be satisfactory.

The SPEAKER. Under the practice of the House, when a gentleman in charge of a bill demands the previous question and the demand is not sustained the floor passes away from him with the control of the proposed measure.

Mr. BLOUNT. Mr. Speaker, I will take the floor in my own right now, and yield fifteen minutes to the gentleman from Texas who asks for that time.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. If nobody else wants to do so, I shall propose to amend this bill by adding after the words "letter-carriers," in line 4, the words:

And all other persons.

Mr. CRAIN. The letter to which the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT] refers is a letter which was sent to the Speaker of the House by the Postmaster-General; and in accordance with the request of the gentleman I will give the substance of it.

Several MEMBERS. Let it be read.

Mr. CRAIN. The substance of this letter is that the passage of this bill will involve an expenditure of $1,350,000, or thereabouts; and that it will require the employment of twenty-two hundred and eight additional letter-carriers in the one hundred and eighty-one free-delivery offices in the several States. The Postmaster-General says in that letter that he bases that statement upon communications that were received by the various chief clerks in his Department from the postmasters of those free-delivery offices. In support of the statement made in that letter he furnishes a communication from J. F. Bates, superintendent of the delivery system, who appends to that communication a statement giving answers from the various postmasters of the free-delivery offices, in which they set out, first, the number of hours that the letter-carriers are employed in their respective offices; second, the number of carriers who are actually employed; and third, the additional number of carriers that will be required to carry out the provisions of this bill should it become a law.

I have examined this statement very carefully, and as the gentleman from Georgia has permitted me to go on I will give the House the benefit of the information which I have acquired.

I have selected twenty-three free-delivery offices embraced in this list; and in those twenty-three offices I have discovered that the postmasters have made mistakes in their calculations which amount in the number of carriers to seven hundred and twenty-two and in the amount of money which they say is necessary to be expended to $433,200, without including the excessive charges as incidental expenses for seven hundred and twenty-two carriers.

In the city of Boston the postmaster reports that the letter-carriers work nine hours a day; that there are two hundred and ninety-five carriers in actual service, and that he will require an additional force of seventy carriers to put this bill in execution. By a calculation which I have made and which any gentleman in this House can make that postmaster is clearly in error, and instead of needing seventy additional carriers he will only need thirty-seven.

In the city of Brooklyn, where the letter-carriers are working ten hours a day, according to the postmaster, he reports that he will require one hundred additional carriers, whereas the calculation shows he will only need fifty-two.

A MEMBER. What is the number now?

Mr. CRAIN. He claims to have two hundred and nine now.

Mr. ADAMS, of New York. I wish to ask the gentleman whether these postmasters in New York and Boston in making up the number of hours these men work have reported that they work, say, ten continuous hours?

Mr. CRAIN. They do not; I will come to that before I close.

In the city of Detroit the postmaster reports he works his carriers nine and a half hours a day; that he has fifty-two in actual service, and that he will require twenty additional carriers, whereas a correct calculation will show that he will only need ten extra carriers.

In the city of Erie, the postmaster says that he works his carriers eight hours a day; that he employs twelve; and, mirabile dictu, that he will require twelve more to comply with the requirements of this bill, although he only works his men eight hours a day now.

In the city of Fort Wayne, according to the postmaster, there are eleven carriers, who work eleven hours a day, and he says he will require eleven extra carriers if he be compelled to carry out the provisions of this bill. The calculation will show that he is mistaken to the extent of five carriers.

In the city of Jersey City, represented by my honored friend [Mr. MCADOO], the postmaster says he works his carriers ten and three quarters hours a day; that he has thirty-six in actual service; and that he will require thirty-six more to comply with this bill.

Mr. MCADOO. Will the gentleman allow me to make a suggestion there?

Mr. CRAIN. Yes, sir.

Mr. MCADOO. I may insert a letter in the RECORD which will explain his statement.

Mr. CRAIN. I do not mean that he intentionally made an error. Do not misunderstand me. The calculation is that at Jersey City instead of thirty-six it will only require thirteen additional carriers to execute the proposed law. In Kalamazoo the postmaster has six letter-carriers, who work nine hours a day; and yet he says he will require six more to comply with the provisions of this bill; whereas in truth and in fact he will only need two. So it goes down through the list of twenty-three. I will not read the figures for each one. But I will take the city of New Haven. The postmaster there works the carriers thirteen hours a day; he has thirty-five in actual service, and says he will require twenty-five more, whereas he will only need seventeen.

Mr. BRAGG. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. CRAIN. Yes, sir.

Mr. BRAGG. Do you understand that each letter-carrier works nine or ten hours a day?

Mr. CRAIN. I have already answered that question.

Mr. BRAGG. Is not this the order of business, that they are divided up into reliefs, one going out to make one trip and the next trip being made by another relief entirely, the first carrier not going out on that trip, and the nine and a half or ten hours a day covering the whole time that they are all out?

Mr. CRAIN. They work from twelve to fifteen hours a day, if you count their actual time of service in that way. This statement means the time they are performing actual service, the time they are out on their routes. Take the city of New York—and this is the most remarkable statement, I think, in the whole list—in the city of New York the postmaster reports that he employs seven hundred and three carriers, and that he works them eight and a half hours a day; that is only half an hour more a day than this bill provides for, so that for every sixteen carriers employed by him, if this bill were to become a law, he would have to employ one additional carrier. Now, he says that in order to comply with the provisions of this bill he would have to employ five hundred additional carriers; whereas the fact is that instead of five hundred he would need only forty-four.

Any gentleman can make the calculation for himself.

Mr. HEPBURN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. CRAIN. I can not answer many more questions, but I will yield to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN].

Mr. HEPBURN. I would like to know whether these postmasters who have made these miscalculations are all recent appointments? [Laughter.]

A MEMBER. No; they have held over.

Mr. CRAIN. That is a question into which I do not desire to enter at this time.

Mr. MCADOO. The postmaster at Jersey City is a Republican, coming over from the last administration.

Mr. CRAIN. I do not think that politics ought to be injected into this discussion, and therefore I will ask the gentleman from Iowa to excuse me from answering his question further.

Take next, Mr. Speaker, the case of Philadelphia——

Mr. WEBER. If the gentleman will permit me, I would like him to state the basis of his calculation that only forty-four additional carriers would be required in New York.

Mr. CRAIN. I will tell the gentleman. The postmaster says he works his carriers eight and a half hours a day. So, if you take off half an hour from the time of each man, when you have taken off sixteen half hours an additional man must be employed to make up the time. Therefore, for every sixteen men now employed he would have to employ an additional man, and by dividing sixteen into seven hundred and three, the total number of carriers employed, you get forty-four, the number required in excess of those actually in service.

Mr. WEBER. But with those seven hundred and three carriers now employed there are seven hundred and three routes. Now, if the gentleman will tell me how the one additional carrier whom he would employ for every sixteen now employed could cover the sixteen routes, then I will admit the correctness of his calculation.

Mr. CRAIN. I put this calculation upon the same basis as the calculations made by other postmasters whose statements I have found to be correct.

Mr. WEBER. Then those calculations are wrong, and you are proceeding upon a wrong basis, and the gentleman who said that he would require nearly as many additional carriers as he was then employing was nearer to being correct.

Mr. CRAIN. Well, I have made my calculation on the same basis upon which the other postmasters have made their statements, and applying that test I find the calculation which I have made to be correct.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. If the gentleman will permit me, suppose twenty men are employed ten hours a day. Now if you confine their labor to eight hours their day of labor ceases two hours sooner, and there are forty hours' work left to be provided for. How do you provide for that?

Mr. CRAIN. Extend the routes.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. But you can not extend the routes because of the hours at which the mails come.

Mr. CRAIN. The way I make the calculation is this: I multiply the number of hours by the number of men actually in service and I divide the result by eight, which gives the number of men that the postmaster will have to employ if this becomes a law. Then I subtract the number he now employs from the quotient, and the difference gives the number of additional men required.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. I was under that impression at one time, but I think the gentleman is in error, and I know that he desires to get the matter correctly.

Mr. CRAIN. Certainly. I am stating the basis upon which I have made the calculation, and it is the basis upon which the statements of postmasters which I found to be correct seem to have been made.

Mr. WADE. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. CRAIN. I must decline to yield further, Mr. Speaker. I also submitted this matter to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BINGHAM], who I believe was at one time postmaster of Philadelphia, and he stated the calculation was correct according to his understanding. I am not an expert in postal matters, but I have made the calculation to the best of my ability upon the basis of the calculations of the postmasters whose statements I found to be correct.

In addition to what I have said I will state that those who have furnished the Postmaster-General this information say in substance that they do not now employ these men in actual work more than eight hours a day; that they keep them from perhaps half past six in the morning until half past six or seven at night, but that they are not actually at work on the streets gathering and delivering the mails more than eight hours a day upon an average. If it be true that they work the men only about eight hours a day, then how can it be true that an appropriation of $1,350,000 would be required to carry this bill into effect? If they employ the men only eight hours a day now, then clearly this bill will be harmless, because it will add nothing to the expenditures of the Department.

But the fact is that while these men are only engaged eight hours a day in actual service upon the streets, going through the snow and rain in every direction in the performance of their duties, yet when not thus occupied upon the streets they are compelled to consume a great deal of time in their offices in doing what is called "routing" their letters; that is, assorting them, preparing for the next outdoor service. In other words, they actually work from twelve to fifteen hours a day. This is too much work for any man to do continuously.

Mr. OATES. I would like to ask the gentleman whether any of these employés have resigned, or whether persons have refused to accept the positions on account of the hardship of the service?

Mr. CRAIN. No, sir; and repeatedly on this floor when members of Congress have been asked whether they were coming back I have heard them individually say, "I do not believe I shall; it is such hard work; we are perfect drudges and slaves; we are compelled to run from Department to Department, and to perform every kind of duty for our constituents; I do not believe I shall come back." But I have yet to hear the first case of any member resigning on this ground.

Mr. ADAMS, of New York. Neither did the car-drivers in New York resign, but the Legislature came to their rescue.

Mr. CRAIN. Of course there would have to be a reorganization of the service in the various offices. The routes would have to be lengthened and the time of service in the offices shortened so as to conform to the provisions of the bill, but the expense of carrying them out would be nothing like the amount suggested in the letter of the Postmaster-General.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. BLOUNT. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. CRAIN] has made his own estimate of the increased cost to the service which this measure will cause. While I have very great regard for that gentleman's intelligence, I think it will be much more satisfactory to the House if I have read official communications from the Post-Office Department. I therefore send to the desk to be read a communication from the superintendent of the free-delivery service, with a statement showing the whole time that these men are employed. When in actual service they are not always on their routes. The communication and tabular statement which I send to the desk to be read will disclose the time these men are actually in service.

The Clerk read as follows:

POST-OFFICE DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE POSTMASTER-GENERAL,
Washington, D. C., June 7, 1886.

SIR: In response to your communication under date of May 5, 1886, transmitting, by direction of the Committee on Rules, the inclosed draught of a bill to be proposed as an amendment to House bill No. 5540, and requesting that I inform the committee what additional expense, if any, would be caused by the passage of such a bill, and generally as to the advisability and practicability of the execution of such a law and its effect upon the postal service, I have the honor to submit herewith a report to me, under date of May 28, by the superintendent of free delivery, exhibiting the results of inquiries made of the postmasters at the several free-delivery offices, together with his estimate based thereon of the probable increase of cost in the free-delivery service by the passage of such an act; also a communication from the disbursing clerk and superintendent of this department, under date of May 7, showing the effect which the act would produce upon the force of laborers now employed in the department; and also a communication, under date of May 28, from the Superintendent of Railway Mail Service, exhibiting the probable effect of the introduction of the eight-hour law to that service.

It is perhaps not within the contemplation of the proposed act that railway mail clerks should be embraced within it; but if that is considered, the communication of the superintendent suggests very pertinent reasons why it would be an element of inconvenience and embarrassment so great as to interfere seriously with the distribution of the mails.

The communication from the superintendent of free-delivery service exhibits the probable increased cost at $1,344,822.20. In respect to this it may be remarked that although letter-carriers are in a certain sense on duty more than eight hours in many places, yet the actual labor which they perform frequently does not reach to eight hours, and while with many the service is laborious and severe, with probably a large majority the contrary is the fact.

So far as the department is concerned some small increase of the number of laborers would be necessary, but it may be still asserted that no more than eight hours labor is required of any laborer, although more hours of duty are necessary in the case of some in order to an economical arrangement of the work to be done.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully, yours,

WM. F. VILAS, Postmaster-General.

Hon. JOHN G. CARLISLE,
Speaker House of Representatives.

POST-OFFICE DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE POSTMASTER-GENERAL,
Washington, D. C., June 8, 1886.

SIR: In the communication which I had the honor to address to you upon the subject of the proposed eight-hour legislation for letter-carriers, I mentioned as one of the accompanying papers a communication from the Superintendent of Railway Mail Service to me. By accident, my secretary omitted to include it, and I beg herewith to hand it to you to go with my former communication.

Very respectfully, yours,

WM. F. VILAS, Postmaster-General.

Hon. JOHN G. CARLISLE,
Speaker House of Representatives.

POST-OFFICE DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE FIRST ASSISTANT POSTMASTER-GENERAL,
FREE-DELIVERY DIVISION,
Washington, D. C., May 28, 1886.

SIR: I have the honor to inform you that on receipt of the inclosed letter of T. E. Nash, esq., chief clerk, I addressed a circular to the postmasters at the free-delivery offices, one hundred and eighty-one in number (a copy of which is also inclosed), and all of them have replied. I send you a tabular statement herewith, showing in detail the number of additional carriers which will be required in the event of the passage of the bill referred to. It will be noticed that the total number is two thousand two hundred and eight. As sixteen officers report that double the present force will be required, and others a large proportionate number, it is my opinion that a reorganization under the direction of a careful inspector would permit a reduction of the number estimated in many cases. The difference in the time of arrival and departure of mails at different offices will account in part for the disproportion in the several estimates. The additional expenses immediately connected with the free-delivery system will be as follows:

2,208 carriers, at $600 each	$1,324,800 00
2,208 satchels, at $2.15 each	4,747 20
Additional horse-hire	2,500 00
Additional car-fare	6,875 00
*Additional carrier furniture, 118 offices	5,900 00
Total amount for first year	1,344,822 20

It will be difficult to fully comply with the provisions of this law, owing to frequent changes in the time of arrival and departure of mails, which will require reorganization of the force from time to time. Even with the increase in number of carriers, a majority of the postmasters express grave doubts as to their ability to literally comply with this law, and at the same time render satisfactory service to the public.

Very respectfully, yours,

J. F. BATES,
Superintendent of Free-Delivery System.

Hon. WILLIAM F. VILAS,
Postmaster-General.

*The remaining offices, sixty-three in number, are in Government buildings, and no estimate for carrier furniture is made, as this is provided by the Treasury Department.

POST-OFFICE DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE FIRST ASSISTANT POSTMASTER-GENERAL,
FREE-DELIVERY DIVISION,
Washington, D. C., May 8, 1886.

SIR: A bill is now pending in Congress which provides as follows:

"Eight hours shall constitute a day's work for laborers, workmen, mechanics, and letter carriers, who are now, or may hereafter be, employed in the civil service by or on behalf of the Government of the United States."

Please inform this office what effect the passage of such a law will have on your carrier service. How many hours of labor are now required of your letter carriers, including the time they are necessarily employed in the post-office? In reorganizing your force so as to comply with this law, based on the construction that it means eight consecutive hours, or such a reasonable division of that time as to substantially comply with this construction, will additional carriers be required at your office, and if so, how many? What additional expense other than for carriers' salaries will necessarily be incurred?

This information is called for by Congress, and an immediate answer is therefore necessary. Please reply promptly and greatly oblige,

Very respectfully yours.

J. F. BATES,
Superintendent Free-Delivery System.

POST-OFFICE DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF DISBURSING CLERK AND SUPERINTENDENT,
Washington, D. C., May 7, 1886.

SIR: In response to your request that I should state how the work of this Department would be affected by the passage of House bill No. 5540, relative to the eight-hour law for laborers, workmen, and mechanics, I have the honor to report that the carpenters, plumber, awning-maker, watchmen, engineers, firemen, and elevator conductors now work eight hours a day.

There are in this Department forty-nine laborers at a salary of $660 per annum. Twenty-nine of these are employed in the various divisions at work which requires them to be here during office hours from 9 a. m. until 4 p. m., seven hours a day.

The other twenty are under the superintendent of the building, and their duties, in the care of the building, require them to be here from 6 a. m. to 8.30 a. m. They report again at 11 a. m., and are on hand from that time until 4 p. m. to do all the heavy work of the Department, such as moving and lifting furniture and carrying books, files, heavy bags, and packages of documents, &c. From 4 until 6.30 p. m., and often later, they are employed in cleaning the building; making, in all, a working day of ten hours.

Should the hours of work of these men be reduced to eight hours a day, it would necessitate an increase of at least ten laborers, in order to have a sufficient number on hand at the times when their services are required. This would add $6,600 to the appropriation to be made for laborers in the office of the disbursing clerk and superintendent.

Very respectfully,

PERRY C. SMITH,
Disbursing Clerk and Superintendent.

Hon. WILLIAM F. VILAS,
Postmaster-General.

POST-OFFICE DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE GENERAL SUPERINTENDENT OF RAILWAY MAIL SERVICE,
Washington, D. C., May 28, 1886.

SIR: Replying to yours of May 6, transmitting copy of the bill to amend House bill 5540, relative to the eight-hour law, so as to read:

"Eight hours shall constitute a day's work for laborers, workmen, mechanics, and letter-carriers, who are now or who may hereafter be employed in the civil service by or on behalf of the Government of the United States; and there shall be no reduction in compensation paid for services rendered by reason of the limitation of the hours of labor prescribed by this act, &c."— and wherein you ask my views regarding the effect that such a law would have upon the railway mail service, I would state that I have carefully considered the matter, in connection with division superintendents, and I am clearly of the opinion that such a law could not be applied to and should have no bearing upon railway postal clerks; and this opinion is indorsed by all of the division superintendents, who, by reason of their having immediate charge of the men and the work, are the best judges of the effect that such a law would have upon the practical workings of the service.

Upon the 20th day of March last there were in the service 4,526 clerks; of these, 4,159 were employed in postal cars upon the lines, 17 in the office of the general superintendent, 91 in the offices of the nine division superintendents: 47 as chief clerks, 15 as assistants to chief clerks, and 197 as transfer clerks. Now, considering these different classes separately, I think you will agree with me that, so far as the clerks employed upon lines are concerned, a law of this kind prescribing a specific period of time as a day's labor could not be put into effect. It is necessary for the proper distribution of the mail that clerks should be on duty between certain points, in most cases terminals upon railroads. The schedules upon which trains are run between these points are arranged solely and exclusively by the railroad companies, and over them the Department has no control whatever. If the time consumed upon a trip is only six hours it would be wholly unnecessary to hold such a clerk upon duty for two additional hours when there would be nothing for him to do. If, on the other hand, the run is of nine hours' duration, you can readily see that it would be impracticable to relieve this clerk at the end of eight hours and place another clerk upon the line for whom there would only remain one hour's duty. Each clerk is held personally responsible for mail worked.

It would, therefore, be necessary for the first clerk to tie out his mail and for the clerk coming on duty at that point to open up a new case. This, of course, would consume time. The point at which the eight hours would expire would just as liable be at some small, unimportant point, and in most cases the clerk going off duty would very probably ride to the end of the road any way in order to get a suitable place to stay. A large majority of the clerks upon lines are only on duty a portion of the time, the balance of the time being needed for rest and study; and this introduces a new feature, in that while the clerks are not on actual duty upon the cars, still, as it is necessary that they should study in order to perfect themselves in their work, they can not strictly be said to be off duty while so doing.

The railway mail service demands fully as much mental as physical labor. A clerk is required to commit to memory his schemes of distribution, to make himself thoroughly familiar with railroad schedules and connections, to make out daily, monthly, and a number of special reports, to appear for examination at stated periods, keep a careful and accurate record of all registered matter handled, and thoroughly understand the postal laws and regulations. He can not, therefore, be properly classed as a laborer. While his duties could not exactly be classed as professional, still the intellectual strain he is required to undergo is akin to that required in the learned professions.

CHIEF CLERKS.

The work of these men is more executive than clerical in its nature, and I think it would be very detrimental to the service to attempt to prescribe a certain number of hours as a day's work for these men. They are, as a rule, in charge of a large number of clerks and are required to see that the work is properly performed upon the lines assigned to them. In cases where clerks are sick or disabled they are expected to see that the work is properly performed either by other clerks or substitutes. They are required to keep track of the distribution upon the various lines, to issue orders to the clerks regarding the same, to conduct examinations, and to attend to a large correspondence. They are subject to the call of duty at any hour of the day or night; and, while I do not think that under ordinary circumstances they are employed an average of more than eight hours per day, still there are emergencies that require their watchful care and attention, sometimes covering a period of several days, during which a chief clerk is required to obtain such rest as he can and when he can and still meet the emergency and uphold the efficiency of the service.

Chief clerks, as above stated, are required to examine the clerks; and while a chief clerk is doing this he is required to hold the clerk being examined under his personal supervision. The clerk is not allowed to leave the examination case, and he is not limited as to time; hence, if the chief clerk was only on duty for eight hours, it would probably often happen that the eight hours would expire while one or more clerks were in the midst of an examination; therefore, the examination would have to be thrown up, unless there was another chief clerk there to continue it. The placing of two or more chief clerks at any point (and under the eight-hour system it would require three at very important points, because they are liable to be called upon to act at any hour of the day or night) would, I think, result disastrously to the service, in that there would very likely be a conflict of authority and multiplication of ideas of government and discipline.

TRANSFER CLERKS.

These men are stationed at the depots at important points to attend to the proper transfer and dispatch of the mails. In many cases there is but one clerk employed to attend to all of the mails arriving and departing during the twenty-four hours, and in a great many cases he may properly be said to be on duty every hour in the day; still, when you consider the nature of his duties you will readily see that this is not true. He is only occupied when trains are arriving and departing. There are many hours of the twenty-four when he has practically nothing to do, and many more in which he is only occupied a few moments.

At the larger points where there is more than one clerk employed the work is arranged, as nearly as possible, upon the eight-hour system, and a clerk is occupied continuously during that time either in attending to the receipt or dispatch of mails from and to trains or in other duties, such as making reports, distributing wooden labels and pouch slides, putting up and dispatching supplies, &c. While with these men the eight-hour system could probably be adopted, it would result in a large expenditure to the Government without, I think, any commensurate increase in the efficiency of the service. Transfer clerks, in my estimation, are not overworked. They are as a rule at home every night and in most cases their pay is ample for the work performed.

I have not attempted to obtain specific figures as to the increased expenditure that would be caused by the introduction of the eight-hour system, where possible, in this service. I think I have demonstrated that the only class of clerks that could be affected by the introduction of this system is that of transfer clerks. This class would probably have to be increased about one-third; but considering the nature of their duties and upon the basis that they are not underpaid at present, I could not recommend such an increase in the force and such a diminution of work without recommending a reduction of pay, in many cases probably to such a figure that the present skilled help would not consent to remain. In fact, as a class, I am sure they would prefer to perform their duties as at present and retain present pay.

Very respectfully,

JNO. JAMESON,
General Superintendent.

Hon. WILLIAM F. VILAS,
Postmaster-General, Washington, D. C.

Pending the reading of documents sent to the desk by Mr. BLOUNT the following proceedings took place:

Mr. LAWLER. I ask unanimous consent, as there is so much noise in the Hall, that the further reading of these documents be dispensed with.

Mr. BLOUNT. The gentleman has not the floor for that purpose.

The SPEAKER. These papers are being read in the time of the gentleman from Georgia, and, as the Chair understands, he does not yield for the request of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. LAWLER] for unanimous consent.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Georgia yield?

Mr. BLOUNT. I do for a moment.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. I ask unanimous consent that leave be granted members generally to print remarks on the various bills which have been passed this evening.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent that leave be given to all members who desire to do so to print in the RECORD remarks upon the bills——

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. Considered this evening.

The SPEAKER. Upon the bills considered this evening, whether passed or not. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. BINGHAM. Does that apply to the pending bill?

The SPEAKER. As the Chair stated the request, it does. The gentleman's proposition as first stated applied to "bills passed;" but as modified it applied to all bills considered.

Mr. LORE. Mr. Speaker, I objected when the Chair called for objection. I merely desire to state that I did so in order not to have so much matter printed in the RECORD that is not necessary.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Delaware [Mr. LORE] objects.

Mr. BLOUNT. Mr. Speaker, while the reading is being interrupted I will ask unanimous consent to have the letter of the Postmaster-General on this subject printed in the RECORD in connection with my remarks. What the Clerk has been reading is from other officers of the Department.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia asks unanimous consent to print in the RECORD the letter of the Postmaster-General on this subject. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. MCADOO. Mr. Speaker, I made a statement in regard to the postmaster of Jersey City which I want to make more explicit in the RECORD. Therefore I ask unanimous consent to print as a part of the debate on the pending bill some additional remarks—probably not more than a "stickful" of printed matter.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New Jersey asks unanimous consent to print in the RECORD a brief statement in regard to the postmaster at Jersey City. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. Speaker, the chairman of the committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads [Mr. BLOUNT] has been allowed the privilege of printing in the RECORD a communication of the Postmaster-General on this subject. There is a disposition on the part of some gentlemen here to take exception to some propositions embraced in that statement; and it seems to me but fair, for a full understanding of the question should it be considered in the future, that the privilege of printing remarks on the pending bill be extended to all members.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BING-

HAM] asks unanimous consent that leave be granted to all members desiring to do so to print remarks on the bill now under consideration. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. REID, of North Carolina. I renew the request that leave be granted to all members desiring it to print remarks on the bills which have been passed to-night. I hope the objection which has been made will not be pressed.

Mr. WINANS. I object.

The SPEAKER. The hour of 11 o'clock having arrived, the House, in accordance with its previous order, stands adjourned until to-morrow morning at 11 o'clock.

SENATE.

FRIDAY, July 16, 1886.

The Senate met at 11 o'clock a. m.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. G. BUTLER, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

CALL OF THE SENATE.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate a letter of the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a supplemental list of claims for horses and other property lost in the military service of the United States allowed by the accounting officers of the Treasury; which will be read.

Mr. INGALLS. Mr. President, is there a quorum present?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. A quorum is not present. Does the Senator desire business to be suspended or to have a call of the Senate?

Mr. INGALLS. The Chair has certain duties devolved upon him when the absence of a quorum is apparent.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There will be a call of the Senate. The Secretary will call the roll of Senators and those present will answer to their names.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Allison,	Cullom,	Harris,	Sherman,
Beck,	Dawes,	Harrison,	Spooner,
Berry,	Dolph,	Hawley,	Teller,
Blackburn,	Edmunds,	Ingalls,	Vance,
Blair,	Eustis,	Logan,	Van Wyck,
Call,	Evarts,	McMillan,	Walthall,
Camden,	Frye,	Miller,	Whitthorne,
Chace,	George,	Payne,	Wilson of Iowa,
Cockrell,	Gibson,	Platt,	Wilson of Md.
Coke,	Hale,	Saulsbury,
Conger,	Hampton,	Sewell,

Mr. CHACE. I desire to announce that my colleague [Mr. ALDRICH] is detained from the Senate by sickness.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I wish to state that my colleague [Mr. MORRILL] is absent on account of illness.

Mr. MCMILLAN. My colleague [Mr. SABIN] is detained from the Senate by sickness.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Forty-one Senators have answered to their names. The Chair will proceed with morning business.

Mr. CONGER. Why not proceed with the call? There has been no order to stop proceedings under the call, I believe.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. A quorum being present, business proceeds according to the rule.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The rule simply provides, I think, tha, when the want of a quorum is disclosed the roll shall be called, and if that discloses the presence of a quorum, no other proceedings are to be taken without a distinct motion therefor.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. When a quorum is present the rule seems to contemplate that no further proceedings shall be had.

Mr. CONGER. It takes about five minutes to have the roll called, hardly enough time to enable Senators who have left their committee-rooms and business here to be in; and I think we had better go on with the call, and not go through the shadowy form every time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Michigan move to proceed with the call?

Mr. CONGER. I will not make any motion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The letter of the Secretary of the Treasury presented by the Chair will be read.

Mr. HALE. Before that goes on, I wish to make an inquiry as to these last proceedings. Do these proceedings under the call go into the RECORD?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. They do. They are provided for by an express rule. So that Senators may see it is necessary for them to be present, the Chair will ask that the rule be read. It is the imperative duty of the Chair, upon a suggestion being made, to have the roll called.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

RULE V.

QUORUM—ABSENT SENATORS MAY BE SENT FOR.

1. No Senator shall absent himself from the service of the Senate without leave.

2. If, at any time during the daily sessions of the Senate, a question shall be raised by any Senator as to the presence of a quorum, the presiding officer shall forthwith direct the Secretary to call the roll and shall announce the result, and these proceedings shall be without debate.

3. Whenever upon such roll-call it shall be ascertained that a quorum is not present, a majority of the Senators present may direct the Sergeant-at-Arms to request, and, when necessary, to compel the attendance of the absent Senators, which order shall be determined without debate; and pending its execution, and until a quorum shall be present, no debate nor motion, except to adjourn, shall be in order.

Mr. HALE. I never could see much use in these calls. Senators get in as early as possible and many are away engaged on public business in their committee-rooms. But if it is done it ought to appear of record. There was a call, or a partial call, yesterday morning, if I remember aright. I do not find any account of it or record of it in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. Perhaps I have not examined it carefully enough, but looking at the proceedings of the Senate of July 15 I do not discover a report of any call. It may be that I am wrong.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The record of proceedings certainly ought to show an act done in pursuance of a rule of the Senate.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I think it was almost the first thing done yesterday.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Reporter informs the Chair that the RECORD does show exactly what occurred. The report of it will be found on page 7374.

Mr. HALE. I have been trying to find it. I thought it was early in the morning. Perhaps it was later.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no question raised the routine business will be proceeded with.

Mr. VEST. Is the call concluded?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is concluded.

Mr. VEST. I was in the building at the time and I came immediately into the Senate Chamber. I do not want to be marked as an absentee.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a supplemental list of claims for horses and other property lost in the military service allowed by the accounting officers of the Treasury; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

He also laid before the Senate a communication from the Attorney-General transmitting, in response to a resolution of March 26, 1886, an additional account for moneys due to the commissioners appointed by the court to examine and report on the damages against the Government occasioned by the erection of dams on the Fox and Wisconsin Rivers, in the State of Wisconsin; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. EVARTS. I present fourteen memorials signed by 580 citizens of New York city and Brooklyn remonstrating against taxing oleomargarine. I move that the memorials lie on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. VANCE presented the petition of Daniel R. Goodloe, praying to be allowed compensation for the lost manuscript of his work entitled "Compilation of internal-revenue legislation, with a brief sketch of the debates leading to the passage of the several acts from 1791 to the present time;" which was referred to the Committee on Printing.

Mr. MILLER presented a petition of citizens of Franklinton, Schoharie County, New York, praying for the passage of the oleomargarine bill; which was ordered to lie on the table.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. DAWES, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them severally without amendment:

A bill (S. 2407) for the relief of Charles A. Ruffee; and

A bill (S. 2408) for the relief of Charles A. Ruffee.

Mr. HAWLEY, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 2995) for the relief of Francis H. Shaw, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. DAWES introduced a bill (S. 2855) to authorize a change of location of a certain Indian school building in Washington Territory; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. MILLER introduced a bill (S. 2856) to amend the statutes in relation to immediate transportation of dutiable goods, and for other purposes; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also introduced a bill (S. 2857) to amend section 4414 of the Revised Statutes fixing the compensation of inspectors of hulls and boilers in the several districts of the United States; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon, introduced a bill (S. 2858) to pay the heirs of George W. Harris and his wife, Mary A. Harris, and their daughter, Sophia Love, deceased, and others for the depredations of the Rogue River Indians in 1853, 1855, and 1856; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

INDIAN TRADERS.

Mr. PLATT submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the select committee to investigate the subject of licenses to Indian traders be authorized to have 50 copies of the testimony taken and to be taken printed for the use of the committee.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no further "concurrent or other resolutions" the Calendar is in order under the eighth rule.

Mr. HALE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the river and harbor bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Maine moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the river and harbor bill.

Mr. BLAIR. Before that motion is put I should like to remind the Senate that it was distinctly understood yesterday that we should take up pension bills this morning.

Mr. HALE. The chairman of the Committee on Commerce [Mr. MCMILLAN] is now here, and he will take care of the bill himself.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Maine to proceed to the consideration of the river and harbor bill.

The motion was agreed to.

REMOVAL OF EASTERN CHEROKEES.

Mr. CHACE. I move to recommit to the Committee on Indian Affairs the bill (S. 1799) for the removal of the Eastern Cherokee Indians to the Indian Territory.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Pending the river and harbor bill the Senator from Rhode Island moves to recommit to the Committee on Indian Affairs the bill named by him.

Mr. EDMUNDS. He must ask unanimous consent pending this bill.

Mr. CHACE. I ask unanimous consent.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Rhode Island asks unamimous consent that Order of Business 1362, being the bill (S. 1799) for the removal of the Eastern Cherokee Indians to the Indian Territory, be recommitted to the Committee on Indian Affairs. The Chair hears no objection, and that order will be made.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. MCMILLAN. That was done laying aside the river and harbor bill informally?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Yes. The river and harbor bill is now before the Senate.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I ask unanimous consent that the river and harbor bill be informally laid aside in order that the Committee on Pensions may request the Senate to go through at least until half past 12 o'clock with the private pension bills that are on the Calendar.

Mr. HALE. Unobjected cases.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. BUTLER. I object, Mr. President.

Mr. MCMILLAN. I understood that it was the understanding yesterday, and therefore I have no objection to interpose to it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from South Carolina objects.

Mr. BLAIR. I move to take up the first pension bill on the Calendar, which is the bill (H. R. 5921) granting an increase of pension to John Ryan.

Mr. HARRIS. If the motion of the Senator from New Hampshire is agreed to I suppose it displaces the river and harbor bill.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Yes; and we are going to take it up again when we get through with the pension bills.

Mr. BLAIR. I hope there will be no objection to disposing of these pension bills. I do not think that they will take more than half an hour. I only wish to run through with them so that whatever of them it shall be necessary for the other House to act upon may go to the House. I do not believe it will take more than until 12 o'clock to dispose of everything of the kind on the Calendar.

Mr. BUTLER. I object.

Mr. BLAIR. I hope the Senator will withdraw his objection. I insist on my motion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion is to proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 5921) granting an increase of pension to John Ryan.

Mr. MCMILLAN. I hope it will be the understanding that the river and harbor bill will be taken up immediately after these bills are disposed of.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. BLAIR. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BUTLER (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. CAMERON]. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. CAMDEN (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH].

Mr CHACE (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Georgia [Mr. COLQUITT].

Mr. SAULSBURY (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL]. If he were here, I should vote "nay."

Mr. EDMUNDS. And my colleague would vote "yea."

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. BLACKBURN (after having voted in the negative). I have been paired with the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. MANDERSON], and as I see he is not in his seat I withdraw my vote.

Mr. CONGER. My colleague [Mr. PALMER] is detained at his room by sickness this morning and unable to be here. I have understood that generally he is paired with the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. VANCE], but I do not know whether that pair still stands.

Mr. VANCE. I have had no notice of his desire to pair, but if he does I am willing to withdraw my vote.

Mr. CONGER. I did not speak in reference to this vote, but for pairing during the day, a general pair, if that will be the understanding. If not, let it remain, and I will try to arrange a pair for my colleague.

Mr. VANCE. Very well; I shall consider myself paired from this time on.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is the Senator from North Carolina understood to withdraw his vote?

Mr. VANCE. No, sir; not on this question.

Mr. SEWELL (after having voted in the affirmative). As there seems to be a political division on this question, I withdraw my vote, as I am paired with my colleague [Mr. MCPHERSON].

The result was announced—yeas 25, nays 19; as follows:

So the motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The pension bill is before the Senate.

Mr. CONGER. I desire to state that I voted for leaving the river and harbor bill because I am informed that there was some understanding yesterday that the pension cases should be taken up to-day. Otherwise I should have liked to go on with that bill.

Mr. BECK. I wish to say that when the Senator from Minnesota made the motion to proceed to the consideration of the river and harbor bill I voted with him, but when I heard him set aside his own bill, after making us sit here until after midnight two nights ago in order to get through with the bill, when he has asked unanimous consent time and again to have it closed at a particular time, and limiting debate to five minutes, all for the purpose of urging it, and then to give it up for something else, I do not feel that I am under any obligation to press for the river and harbor bill any further.

I have no objection to the pension bill now taken up, but these bills can be taken up and disposed of at any time, when here is the river and harbor bill, which has been pending for two weeks with all sorts of—I am not going to say pretenses but expressions of desire to have it out of the way, so that the naval appropriation bill and the sundry civil and a number of other important bills that are pending and necessary for the running of the Government might come up; and when we all agreed that the bill should be taken up and it was taken up, I can not quite understand why the chairman of the committee should himself vote against it after urging us to do so.

Mr. MCMILLAN. When I moved to take up the river and harbor bill this morning it was with the implied understanding that the bill should be informally laid aside for the purpose of disposing of a few pension cases which the chairman of the Committee on Pensions announced yesterday it was necessary to pass in order that they might reach the other House, and that they would take not more than thirty minutes. But an objection was interposed which prevented me from laying aside the bill informally, and in view of what transpired yesterday I did not feel that I could in good faith insist upon refusing to the Senator from New Hampshire the privilege of going on with the few pension bills remaining on the Calendar. I desire to read what transpired yesterday. In the proceedings of yesterday, at the time the river and harbor bill was taken up, the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BLAIR] said:

It will not take over half an hour to dispose of the pension bills, and I will ask for the yeas and nays on the motion to take up the river and harbor bill.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That would take a great part of the half hour. You will get a chance later. Wait until to-morrow.

Mr. BLAIR. Very well.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I hope that to-morrow these pension bills will be taken up.

Mr. BLAIR. I shall move their consideration to-morrow morning.

Under that state of facts, on my insisting that the river and harbor bill should be taken up yesterday the Senate proceeded to the consideration of that bill, and this morning it is understood that the river and harbor bill shall be proceeded with at the expiration of the usual time which was allowed for the Calendar under the recent order, or as soon as these few pension bills can be disposed of. I did not feel justified in interposing my objection to that.

JOHN RYAN.

The bill (H. R. 5921) granting an increase of pension to John Ryan was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to increase the pension of John Ryan, late first lieutenant of Company F, Sixty-ninth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers, to $17 per month, in lieu of the pension now paid to him.

Mr. CAMDEN. Let the report be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the following report, submitted by Mr. BLAIR June 21, 1886:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 5921) granting an increase of pension to John Ryan, have examined the same, and report:

Your committee have considered the facts of the case and adopt the report of the House committee (House Report No. 2382), and recommend the passage of the bill. To the House report may be added the further facts that without any fault of his own the claimant has since discharge lost a leg, is very poor, and has a family to support.

"The soldier in this case, John Ryan, enlisted April 1, 1861, in Company I, Sixteenth Pennsylvania Volunteers, as a private. He was discharged July 30, 1861, and enlisted as sergeant in Company H, Forty-ninth Pennsylvania Volunteers, August 6, 1861; promoted to second lieutenant November 8, 1862, and first lieutenant May 1, 1863; received a contused wound over the liver at the battle of Fredericksburg, December, 1862; was captured at the battle of Gettysburg, July, 1863; was treated while a prisoner of war for dysentery, contracted scurvy, and was paroled March 7, 1864. He was discharged July 9, 1864, on account of physical disabilities.

"It appears from the records of the War Department that the wound affected his stomach to such a degree as to compel him to reject a greater part of his food, even while in the service.

"In 1878 he presented his claim to the Pension Office and was pensioned at the rate of $8.50 per month from result of scurvy.

"It is evident from the testimony presented in this case that the soldier has been a constant sufferer ever since his discharge, both from this and several other disabilities, all of which were evidently contracted in the service.

"Your committee, therefore, are clearly of the opinion that his services and sufferings while in the Army, that the degree of his disability since discharge, as shown by the testimony offered, would warrant the increase of his pension. Therefore your committee recommend that the bill do pass."

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JAMES NOYES.

The bill (S. 2598) granting a pension to James Noyes was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of James Noyes, late of Company I, Second Regiment Louisiana Native Guards.

Mr. CAMDEN. Let the report be read in that case.

The Chief Clerk read the following report, submitted by Mr. BLAIR June 21, 1886:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2598) granting a pension to James Noyes, have examined the same, and report:

The claimant, James Noyes, enlisted December 1, 1861, and served until discharged, February 27, 1865, as first lieutenant of Company I, Second Regiment Louisiana Native Guards; also captain Company G, Seventy-fourth United States Colored Troops, and also served in the Sixty-eighth Veteran Volunteers.

He applied for a pension alleging that he incurred disability in the service, namely, obscure disease of the brain, the result of malarial affection. This was rejected on the ground that there is no record, and claimant's declared inability to furnish competent evidence, showing origin of the alleged results of malaria in service, or existence at date of discharge.

Your committee have examined the evidence in support of this claim, comprising the statements of the claimant, a comrade who testifies to trouble with his head in the service, two physicians who have recently treated him, a classmate at school in 1865, where he suffered with some difficulty in the head, which has constantly been increasing, and other evidences showing the long continuance of the brain trouble, all of which, together with the other letters and statements before us, leads to the conclusion that the soldier incurred some brain derangement as a result of his service, which, though slight at first, has continued steadily to increase until its effects have become so marked as to seriously disable him the greater part of the time. The last report of the examining board rates him at three-fourths of total. The applicant is a clergyman of the best personal character, and from personal knowledge of him the member of the committee who makes the report feels confident of the justice of this claim.

After a consideration of all the facts, your committee report back the bill with the recommendation that it do pass.

Mr. CAMDEN. That report shows that there is no evidence that that disease was incurred in the service.

Mr. LOGAN. No testimony of what?

Mr. CAMDEN. An affection of the brain is shown to have existed before the man went into the service; and that has gradually increased.

Mr. LOGAN. I do not so understand.

Mr. BLAIR. There is no evidence that the trouble existed before he went into the service.

Mr. COCKRELL. Was it hereditary?

Mr. EDMUNDS. The report says it developed in 1866—after the war.

Mr. COCKRELL. Was not this hereditary?

Mr. BLAIR. I really do not know. I have never heard any suggestion of the kind.

Mr. COCKRELL. Was there ever any suggestion that it was not?

Mr. BLAIR. There is not any presumption of that kind.

Mr. COCKRELL. Here is a member of the Senate who says: "Here is a worthy preacher, and he must be pensioned on the country for having served a little while in the Louisiana Native Guards." He does not seem to have been in the United States service actually, but in some military company around New Orleans doing parade duty.

Mr. BLAIR. The Senator is quite wrong in his statement in regard to the case.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I see that he is described in this bill as "late of Company I, Second Regiment Louisiana Native Guards." I should like to be informed what sort of a regiment that was, whether it was in the service of the United States.

Mr. BLAIR. I understand that it was; but the Senator will see that he is also further described in the report as "captain Company G, Seventy-fourth United States Colored Troops, and also served in the Sixty-eighth Veteran Volunteers."

Mr. EDMUNDS. The point to which I wish to call my friend's attention is that the bill had better be amended by describing his subsequent services, for it may happen that somebody somewhere will discover that the regiment named in the bill was not a regular regiment. I move to amend by saying after the word "Guards:"

Also captain Company G, Seventy-fourth United States Colored Troops, and of the Sixty-eighth Veteran Volunteers.

So as to describe all the military offices he held, and save giving anybody hereafter any trouble.

Mr. BLAIR. I agree to the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Vermont.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BLAIR. Now read the bill as amended.

The Chief Clerk read the bill as amended.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, and read the third time.

Mr. COCKRELL. I ask for the yeas and nays on the passage of the bill.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BUTLER (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. CAMERON].

Mr. CAMDEN (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH]. If he were present, he would vote "yea" and I should vote "nay."

Mr. CHACE (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Georgia [Mr. COLQUITT].

Mr. FRYE (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Texas [Mr. COKE].

Mr. SEWELL (when his name was called). I am paired generally with my colleague [Mr. MCPHERSON], but I believe he would vote for a bill of this kind, and therefore I vote "yea."

Mr. VANCE (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Michigan [Mr. PALMER]. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. WALTHALL (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MITCHELL].

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. I have a general pair with the Senator from Indiana [Mr. HARRISON]. He is not in his seat. As I do not know how he would vote, I withhold my vote.

The result was announced—yeas 27, nays 13; as follows:

YEAS—27.

Allison,	Evarts,	Logan,	Sewell,
Blair,	George,	McMillan,	Sherman,
Conger,	Hale,	Miller,	Spooner,
Cullom,	Hawley,	Payne,	Stanford,

So the bill was passed.

MARY A. THOMAS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The next pension bill will be stated.

The bill (H. R. 6747) granting a pension to Mary A. Thomas was announced as next in order, and the Senate as in Committee of the Whole proceeded to consider it.

It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Mary A. Thomas, a volunteer nurse and superintendent of nurses in the late war, at $25 per month.

Mr. CAMDEN. Let the report be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the following report submitted by Mr. BLAIR June 21, 1886:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 6747) granting a pension to Mary A. Thomas, have examined the same, and report:

The facts of this case are set forth in the annexed report of the House Committee on Invalid Pensions (House Report No. 1713), which we adopt, and recommend the passage of the bill.

Your committee attach hereto the petition of Miss Mary A. Thomas, late volunteer Army nurse. It sets forth the nature and character of the service rendered much more graphically than your committee could hope to do.

All the points are substantiated by testimony of the highest character, so that there can remain no doubt as to the entire accuracy of her statement.

Robert F. Weir, M. D., late assistant surgeon United States Army, states:

"During the war I was in charge of the United States Army general hospital, Frederick, Md., from 1862 to 1865. For eighteen months of the time Miss Mary A. Thomas was the superintendent of the nursing department as a volunteer Army nurse, and as such brought it to the highest degree of efficiency. This, with other points, secured the official commendation of the hospital by the Surgeon-General. The faithfulness and intelligence of Miss Thomas continued at the disposal of the soldiers until 1864, when she was compelled to retire from duty. Her deterioration of health was the result, in my opinion, of the mental and physical strain passed through in those trying times."

R. M. Murray, Surgeon-General, United States Army, states:

"In regard to the services rendered by Miss Mary A. Thomas as Army nurse during the late war, the records of the United States Army general hospital at Frederick, Md., show that she was employed in that hospital as nurse. Robert F. Weir, M. D., of New York city, late assistant surgeon, United States Army, was in charge of the said hospital in 1861-1865. He was one of our ablest and most judicious medical officers, and his statement can be implicitly relied upon. I believe that the services of Miss Thomas were in the highest degree admirable, and should commend her to special consideration. I unite in recommending that she receive the pension for which she has applied."

The following is her petition:

To the honorable the Committee of Invalid Pensions, House of Representatives:

I, your petitioner, respectfully beg leave to present the following facts as the basis for a claim to a pension as Army nurse and superintendent of nurses:

In the summer of 1862 and during the eighteen ensuing months I had the honor of serving as a volunteer nurse and superintendent of nurses in the "United States Army general hospital," located at Frederick city, Md. In proof whereof I submit Exhibit A, the affidavit of Dr. Robert F. Weir, of New York city, residing at No. 37 West Thirty-third street, late surgeon of the United States Army, in charge of the aforesaid hospital.

The invasion of Maryland by General Robert E. Lee, in September, 1862, brought us between the two conflicting armies; then followed the battle of Antietam, at the distance of 20 miles only from Frederick, and my services were required immediately at the front. No one save an eye-witness to such scenes can realize the magnitude of the labor involved, or the amount of courage demanded. Even that born genius of battle, the great Napoleon, was unnerved by the ghastly sights displayed on the field of a freshly-fought battle; what, then, was the spectacle for a timid woman? The roar of the cannon, the smoke, the confusion, the frantic encounter of warring squadrons, these constituted but the opening scene in the bloody drama, and required but brief space for enactment. The tragic horrors of the fray remained to be fully developed in the wards of our hospitals. Days then counted for months and months for years in the expenditure of moral force and the sacrifice of physical strength. To serve by day and by night, to assist frequently at surgical operations whose very memory makes me shudder; afterward, with indescribable anxiety, to watch those patients, for then the embers of life burned low and the slightest want of vigilance would be attended with fatal consequences—such were, in part the duties devolving upon me as Army nurse, and as superintendent of all the other nurses there engaged.

Another great battle, that of Gettysburg, was fought in the summer of 1863, and our hospital was again in the very midst of war and tumult. Over the rocky roads of those hilly regions, day after day, came the long line of Army ambulances bringing the wounded direct from the field of battle. Our hospital was capacious, the barracks numbered from the letter A to the letter P inclusive, but all were soon filled to overflowing, and tents had to be pitched for the emergency. Some of those heroes died shortly afterward; the majority lingered to endure long martyrdoms of pain; but not one of those pathetic death-beds was left solitary. It was a comfort to those poor dying soldiers to confide to a sympathetic ear their fond farewells to friends far away in the North or the East, the West or the South, and it was made a sacred duty to transmit by letter, when possible, those touching messages. Defenders of the old Stripes and Stars, soldiers of the South, all received the tender cares needed in their sad condition.

And here, perhaps, I may be pardoned for saying that, being by birth a Maryland woman, I had near relatives and dear friends in the hostile camp. Consequently, when the hospital came to change hands, as it did between the interval of General Lee's entrance and exit from Frederick, followed in two days by General Burnside's army, my allegiance to the Union cost me somewhat severely in respect to natural sympathies.

The above details are given as a mere sketch of the circumstances of time and place connected with my services. Having the entire superintendence of the nursing department of a large military hospital, my responsibility was great and my duties most arduous. I served as a volunteer, and with no expectation of ever applying for a pension. Now, however, my health is feeble. (See Exhibit B, the affidavit of Dr. Samuel R. Skillern, of Philadelphia, and Exhibit C, affidavit of Dr. G. Latimer, District of Columbia.) I am wholly dependent upon my own effort for support. Therefore I now appeal to your honorable committee for a pension of $50 per month. The precedent of giving $25 has been established in some well-known cases, as, for example, in those of Miss Harriet B. Dame, of New Hampshire, and Mrs. Mary M. Husband, of Philadelphia, whose names, and others, are on the statute-book; but I have asked for $50 per month because of the wider field of service, the heavier responsibility, and greater tax upon my mind and body, inseparable from the post assigned me, that of superintendent of nurses. Many widows of superior officers are given pensions of $50 per month, not for personal service rendered, but because of their deceased husband; and, in like manner, the widows of lesser officers and subalterns are pensioned in a decreasing ratio. I appeal to the fair judgment of your honorable committee whether my services do not merit to be considered with similar discrimination.

Very respectfully,

MARY A. THOMAS,
Late Volunteer Army Nurse.

WASHINGTON, D. C., March 9, 1886.

Your committee, in view of the high character of Miss Thomas and the service rendered, together with her ill health and straitened circumstances, report the bill favorably and recommend its passage.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EMILY B. BAKER.

The bill (H. R. 1580) for the relief of Emily B. Baker was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Emily B. Baker, widow of Joel B. Baker, late colonel of the Eighth Regiment New York Heavy Artillery Volunteers.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

FRANK W. TUBBESING.

The bill (S. 2705) granting a pension to Frank W. Tubbesing was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides for placing on the pension-roll the name of Frank W. Tubbesing, late a private in Company A, Fifteenth New York Artillery.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. VEST. I ask for the reading of the report.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It was not called for during the consideration of the bill.

Mr. VEST. I want to know the basis for the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be read if there be no objection.

The Secretary read the following report, submitted by Mr. BLAIR June 21, 1886:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the petition of Frank W. Tubbesing, have examined the same, and report:

The claimant, Frank W. Tubbesing, enlisted December 30, 1863, as a private in Company A, Fifteenth Regiment New York Heavy Artillery. He was discharged February 4, 1866. He was also subsequently in the service from July 21, 1866, to July 20, 1869, in Battery E, Third United States Artillery.

He filed a claim in the Department for a pension, February 4, 1880, alleging that about May, 1865, he received a furlough to go to New York for medical treatment for wounds he received at the battles of Wilderness, Spottsylvania, and Five Forks, and also alleging wound of left leg and right side of head. His claim was rejected on the ground of no record of the disabilities alleged, wounds of leg and head; no evidence showing their incurrence in the military service, and claimant's expressed inability to establish the claim; can not furnish testimony of officers or comrades.

It appears from the reports of the War Department that the medical records of claimant's regiment are not on file, which would explain the fact that there is no record of incurrence of disability.

The examining surgeon reports, in 1881, that the claimant suffers a great deal of pain from wounds; an old ulcer of left leg below knee, the result of wounds; also right temporal bone is driven in 1½ inches in circumference.

There was also a charge of desertion against him, which was afterward removed.

There is considerable other evidence filed with your committee, after a careful consideration of which we have come to the conclusion that the preponderance of the testimony shows that the soldier is entitled to a pension.

Your committee therefore report back the petition and an original bill, with a favorable recommendation.

WILLIAM H. H. PRICE.

The bill (S. 2369) granting an increase of pension to William H. H. Price was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Pensions with amendments, which were, in line 5, after the word "to," to strike out the word "thirty" and to insert the word "twenty-four;" in line 9, after the word "of," to strike out the word "thirty" and insert the word "twenty-four," and in line 10, before the word "dollars," to strike out the word "thirty" and insert the word "twenty-four;" so as to make the bill read:

That the pension of William H. H. Price, late of Company F, Sixty-sixth Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, be, and the same is hereby, increased to $24 per month; and the Commissioner of Pensions is hereby authorized and directed to place the name of said William H. H. Price on the pension-roll as a pensioner of the United States for the sum of $24 per month, said $24 per month being in lieu of all other pensions heretofore granted.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

Mr. VEST and Mr. BUTLER. Let the report be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be read.

The Secretary read the following report, submitted by Mr. WILSON, of Maryland, June 22, 1886:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2369) granting an increase of pension to William H. H. Price, have carefully examined the same, and report:

That William H. H. Price is already on the Government rolls as an invalid pensioner to the extent of $12 per month, and on the 18th day of last June made a new declaration for an increase of pension, on the ground of an increased disability growing out of an aggravation of his disease—which is anchylosis of the elbow-joint of the right arm—which application was rejected by the Pension Office on the ground "that he is now receiving the full amount of pension to which he is entitled under the law for the disability" named. In view of the papers sent to us from the Pension Office, we can not agree to this conclusion. The Government board of surgeons, by whom he was examined, on the 16th day of September, 1885, duly certified to the Pension Office that the ex-soldier suffers from "complete anchylosis of the right elbow-joint, the arm being firmly held in a semiflected position, and there being a complete atrophy of all muscles of the right arm, the measurement of which is 6¾ inches, while the left arm is 9 inches." They also return that "his right arm and hand are of no value for purposes of manual labor, and his disability is equal to the loss of a hand or a foot." There appearing no evidence to the contrary, this degree of disability, under the act of March 3, 1883, entitles the pensioner to $24 per month.

We therefore recommend that the bill be amended by striking out the word "thirty" where it occurs therein, and by inserting in each case in lieu thereof the word "twenty-four," and that, as so amended, said bill do pass.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SARAH A. TUCKER.

The bill (H. R. 7193) granting a pension to Sarah A. Tucker was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Sarah A. Tucker, mother of Charles P. Tucker, deceased, late of Company I, First Regiment of Wisconsin Volunteers.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment.

Mr. BUTLER. Let us have the report, Mr. President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the following report, submitted by Mr. SAWYER on June 22, 1886:

The Committee on Pensions, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 7193) granting a pension to Sarah A. Tucker, has examined the same, and adopts the annexed House report, and recommends the passage of the bill.

Sarah A. Tucker is the mother of Charles P. Tucker, who enlisted in Company I, First Wisconsin Volunteers, October 5, 1861, and died at Andersonville prison July 10, 1864.

The claimant lost another son in the Army, while three others served and were discharged.

Her claim for pension as dependent mother of Charles P. Tucker has been rejected by the Pension Office on the ground that the evidence fails to show dependence upon the soldier at time of his death.

It appears from the evidence on file that the son, Charles P., was a stonemason by trade, and, being a single man, made his home with his parents, who owned a small place, and with the son's assistance were moderately comfortably situated. Nearly all of the son's earnings went in the common fund of the family, and after enlistment he is shown to have contributed to the support of the claimant, but the exact amount of such contributions can not now be ascertained, as the letters of the soldier furnishing this information were destroyed by fire some years ago.

The ground of rejection of the mother's claim appears to have been based principally upon the certifications of the proper officers of the assessments standing against the claimant and her husband during the alleged period of dependence and since. In 1864, the year of the son's death, they were assessed for real estate $550, and on personal property $140, while in 1868 the assessment reached $1,900 on real estate, and $422 on personal property. The latter is the maximum assessment during any year since 1861; while in 1878 the real estate of claimant and her husband is assessed at $750, and since that time in no one year higher than $120.

The increased value of real estate after the son's death is fully explained by testimony as well as by certified extracts from the records of conveyances of the county in which located. Claimant's husband purchased with the money sent home from the Army by his younger sons a certain tract of land, which he held in his own name in trust for the sons, and subsequently conveyed it to them. In 1873 claimant's husband purchased 120 acres for $2,600, $300 only being paid down, and failing to make the deferred payments, it was reconveyed to the original owner in 1880.

It further appears in evidence that claimant's husband was more or less disabled for manual labor for many years, and since 1881 has been insane. Claimant has now no income except that derived from her own manual labor, and being old is now dependent upon charity.

Winfield Scott Post, Grand Army of the Republic, at Whitehall, Wis., as well as the Woman's Relief Corps, Grand Army of the Republic, department of Wisconsin, have asked Congress to place this much-deserving woman upon the pension-rolls.

While notwithstanding the acknowledged contributions on the part of the soldier son, claimant may not have been so dependent upon these contributions as to bring her case within the general pension laws, yet your committee are clearly of opinion that the evidence shows at least a partial dependence upon the soldier, and in view of the fact that she gave five sons to the country's cause, two of whom were lost to her in that cause, and the further fact that by reason of the unfortunate condition of her husband, the father of the soldier, she has now become dependent upon others, we believe her entitled to the favorable consideration of Congress.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JENNETTE DOW.

The bill (H. R. 3363) granting a pension to Jennette Dow was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to enter upon the pension-roll the name of Jennette Dow, widow of Charles E. DOW, late first sergeant of Company K, Eighty-ninth Regiment of Illinois Infantry Volunteers.

Mr. CAMDEN. Let us have the report read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be read.

The Secretary read the following report, submitted by Mr. SAWYER June 22, 1886:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 3363) granting a pension to Jennette Dow, have examined the same, and report:

That an examination of the facts in this case satisfies the committee that the report of the House committee is correct. It is adopted, and is as follows:

"That Mrs. Jennette Dow is the widow of Charles E. Dow, late a sergeant of Company K, Eighty-ninth Regiment Illinois Volunteers, who was pensioned for gunshot wound in left knee, received at the battle of Chickamauga, and who died at Boonesborough, Iowa, December 16, 1882. Mrs. Dow applied for pension April 18, 1883, but her claim was rejected on the ground that 'death resulted from apoplexy, not the result of gunshot wound.'

"Dr. R. M. Huntington, the physician who attended claimant in his last illness, testifies:

"'I was in attendance at the death of Mr. Charles E. Dow, late sergeant Company K, Eighty-ninth Illinois Infantry, who died at Boonesborough, Boone County, Iowa, on the 16th day of December, 1882, and giving the cause of death, state it as follows: Hemiplegia (apoplexy), and death in twelve hours. In thus giving the cause or causes of death a statement of facts as bearing on the case should be made. Mr. Dow was wounded in the popliteal space, severing the artery and ligaments of the left leg, from the effects of which wound he never fully recovered. So far as the mobility or muscular co-ordination and nervous sensibility were concerned, these conditions seemingly for a time better, were subject to frequent relapse, and extended in time to the hand and arm of the corresponding side.

"'Mr. Dow's calling in life for years after leaving the service was that of railroad conductor, the duties of which were at all times quite seriously interfered with, because of the want of strength in the afflicted side. At the time of death Mr. Dow had with difficulty reached his home in a dazed or semi-conscious condition, and while receiving the ministrations and assistance of his wife, suddenly fell to the floor, severely bruising and lacerating the right temple and supraorbital arch of the right side. Complete unconsciousness ensued, accompanied with contracted pupil, slow stertorous breathing, dark face, flapping of the lips, slow and labored pulse, in which condition, without any change for the better, he continued for about twelve hours, when death closed the scene. From the facts and history of the case as known to me, I regard it as a case of hemiplegia, the outgrowth primarily of nerve injury, aggravated by the life's calling, and eventuating in appoplexy, as stated.'

"In the examination upon which pension was granted to soldier, the examining surgeon describes his condition as follows:

"'Gunshot wound of the left thigh, ball entered just above and at center of the external condyle of the femur, out at upper edge of popliteal space, resulting in impaired use of the leg from paralysis of extensor muscles of the foot and impaired sensation in and over second, third, fourth, and fifth toes, and inability to straighten the leg when knee is bent after ordinary exercise.'

"Orson T. Waltermont, of Sac City, Iowa, testifies:

"'I was well and personally acquainted with Charles E. Dow during his lifetime from 1862 till his death; were both members of the same company. I was with him at the time he received his wound; that from the time he received said wound till his death he was greatly troubled with his left leg and arm; said Charles Dow and I railroaded together for fifteen years; that I know from personal observation that his arm would be worse at the time his leg troubled him most, and at one particular time, at Council Bluffs, Iowa, when said Dow was being unusually troubled with said wound in said left leg, he told me he was afraid that his disease would go to his heart.'

"Cheney Eddy, G. S. Rhoads, and Charles Schoonover all testify to substantially same fact as to the effect of wound and the loss of power in left side and arm. So, also, does Dr. P. S. Moses, of Boone, Iowa, and adds, 'In my opinion his death was caused by paralysis.'

"His wife, Mrs. Jennette Dow, testifies that the wound troubled him continuously and caused him to become emaciated and weak, and when taken with his last illness his wound had been troubling him very much and he had less ability to use his left arm and leg.

"Hon. A. J. HOLMES, a member of this House, certifies:

"'I was personally acquainted with Charles E. Dow during a period of more than ten years that he resided in the city of my residence. While I can not speak from personal knowledge of the cause of his death, yet it was well known among his neighbors and friends that he suffered almost continuously from a severe wound received in the late war. Physically large and of full habit, he steadily became emaciated, and before his death presented a very wan and haggard appearance.'

"From a careful comparison of the report of examining surgeon, upon which the pension was granted, with the report made by the physician in attendance at death and all the corroborative testimony, it seems very clear to your committee that the soldier's wound was the cause of the partial paralysis of his left side, and may very reasonably be presumed to have finally caused his death. There appears to be but little doubt in the case, and the Government can afford to give the widow of a wounded soldier the benefit of that doubt."

The bill is reported favorably, with a recommendation that it do pass.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the joint resolution (S. R. 40) providing for the payment of per diem laborers in Government employ on the 30th of May of each year as on other days.

The message also announced that the House had passed the following bills and joint resolution; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. 5310) to protect mechanics, laborers, and servants in their wages;

A bill (H. R. 5541) to prevent the employment of convict labor and alien labor upon public buildings and other public works, and convict labor in the preparation or manufacture of materials for public buildings or other public works, and to regulate the manner of letting contracts therefor;

A bill (H. R. 9232) to amend an act to prohibit the importation and immigration of foreigners and aliens under contract or agreement to perform labor in the United States, its Territories, and the District of Columbia;

A bill (H. R. 9857) in relation to the western judicial district of Wisconsin; and Joint resolution (H. Res. 142) authorizing and directing the Commissioner of Labor to make an investigation as to convict labor, and for other purposes.

OHIO SENATORIAL ELECTION.

Mr. PUGH. I desire to give notice that on Tuesday next, at the expiration of the morning hour, I will call up for consideration the report of the Committee on Privileges and Elections in what is known as the Payne case.

THOMAS CHAPMAN.

The bill (S. 2259) to increase the pension of Thomas Chapman was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The Committee on Pensions reported an amendment, in line 6, before the word dollars, to strike out "fifty" and insert "twenty-five;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, &c., That the pension of Thomas Chapman, of Campbell County, Tennessee, evidenced by pension certificate numbered 14157, be, and the same hereby is, increased to the sum of $25 per month, his disabilities being such as to require the constant attention of some person to take care of him.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CAMDEN. I ask for the reading of the report.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the following report, submitted by Mr. WHITTHORNE June 22, 1886:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2259) granting an increase of pension to Thomas Chapman, have examined the same, and report:

That this is an application for an increase of pension to a soldier of the war of 1812, now receiving a pension of $8 per month. The facts upon which it is made are fully shown in the affidavit of prominent citizens of the county of his residence, which affidavit is as follows:

STATE OF TENNESSEE, Campbell County:

In the matter of the memorial before United States Senate and Congress for increase of pension of Thomas Chapman, of Capt. S. Lawson's company, Virginia Militia, in war of 1812, whose name is inscribed on the pension-list roll of the Knoxville, Tenn., agency, at the rate of $8 per month, under pension certificate No. 14157, personally came Thomas Wilson, aged forty-two years, of Jacksborough Post-Office, Campbell County, Tennessee, who, being duly sworn, deposed as follows:

I am well acquainted with said surviving soldier of the war of 1812, whose physical condition is such as to render him totally unable for the performance of manual labor, as his age is past ninety-five years, as he says, and that is his general reputation, and his appearance indicates that such is the fact. His reputation for morals is good, his poverty is extreme, he owns no property whatever, and his condition is such as to require the almost constant care and attention of some person, and his present pension is utterly inadequate for his support. I make these statements from personal knowledge, and my knowledge of the facts are gained by being his near neighbor and having a good opportunity to know his true condition from personal observation. I am no kin to the soldier, and have no interest in his matters.

THOMAS WILSON.
JOHN HURNLEY.

Attest:
JOHN SMIDDY,
R. D. PERKINS.

We, the undersigned, citizens of Campbell County, Tennessee, and residents of the neighborhood of the town of Jacksborough, Tenn., do hereby concur in and certify to the truth of the foregoing statement, and know that said surviving soldier of the war of 1812, Thomas Chapman, is a worthy object of the country's bounty.

Sworn and subscribed to before me; and I hereby certify that all the affiants are respectable and the persons they represent themselves to be, and are well worthy of full faith and credit, and that they each read and understood the foregoing contents before they swore to it. I further certify that the statements made by them are true, and have a personal knowledge of the facts. I am no kin to said soldier, and have no interest in his claim.

Given under my hand and seal of circuit court of Campbell County, Tennessee, at office, in Jacksborough, Tenn., May 22, 1886.

[SEAL.] WILLIAM ALLEN,
Clerk Circuit Court.

The credibility of these parties is vouched for by a member of this committee (Mr. WHITTHORNE).

The committee, accepting the facts to be as stated, deem the case to be a meritorious one, and in view of the fact of the utter helpnessness of the pensioner, his extreme old age, and that Congress has in similar cases granted an increase of pension, they recommend that the same may be done in this, and accordingly recommend that the pension to Thomas Chapman be placed at $25 per month from and after the passage of this bill, which should be so amended.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CHARLES WYANT.

The bill (H. R. 5705) granting a pension to Charles Wyant was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Charles Wyant, late of Company K, One hundred and fiftieth Regiment New York Volunteers.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WILLIAM WINANS.

The bill (S. 1531) granting an increase of pension to William Winans was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of William Winans, late a corporal of Company B, First New York Lincoln Cavalry Regiment, at the rate of $30 per month, in lieu of the $8 per month heretofore allowed him.

Mr. BUTLER. Let us have the report in that case.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the following report, submitted by Mr. VAN WYCK June 22, 1886:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1531) granting a pension to William Winans, late a corporal of Company B, First New York (Lincoln) Cavalry Regiment, have examined the same, and report:

That said William Winans enlisted August 5, 1861, and was discharged August 4, 1864, was a good soldier, and while charging a rebel battery at Martinsburg, W. Va., July 25, 1864, was wounded in the left shoulder by bursting shell, which killed his horse. He was also injured in right index finger.

The examining board report the claimant is not entitled to an increase. But the testimony of Dr. Bliss and others, copies of which are annexed, show that the medical board and the Pension Department erred in rejecting the application for increase, and therefore recommend the passage of annexed bill.

GENERAL AFFIDAVIT.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA, ss:

In the matter of pension claim of William Winans, of Washington, D. C.

On this 20th day of March, A. D., 1886, personally appeared before me, a notary public in and for the aforesaid county, duly authorized to administer oaths, Augustus Hubbell, aged ——, a resident of Washington, District of Columbia, whose post-office address is No. 1513 F street N. W., well known to me to be reputable and entitled to credit, and who, being duly sworn, declares in relation to the aforesaid case as follows: That he has been well and personally acquainted with claimant for about five years, and —— years respectively, and that about the years 1881, '82, and '83 he and the claimant worked together in the Quartermaster-General's Office, in Washington, D. C. The claimant was put on work in the files of the office, a kind of work which required climbing of step-ladders and taking down and replacing file-boxes. He was not competent to do this kind of work, on account of his inability to use his left arm, either in reaching up to file-boxes or holding them when taken down. On account of this disability he was transferred to book-work, copying, &c. At this work he was not able to handle the books without great difficulty and pains of the left arm, and he was after awhile put on lighter clerical work. I have personal knowledge of the above facts, and since his discharge from the Quartermaster-General's Office I have had frequent opportunity to observe his physical condition, and I have known him to be laid up at several times with pains in the left arm. The claimant was discharged, as affiant was informed and believes, on account of inefficiency, being absent a considerable time on account of sickness, caused by the condition of his left arm.

He further declares that he has no interest in said case and is not concerned in its prosecution.

Chappell, aged forty-five, a resident temporarily of Washington, in the District of Columbia, whose post-office address is Washington, D. C., well known to me to be reputable and entitled to credit, and who, being duly sworn, declares, in relation to the aforesaid case, as follows: That he has been well and personally acquainted with claimant for seven years, and that in the year 1881 he boarded with claimant for several months, and during all his acquaintance has had frequent opportunity to observe and know personally of the claimant's physical condition, especially with regard to his left arm. The claimant habitually carried his left arm and hand in a useless manner by his side. At table he could not use left hand to feed himself on account of not being able to raise the hand to his mouth. When attempting to handle even light objects the left hand was only used awkwardly and inefficiently, owing to weakness of hand and arm, and this only with the arm pendent or partly so. He complained constantly of pain in left arm and shoulder, and always manifested pain when attempting to use left hand and arm. Ever since my first acquaintance with him affiant has frequently and always observed the foregoing manifestations of the claimant's disability.

He further declares that he has no interest in said case, and is not concerned n its prosecution.

Our work was clerical. Claimant always complained of his left arm hurting him. He was apparently not able to do anything with it except to hold papers on the desk or in holding light articles when hanging down. In handling books, or even light articles, he always appeared to favor the left arm; this was the case in taking off or hanging up his coat. Be it known that on this the 12th day of February, 1886, personally appeared before me, Samuel H. Lyman, United States commissioner for said district, Jenyns C. Battersby, brevet-colonel late First New York (Lincoln) Cavalry, United States Volunteers, who, being duly sworn, maketh oath and saith that: On or about the 25th day of July, 1864, while in command of his troop (B) of said regiment, and while in line of battle near the town of Martinsburg, W. Va., a shell from the enemy's battery exploded in his rear and between the front and rear rank of his troop of horses, killing and wounding some of said horses (which fell upon the men), and wounding some of said men, one of whom was William Wynans, of said troop, and who for the time being was, to the best of deponent's knowledge and belief, unable to perform military duty.

Having no interest in this document, further deponent saith not.

I certify to the correctness of the within statement, sworn to by Bvt. Col. Jenyns C. I was in command of said regiment in said engagement and remember the circumstances very well. Said Wynans was a good and faithful soldier, and from his long sufferings by said wounds deserves, as I believe, an increase in his pension, which is entirely inadequate to the support of himself and family.

Personally came before me, a notary public in and for the aforesaid District, James C. Bird, a citizen of Washington, D. C., whose post-office address is No. 1336 G street northwest, well known to me to be reputable and entitled to credit, and who, being duly sworn, declares in relation to aforesaid case as follows:

That he is a practicing physician, and that he has been acquainted with said soldier for about five years, and that he was called in consultation with Dr. D. W. Blisss December 1, 1880, to Mr. William Winans, who was suffering from necrosis of the scapula (shoulder-blade). It was necessary to remove part of the bone. He was very much reduced at that time, so much so that I thought he would never recover from it. Since then, in August and September, 1884, in the absence of Dr. Bliss, I prescribed for Mr. Winans. He was suffering from debility, the effect of his wound.

He further declares that he has been a practicioner of medicine for thirty-three years, and that he has no interest, either direct or indirect, in the prosecution of this claim.

[SEAL.] G. W. BALLOCH, Notary Public.

STATE OF NEW YORK,
County of Westchester, ss:

On this 20th day of February, 1886, before me personally appeared Jerome Bell, who, upon being duly sworn, deposes and says, that he was a member of Company B, First New York (Lincoln) Volunteer Cavalry; that he was present at the battle of Martinsburg, W. Va., on the 25th day of July, 1864, and that while the regiment was advancing in line of battle and preparing to charge a rebel battery in our front, a shell came from the battery in question and burst in Company B line, killing the horses of William Winans, Thomas Pearl, and —— Garland, and wounding all three named. Winans was wounded in his left shoulder by a piece of the shell.

The said Jerome Bell also deposes and says, that he was captured by a part of General Imboden's force near Berryville, Va., on or about the 13th day of October, 1863, while with a scouting party under the command Lieut. —— New, of his regiment, and that on the next morning, before daybreak, the same force captured Charlestown, W. Va., and among the prisoners captured was William Winans, who was with his party the day before, but who escaped to Charlestown, where he arrived with his horse foundered, and that he was in company with said Winans all the time they were prisoners, and until paroled about five months after, and that their sufferings while on Belle Isle were simply indescribable, and he would refer any one to histories of those places by abler minds; he would state, though, that the James River (in which Belle Isle is situated) was frozen over three times that winter; that there was no shelter for more than one-fifth of the prisoners, and the food was of the coarsest and most meager kind, and that when we were paroled, Winans was a mere physical wreck, and had wasted to a skeleton, and went immediately to the hospital upon arriving at Annapolis, Md.

JEROME BELL.

Sworn to this 20th day of February, 1886, before me.

THOMAS MARTIN,
Justice of the Peace.

STATE OF NEW YORK,
Westchester County, ss:

I, John M. Digney, clerk of the county aforesaid, and also clerk of the county and supreme courts in and for said county, the same being courts of record, do hereby certify that Thomas Martin, esq., whose name is subscribed to the annexed affidavit, was on the day of the date thereof a justice of the peace in and for said county, duly authorized to take the same, and that I verily believe the signature of the said affidavit is genuine.

In testimony whereof I have hereunto set my hand and affixed the seal of the said courts and county the 23d day of February, 1886.

[SEAL.] JNO. M. DIGNEY, Clerk.

I certify that William Winans, clerk general service, detailed Quartermaster's Office, is suffering from gunshot wound (piece of shell) in left shoulder, and is in consequence unable to do the duty of handling files and lifting folios. I respectfully recommend lighter, or more suitable duty for him.

BASIL NORRIS,

B. C. CARD,
Quartermaster, United States Army.

FEBRUARY 24, 1883.

WASHINGTON, D. C., March 4, 1886.

To whom it may concern:

I certify that I have made a professional examination of William Winans, and find him suffering from a gunshot wound of the left arm and shoulder. A fragment of shell entered two inches below the acromion process of the scapula and immediately posterior to the humerus, and was removed three inches below the point of impact. The mobility of the shoulder-joint is impaired so as to prevent his raising the forearm and hand on a level with the chin. The hand can be placed behind the back with difficulty. At the time of my visit, November, 1880, a large abscess had formed extending posterior to the axilla arm, involving the anterior border of the scapula. Assisted by Dr. Bird, I made a free opening into the abscess and along the anterior border of the scapula, exposing it, a portion of which was necrosed or dead. This portion was removed, and after a period of two or three months the wound healed, and has remained so since. His disability for performing manual labor is total.

I have had the professional care of said Winans since September, 1880, and find that his general health has been greatly impaired and requiring frequent attention, and which I believe to be due to the injury and confinement and exposure during his retention in a rebel prison.

AMENDMENTS TO BILLS.

Mr. CALL submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. DAWES submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the general deficiency appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

HENRY F. KAISER.

The bill (S. 2562) granting a pension to Henry F. Kaiser was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Henry F. Kaiser, late a private in Company E, Forty-ninth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers.

Mr. BUTLER. Let us have the report, Mr. President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be read.

The Secretary read the following report, submitted by Mr. BLAIR June 22, 1886:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2562) granting a pension to Henry F. Kaiser, have examined the same, and report:

The claimant, Henry F. Kaiser, enlisted April 17, 1861, and served until July 29, 1861, in Company B, Twenty-fifth Pennsylvania Volunteers. He again enlisted August 6, 1861, and was discharged January 5, 1863, having served as a private in Company E, Forty-ninth Pennsylvania Volunteers. He first filed an application for a pension August 31, 1877, and again April 9, 1878, alleging that at Camp Griffin, Virginia, December 25, 1861, from cold exposure he became disabled so that he lost the sight of left eye and partial sight of right eye.

The claimant has on file the original discharge, dated January 5, 1863, at camp near White Oak Church, Virginia, stating that it is because "the said private has been blind of one eye for the last six months, and the other has become so affected that he is not able to see after night at all."

The claim was rejected March 9, 1885, on the ground that the alleged disease existed prior to enlistment.

It appears also that the soldier enlisted again at Harrisburg, Pa., in the Veteran Reserve Corps, December 29, 1863, and was mustered out December 23, 1865. Disability at date of enlistment in Veteran Reserve Corps, partial loss of sight of left eye.

The certificates of the examining boards show that in 1881 he had lost the sight of the left eye, and the right was very weak; June 8, 1883, total loss of sight of right eye, and can barely discern the light with the left eye; June 27, 1883, totally blind.

The claimant testifies that he can not furnish medical evidence showing his physical condition prior to and at the date of his enlistment, for the reason that he was a sailor on a merchant vessel for nine years prior thereto, and there were no doctors employed in the merchant service.

The testimony in this case is very voluminous, and the case has been several times examined by special examiners in the field. There is no question as to the existence of the disease in the service, and its continuance in a more severe degree and increasing intensity ever since. In addition to his own testimony there is the evidence of several comrades who served with him in his first three months' service that he was then sound and his eyesight good. The only evidence of any prior difficulty is very meager and indefinite in its character.

Your committee are of opinion that if the disease was not in its first inception due to the service, of which there seems to be little doubt, that it was certainly much aggravated thereby, and that after the Government twice accepted this man as a good soldier, and he rendered long and valuable service to his country and was discharged for disability, that the weak and unsatisfactory evidence here presented of some slight previous weakness of the eyes should not prevent this poor blind soldier from now receiving a pension. We therefore report back the bill and recommend that it do pass.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, PENSION OFFICE,
Washington, D. C., June 2, 1886.

SIR: In compliance with your request, I have the honor to transmit herewith the papers in the pension claim of Henry F. Kaiser, who served in Company E, Forty-ninth Pennsylvania Volunteers. Original invoice No. 241328. This claim was specially examined and rejected March 9, 1885, upon the ground that the alleged disease existed prior to enlistment.

Very respectfully,

JOHN C. BLACK, Commissioner.

Hon. JOHN I. MITCHELL,
U. S. Senate.

Mr. COCKRELL. What is the amount of pension granted by the bill?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It states:

Place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension-laws, the name of Henry F. Kaiser.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

RIVER AND HARBOR BILL.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The hour of 12.30 having arrived, the Chair places before the Senate the river and harbor bill.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 7480) making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. MCMILLAN] from the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The amendment had not been read, I believe.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is of opinion, though it is not expressly so stated, that there was an agreement that it should not be read.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I think it ought to be read.

Mr. MCMILLAN. I have no objection.

Mr. INGALLS. I do not know what the agreement was, but I ask leave to make one observation.

Not desiring to delay or retard the progress of the bill, I did not interpose any objection to the request that was made to dispense with the reading of the amendment, because I was assured by the chairman of the committee that the amendment had been very carefully prepared, and relying upon that I was willing to accept his assurance that the amendment was in a condition fit to be voted upon by the Senate; but I ask the attention of the Senator from Minnesota to page 4 of his amendment, line 77:

Improving harbor at Block Island, Rhode Island: Continuing improvement, $15,000; of which $8,000 shall be expended on the breakwater and $12,000 on the inner harbor.

Eight and twelve as I understand are twenty, according to my arithmetic, and this amendment provides that out of the $15,000 for this improvement $20,000 shall be expended in the way provided in that paragraph.

Mr. President, is this amendment, with that showing, in a condition that justifies us in accepting it without any further consideration? Look again on page 7, line 142:

Improving harbor at Oswego, N. Y.: Continuing improvement, $71,250; of which $75,000 to be used in repairs and $20,000 in continuing work on the harbor.

That is to say, there is an appropriation of $71,250 and a designation of the expenditure of $95,000.

Again, look on page 9, where there is an appropriation, beginning in line 176, for "improving harbor at Erie, Pa.: Continuing improvement, and also for the improvement of said harbor as recommended by the Chief of Engineers, January 13, 1885, $37,500," and a proviso "that $30,000 of said sum shall not be expended until the aforesaid title shall be accepted by the Secretaty of War," leaving $7,500 to be expended for the improvement.

Again, examine page 10:

Improving harbor at Norfolk, Va., and improving approach to Norfolk Harbor and the United States navy-yard at Norfolk—

For which $187,500 are appropriated—

Of which $100,000 shall be expended in improving the harbor, and $150,000 in widening the channel of Elizabeth River.

Making an appropriation of $187,500, and a specific direction for the expenditure of $250,000.

I ran this amendment over casually this morning after the Senate assembled, and I found a great variety of such eccentricities, to say the least, as those to which I have called the attention of the Senate.

Look on page 19, beginning at line 438:

Improving harbor at Superior Bay and Saint Louis Bay, Wisconsin: Continuing improvement, $22,500.

* * * * * * *

Eighteen thousand dollars of the money hereby appropriated are to be expended in dredging in said Superior Bay and Harbor, and in repairing piers at natural entry, and $12,000 in dredging Saint Louis Bay.

That is to say, $22,500 are appropriated, of which $18,000 are to be expended in one way and $12,000 in another, making $30,000 to be expended out of an appropriation of $22,500.

Again, on page 25, beginning at line 584:

Improving Newtown Creek and Bay, New York: Continuing improvement $37,500; of which $12,500 to be expended—

In one way and $12,500 in another, making $25,000 out of the $37,500, making no allusion whatever to the original appropriation nor to the reduction that has been made, but simply continuing the direction of the committee as if the appropriation had not been reduced.

Again, look at page 31:

Mr. MILLER. Would it not expedite business to commence the reading of the amendment and make these corrections as we go on?

Mr. INGALLS. No; because there may be more than these, and I only call attention to what I have seen in the most cursory and casual examination of this amendment in order that the attention of the Senate may be directed to them for the purpose of determining what we shall do in regard to the bill.

Look, on page 31, beginning at line 738:

Improving Roanoke River, North Carolina: Continuing improvement, $15,000. Two thousand five hundred dollars, or so much thereof as may be necessary, of the aforesaid $10,000 shall be used——

Mr. CHACE. Mr. President——

Mr. INGALLS. Do not interrupt me.

Mr. CHACE. The Senator will see the comma, which changes that sentence.

Mr. INGALLS. When I get through the Senator from Rhode Island will be at liberty to comment upon what I have said. There is a period after "fifteen thousand dollars," and there is no other mention anywhere in the paragraph of $10,000, except in this declaration of the method in which this appropriation is to be expended:

Two thousand five hundred dollars, or so much thereof as may be necessary, of the aforesaid $10,000 shall be used for the purpose of removing obstructions in the Thoroughfare and Coshoke Creek.

That is to say, the appropriation is $15,000, and $2,500 "of the aforesaid $10,000" is to be used for a specific purpose.

On page 33, beginning at line 799:

Improving Flint River, Georgia: Continuing improvement, $15,000; of which sum $5,000 are to be expended between Albany and Montezuma, and $15,000 below Albany.

Making an appropriation of $15,000 and an expenditure of $20,000.

On page 34:

Improving Choctawhatchee River, Florida and Alabama: Continuing improvement, $11,250; of which sum $5,000 to be expended below Geneva, and $10,000 to be expended between Geneva and Newton, Alabama.

Making $4,500 more designated than the sum appropriated.

And one more mysterious than all, on page 35:

Improving Manatee River, Florida: Continuing improvement, $7,500; improving Pease River, Florida: Continuing improvement, $2,250; of which $5,000 may be expended on Pease River.

Mr. MCMILLAN. That amendment was inserted by a vote of the Senate.

Mr. INGALLS. Here it is, and we are asked to vote upon it without reading.

Mr. MCMILLAN. That item was inserted by the Senate after this amendment was prepared.

Mr. INGALLS. After appropriating for the general purpose, appropriating for Pease River, Florida, $2,250 it declares—

Of which $5,000 may be expended on Pease River.

On page 36:

Improving Tombigbee River, Alabama and Mississippi: Continuing improvement, $18,750; to be expended below Vienna, $15,000; and between Vienna and Fulton, $10,000.

Making an appropriation of $18,750, and an expenditure of $25,000.

Again on page 41, beginning at line 992—

Improving White River, Arkansas: Continuing improvement, $13,500; thirteen thousand of which, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to complete the survey of said river; the remainder for general improvement.

Without making any improvement at all, leaving $500 out of $13,500 to be devoted to the improvement and $13,000 to the survey!

On page 45, beginning at line 1092—

Improving Saginaw River, Michigan: Continuing improvement, $33,750.

And providing out of that for a distribution of $27,500, leaving $6,200 for the general purposes of the appropriation.

Page 56:

Improving Mississippi River at Des Moines Rapids Canal, under the modified project, $26,250; of which sum $20,000 are to be used for pier construction.

Page 57:

Improving Mississippi River from the mouth of the Illinois River to the mouth of the Ohio River, $375,000—

With a proviso—

Provided, That the Secretary of War, in his discretion, may use not to exceed $100,000 of said sum of $500,000—

The amount being $375,000—— to correct the current of the river and improve the channel at Saint Louis.

Out of this total sum I find that by adding up the distributions that are made for specific amounts there is a total amount of $675,000 out of the amount without any reference to the original appropriation.

Mr. President, how much more there is in this amendment that has escaped my attention I do not know. I did not have the opportunity of seeing the amendment until I came in here this morning, and in the intervals of such other business as has been transacted I have given a casual examination to it, and I now submit, after this inspection that I have been able to give to it, it is hardly appropriate that I should be called upon to adopt in lump and in gross without further consideration the amendment offered by the committee.

I say this without any hostility to this bill. If it is reduced as the Senate has ordered, I intend to vote for it; but I do not think we ought to be called upon, even if time has been consumed and other matters are pressing, with such enormous discrepancies as appear there, to say that this committee have devoted to it the consideration that will require us to act without even having it read.

Mr. MCMILLAN. This reduction was made in the amounts appropriated, and all the reductions have been made as stated to the Senate. The items to which the Senator from Kansas has called attention are mere clauses distributing the appropriations made by the other bill, and those distributions are not matters of appropriations in the bill, but were all intended to be correct of course and made to conform with the appropriations as reduced by the amendment proposed by the committee. It is a mere clerical act to make them conform in the same proportion as in the bill to the amounts here appropriated. There is nothing at all the Senator has stated which need at all cause the Senate to hesitate.

I have not interposed any objection to the reading of the amendment. I have no objection to that being done. If the Senator wishes to make the corrections as he goes along, it can be done; but certainly all those distributions would have been made in the same proportion from the original bill as the appropriations have been reduced by the amendment.

Mr. CULLOM. May I inquire of the chairman what is his wish in the premises as to the manner of correcting the details?

Mr. MCMILLAN. Let the amendments be read and let them be corrected as the reading proceeds.

Mr. INGALLS. I do not think the Senate ought to be called upon to make these computations. Our time can be better employed. The committee, as I understand, proposed to report a bill in such shape that we could intelligently vote upon it. There are other matters of great importance pressing here. I submit that before we are called upon to vote on this bill it ought to be presented to us in such a form that there will be some assurance at least that the necessary computations have been made. I think the committee ought to take it again and fix it up and present it to us in a proper shape.

Mr. MILLER. It can be done in a few hours.

Mr. FRYE. It can be done in an hour without the slightest difficulty. There are about twenty of those cases, my recollection is, in the whole bill; and it requires a very short computation which can be arrived in an hour at furthest. It seems to me it would be better to informally lay aside the bill for one hour, and by that time the chairman of the committee will be able to present a modified amendment which will be correct.

I desire to say one thing further. I was occupying the chair yesterday when the question of reading the amendment came up, and my recollection is not that the reading was dispensed with by unanimous consent. I do not think it was. The Senator from Vermont called for the reading of the amendment and immediately withdrew to escape it. After he withdrew the Senator from Virginia called for the reading of the amendment and the reading was commenced; but the Senator from Virginia withdrew his call after the reading had begun. I have no recollection whatever of submitting to the Senate the question whether the reading should be dispensed with, and I do not think it was done. I was occupying the chair at the time.

Mr. PLATT. Without any reference to this bill rather than any other bill, I think that the orderly way of proceeding in the Senate whenever an amendment is proposed is to have it read at length. I think if we make the exception in favor of this bill or this amendment, which has been proposed, it will at some time come back to plague us.

Therefore it seems to me that the best way is to have the reading of the same amendment which is proposed proceed. I think we shall be justly chargeable with doing business in an inconsiderate manner if we do not have all amendments which are proposed to any bill reported at the desk.

While the amendment is being read the chairman of the committee or the clerk of the committee can make all these computations, so that in ten minutes after the reading of the amendment is completed the changes can be stated.

I do not make any specific call for the reading of the amendment, but as that call has been made I think the reading should be proceeded with.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be read at length.

Mr. VEST. Before it is read I wish to make a single remark. Yesterday when the Senator from Michigan [Mr. CONGER] addressed the Senate at the close of our afternoon session, on account of the confusion in the Hall I was unable to catch distinctly what he said. I find in the RECORD this morning a very singular statement, which I am utterly at a loss to understand unless it was applicable to the Senator from Texas [Mr. COKE] and myself.

The Senator from Michigan said:

> Why does he—
>
> Meaning the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB]— > speak of every single member of it—
>
> That is, of the Committee on Commerce—
> as having been influenced by some corrupt motive?
>
> Mr. PLUMB. I disclaimed that in the beginning.
> Mr. CONGER. The Senator has stated it, whether he disclaims it or not, and he has said here that there are but two men of all that committee who rose to confess, to own that they were corrupt and unscrupulous in accomplishing their objects.

Mr. President, if I had heard any such statement here it would have received from me a very stern, emphatic, and indignant denunciation. There were but two members of that committee who rose to speak in regard to this reduction of 25 per cent., and they were the Senator from Texas and myself. I heard no charge of any corrupt motive on the part of that Senator, and certainly not of myself, nor did I hear anything or say anything that could have been distorted or contorted into anything like a confession. I have no confession to make. I have done nothing I would not do again.

There were many things in the bill as reported from the Committee on Commerce, after six weeks of deliberation, from which I dissented and which I opposed with all my power in that committee, without going into the details now; but when a majority of the committee voted me down and concluded to report the bill as it came to the Senate, I said then that I would loyally support it with the exception of the Hennepin Canal appropriation, and I gave notice in the committee that I would oppose that in Senate as I had done in the committee.

The bill came into the Senate in accordance with what I understood was the agreement of the committee. I supported that bill loyally and earnestly, and for four days I stood here in connection with the Senator from Michigan, the Senator from New York, and the chairman of the committee, and fought for every provision in the bill. I considered it my duty to do so. I considered that to be the compact made in the committee.

What was the result? A majority of the committee here did not vote at all or voted against the committee on all the amendments that were brought in increasing the appropriations. There was but one legitimate result: the committee went to pieces, never got together afterward, and the bill was butchered in the Senate. None of its blood is upon my garments. I stood by it and fought to the best of my ability.

As to this charge of corruption, I have heard nothing but the ordinary amount of talk that we get upon every river and harbor bill—about the members of the committee taking care of their own States; and I have replied to it, as I have always, that it amounts to nothing in the opinion of the country; that there was no foundation whatever for any such imputation; that the Committee on Commerce was simply like the rest of the Senate, actuated by the same sort of motives; and that there was no venality or corruption at all which could be imputed to them.

This assumption that the Committee on Commerce have legislated alone for themselves is based upon the idea that the Senators who make it stand upon a sort of legislative pedestal above and beyond the ordinary motives that influence other Senators; and yet it is only necessary to call the yeas and nays to know the vote on a river and harbor bill in the Senate. A map of the United States will show the vote. Take States which have no navigable rivers and their Senators vote "nay" invariably and have always done so and will always do so. The Senator from North Carolina [Mr. VANCE] reminds me that there is one exception to that, the Senator from Nevada [Mr. JONES], a member of the Committee on Commerce, who I believe supports the bill; but I repeat that you can take a map of the United States and you will find the yeas and nays as they are here invariably. There are certain States whose Senators never vote for a river and harbor bill, and two or three of those Senators attack the Commerce Committee of the Senate and say that they have provided for their own States.

But what I rose to call attention to was this remarkable statement in the RECORD, that the Senator from Texas and myself had confessed to the Senator from Kansas that we were actuated by corrupt motives. Mr. President, any Senator who would so stultify himself would deserve to be expelled from this body. So far from making any confession I simply rose when the Senator from Kansas was making a wholesale attack upon the Committee on Commerce for having increased the appropriations in committee for their own States to call attention to the statement and to emphasize the injustice of it from the fact that I had made no such increase, not that I was better than the rest of the committee, but because I thought the best thing for the Mississippi River, in which I am more interested and in which my people are more interested than in any other portion of the bill, was to retain the appropriations as they were for fear that disaster might overtake the bill if there were increases of appropriations everywhere. That is all of it. I do not arrogate to myself any purer or higher motives or better instincts. I acted as a legislator to save the appropriation for that river, because, without any claim to prescience, it seemed to me that if we went on loading down the bill by adding three or four million dollars, the very thing would happen which has happened in the Senate, that the Commerce Committee would be forced to cut down the bill themselves, if they would stay together, or else agree to a horizontal reduction such as is proposed now.

What is the operation of this amendment if it is carried? The Mississippi River receiving about one-half what it should receive, and the Missouri and the Ohio just the same, being cut down 50 per cent. under the estimates by the House, now receives a further reduction. There is a further reduction on the Mississippi River of $800,000, of nearly $200,000 in the case of the Ohio and $200,000 in the case of the Missouri, while the Senators who have increased their appropriations in the committee from $300,000 to a million dollars receive a little more than they would have received if the House bill had been adopted.

Is it fair, is it just, because a Senator has not asked for an increase that he is subjected to the same Procrustean rule, and the great river of this continent has a reduction of $800,000 because its friends on that committee, in the interest of the river, in the interest of the great commercial advantages which its improvement would give to the people of the Mississippi Valley, did not ask an increase, and their modesty, if you may so term it, is to be punished by a reduction of nearly a million dollars?

I can not vote for any such amendment. I was not in the committee when it was adopted. I shall fight it fairly and honestly because it is wrong in principle. We spent six weeks upon the bill in committee. We deliberated upon every amendment. The bill was increased a little, and after the committee by a large majority had put these increases upon the bill, we are now asked to cut off one-fourth of the whole amount without regard to the appropriations as they were made in the other branch of Congress.

Mr. CONGER. Mr. President, I, of course, made no such imputation in my speech in regard to the two Senators as the Senator from Missouri seems to have inferred from my remarks, knowingly or intentionally. I heard the speech of the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB], and without taking notes or having it before me I made such remarks as occurred to me upon what I had supposed was said. If I made any remarks that were not called for by the remarks of the Senator from Kansas, or did injustice to any one, I did it unintentionally.

However, I do find in the remarks of the Senator from Kansas that he said:

> The Senator from Missouri and the Senator from Texas are the only two members of the committee who lack either the acquisitive faculty, or judgment, or energy, or whatever else may be required to carry a measure in that committee; "industry," the Senator from Massachusetts says; and my colleague adds "temptation;" and I will put in all the other adjectives which can be suggested in that line. As I said, these two members of the committee are the only members who failed to get a large or at least an appreciable, as I now recall it, increase of the appropriations for their States, and they are the only two members who are opposed to this reduction.

Then followed a conversation between the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] and the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. MCMILLAN]. The Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB] then said, after stating what he had started out to say:

> As in the case of a confession made by a homicide, or any other criminal, the confession must be considered in connection with all the qualifying attendant circumstaces which surround it before it can be used; and so the confession of a part of this committee exculpates them entirely.

That I find in the RECORD.

Mr. VEST. What page is that on?

Mr. CONGER. It is on page 6975, first column, near the top. That I had in my mind without any definite recollection of who those Senators were, and I repeat the language so that you will see what my thought was:

> As in the case of a confession made by a homicide, or any other criminal, the confession must be considered in connection with all the qualifying attendant circumstances which surround it before it can be used; and so the confession of a part of this committee exculpates them entirely.

In my remarks, without knowing who the persons were, or without saying anything about them, coupling incidentally the remarks as to two, but not knowing even who those two were, for I had not heard all the remarks made before, I thought that applied to the Committee on Commerce as a confession of a part of the committee, and I made my remark in regard to it.

Mr. VEST. Will the Senator permit me to interrupt him?

Mr. CONGER. I will only say that I do not quite see the connection of that last clause with anything that appears in the RECORD. The Senator from Kansas, of course, will do me the justice to say whether there was anything that I might have had my attention called to in that connection left out of the RECORD. I do not suppose there was.

Mr. VEST. The Senator will permit me to say that I listened very carefully to the Senator from Kansas and I heard every word that he said. On account of his nearness to my seat I could hear him, but I could not hear the Senator from Michigan very distinctly. I understood that when the Senator from Kansas spoke of a confession he alluded to the chairman of the committee, because he goes on in the next sentence and says:

> The Senator from Minnesota says that this reduction is made because the committee was run on, like a wagon going down-hill sometimes runs on the team. He did not believe it at all; it was against his judgment, against his conviction, and everything of that kind, but yet he comes in and supports it.

There was nothing said by the Senator from Texas or myself against this bill or any provision of it. On the contrary I had advocated it, as the Senator from Michigan well knew.

Mr. CONGER. Neither did I say anything about the Senator from Missouri. The Senator will find here in this the statement was based upon remarks which I have read twice, "as in the case of a confession," &c. I merely disclaim having had any thought of allusion to the Senator from Missouri or the Senator from Texas. They have been firm and congenial advocates of this bill with myself, and in constant and continual consultation in the committee-room and elsewhere in regard to what would be the best bill.

I have never had a thought of either of them or of any other member of the committee doing anything improper. The remarks which I made were founded upon the clause which I have read twice, and as I say I do not see in the connection in that clause that there is anything which precedes it, what I certainly had in my mind, as something connecting those two clauses together, and I was probably laboring under some mistake as to what particular individuals that clause related to.

Mr. PLUMB. The Senator from Michigan rather insinuates or suggests that possibly something is in the RECORD which was not uttered or that something was left out of the RECORD which was uttered. I have this to say, that I did not see the report of the remarks which I made yesterday, and I have not yet read it; but on looking at the paragraph to which the Senator from Michigan calls attention, on page 6975, I will say that, while I do not think what is printed preserves the same connection in which it was used, that is to say that all the connecting language is not inserted in the RECORD, owing probably to some inevitable mistake on the part of the stenographer, at the same time what was said was in direct reference to the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. MCMILLAN], and his interruptions of me and his own somewhat emphatic utterance of the ill way in which Minnesota had fared in the bill, thereby exculpating himself from what he deemed to be my charge against those members of the committee who are in favor now of scaling down the bill. Certainly it was not in my mind to make any charge against any member of the committee individually, or against the committee as a committee that would in any way be construed as imputing motives to them; and especially I excepted out from that anything which could reflect upon the Senator from Missouri and the Senator from Texas, to whom I alluded as having been entirely consistent in advocating the bill and still sticking by it.

In fact in what I said I had before my mind the difficulty under which the committee labored, being beset from all quarters about appropriations, and the necessity that was upon them of selecting from a multitude of objects of appropriation those which must go into the bill. But I confess that when the committee turned around upon itself, after having had an individual log-roll with the members of the Senate to stand by a large bill, and one member having conspicuously stated at two different places in my presence that the larger the bill—if not exactly that, that was the idea—the larger the bill the more certain it would be to receive the Presidential approval, and that he thought certainly, although himself a Republican yet gave what I understood as the suggestion of a Democrat, he having got the information close to the throne, it did seem to me a little out of place, and I thought worthy of characterization, that the committee should, without any previous explanation or information to anybody, come in here and propose to turn tail and not have the star performance go on, in not standing by these various items of appropriation upon the theory which they believed in, as I thought, that they were necessary, that they were proper, and that the money was in the Treasury to pay them. I certainly had no thought of characterizing the committee at all, although I did say what I thought about that method of expending the public money, and until we got some light on the subject I thought it ought not to influence our action in turning and opposing what had before been so strenuously favored.

Mr. COKE. I had not seen the RECORD until my attention was called to it by the Senator from Missouri. I did not happen to hear what occurred yesterday. I have listened to what the Senator from Michigan and the Senator from Kansas have said about it. As far as I am concerned, I am perfectly satisfied that both of those gentlemen were doing exactly what they thought was right, and that neither intended any reflection upon myself or the Senator from Missouri.

As to my action on the committee I have no apologies to make to anybody about it. As a Senator I pursue the convictions of my own judgment. When I agree with the committee I go with it. When I differ with the committee I go my own way, and the committee goes its own way. I have supported the bill brought in by the committee mainly. In some respects I have opposed it.

To the proposition now before the Senate, brought in last by the committee, I am opposed. I believe that it will work injustice. I believe that it should never have been brought in, because the bill as it has been perfected and as it stands before the Senate is the deliberate judgment of the committee and the Senate in favor of the appropriations in the bill as they stand. The proposition to cut them down 25 per cent. is an unreasonable and illogical and unjust assault upon the previous action of the Senate and the committee in this regard.

I have heretofore given the reasons of my opposition to this substitute, and will say nothing more.

Mr. BECK. Mr. President——

Mr. MCMILLAN. Will the Senator allow me?

Mr. BECK. I only want to say a few words.

Mr. MCMILLAN. I was about to ask that the Secretary proceed with the reading of the amendment.

Mr. BECK. I do not hear the Senator.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Kentucky has the floor.

Mr. MCMILLAN. I will yield; I do not wish to interrupt the Senator.

Mr. BECK. Mr. President, I rise simply to say that as we are in a good deal of trouble about adjournment, the middle of July having been reached, that we have already wasted the greater part of two weeks on this bill, and that the amendment now proposed is perfectly well understood and no rereading of it will throw any new light on the subject. Of course it must be read if anybody desires it, but that will be a clear waste of time. We are as well prepared to vote upon the proposition without having it read as we would be afterward.

I propose to vote with the committee. They seem to think that this amendment will more likely enable them to pass the bill than if it is not adopted. They ought to know. I do not care what their reasons are, they, or a large majority of them, seem to think so. The bill ought to pass in some form, and as the committee believes that this is the best chance to pass it, I am willing to give them that opportunity.

One thing it certainly does, it throws open to consultation with the House or in conference whatever may be ascertained to be objectionable. If there is any objectionable feature that has been improperly inserted it can be stricken out. The whole subject is opened by adopting the amendment, because the proposition changes the whole action of the House. Yet, neither House loses control of the bill because it has to come back to each House for their consideration after whatever may be found wrong in it has been considered by the committee who have charge of it.

I said when the bill was first before the Senate that I was in favor of a liberal river and harbor bill if the sum appropriated was applied to such objects as benefited the people of the United States. There are provisions in this bill of which I do not approve. I voted against them, my vote is so recorded; but I am not prepared to vote against the whole bill because I was beaten in regard to those objectionable provisions any more than I was prepared to vote against the Post-Office appropriation bill after resisting for a long time what I considered a subsidy of $800,000. The Senate overruled me and adopted it.

I voted for the bill although it was in. Fortunately, in my opinion at least, the House agreed with me. Though I was in the minority here, that subsidy is not a part of the law as it finally passed. Some of the things which I object to in the bill have been voted in here by a majority of the Senate, but they may yet get out of it before it gets through both Houses. I hope they will. I have done my best here to keep them out, yet I do not want to defeat the bill because they are in; that would destroy the good and bad features of it alike, and would prevent any consultation with the other House in regard to them. A defeat of the bill is the worst thing possible, and ought not to be attempted until every other effort to correct what is wrong in it has failed. All that is bad may be stricken out when the two Houses get together. I, at least, will vote for the amendment and take that chance.

In looking through the hundreds of provisions in it I find that for six or seven objects alone, such as the New York Harbor, the Mississippi River, the Ohio, the Missouri, the Columbia Rivers, and the Muscle Shoals in the Tennessee, there are about $7,000,000 given, nearly one-half of the entire appropriation. When I look over it again for Boston Harbor and the harbor of refuge at Sandy Bay, which was said to be an important one, for Baltimore, Norfolk, Charleston, Savannah, Mobile, Galveston, Cleveland, Milwaukee, and Humboldt, Cal., I find about $4,000,000 more, making $11,000,000 for objects that everybody agrees ought to have liberal appropriations. Indeed, $20,000,000 might well be given for these alone and still be within the estimates of the Department.

I would not object to increasing every one of those items so far as I am concerned, because we have too much idle money and because I do not regard the improvement of the harbor of New York, for example, as a New York improvement. If the grain of the West can get out of the harbor of New York 1 cent a bushel cheaper than it can now either from reduced freight or insurance, or both, because of an improved channel, that cent a bushel goes into the pockets of the men of Kentucky and Dakota; it is added to the profits of the men who raise the wheat. It does not go to the people of the city of New York.

When we improved the Mississippi and built jetties there, securing a 30-foot channel, so that a 3,000-ton ship can go out of it now as easily as a thousand-ton ship could go over the Southwest Pass before, the advantage of the improvement inured to the people of Kentucky quite as much and I think more than it did to the people of Louisiana, because our freights passing down that great river exceed theirs, and so do the freights from Missouri and the great Northwest. So it is at Savannah, so it is at Mobile, at Norfolk, Wilmington, anywhere. Every improvement which cheapens transportation inures to the benefit of the man who produces the thing transported over that line, no matter where he lives or where the goods are produced.

As the Senator from Texas [Mr. COKE] very well said yesterday, after we have given empires to railroads, after we have given subsidies amounting to millions upon millions of dollars, we have no means of keeping down their freight charges except by improving the water ways of the country. Every improvement made in a water way forces down the freight charged by the railroad, because competition regulates that. When the rivers compete sharply the railroads have to decrease their charges. If we can afford to aid railways owned by corporations we can afford to aid free rivers, we can afford to improve harbors so as to encourage competition, and give all the people living everywhere the benefit of it.

I have no doubt that we in the West are more benefited by the improvement of the harbor of New York than any man living in the city of New York. I mean to say that our people send their wheat, their cattle, and their other products to foreign markets through that great port, and they have to send them there.

Therefore, I do not look upon improvements of that character as a local matter at all, nor do I complain of what has happened in the committees of either House. I have been on committees of both bodies long enough to know that men who are familiar with the wants of their own localities will always endeavor to get all they need even if other sections are pinched a little. The House committee no doubt did it. Our committee I assume did the same. The Senate committee was carefully selected. I took part in selecting the Democratic side of it. It is composed of men thoroughly acquainted with commercial matters and understand the value of cheap transportation, men who were interested in these great improvements. Both sides selected men from the different States who had to deal most largely with those subjects in choosing the members of that committee. No doubt they saw and felt keenly the importance of those improvements, and it may be that there are some differences in favor of the States they represent.

My friend from Indiana [Mr. VOORHEES] was laughing at me just now because I made a remark to him while this wrangle was going on that my countryman, Burns, in his advice to a "young friend," expressed the truth very well when he said:

> But, oh, mankind are unco weak,
> And little to be trusted,
> If self the wavering balance shake
> It 's rarely right adjusted!

Perhaps there was some little selfishness in the committees of both Houses when they were looking at these questions, and there may have seemed a difference between the things they knew about and the things they did not know about personally; but that there was any desire to do any injustice or to take any advantage of other Senators I never have believed, and I do not believe now, and I do not think that any gentleman on this floor believes.

I am not a lecturer; I am no better than anybody else. I may have a little better temper than most of you; that is the only advantage I have. But I desire to say that there has been a little bit too much crimination and recrimination going on here for the last day or two. The press and the country are very apt to magnify it, and to say if such is our own estimate of ourselves we have not told the whole truth and it is worse than we admit it to be. Therefore it does not redound very much to our credit to have such things occur. The misunderstandings of this morning are all pleasantly settled now. I hope they will remain so, and that we will hurry on with our work and get away from here.

Mr. GIBSON. Mr. President——

Mr. HOAR. I rise to a question of order. Three or four Senators having demanded the reading of the amendment——

Mr. GIBSON. I wish to ask the Senator from Kentucky a question.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts rises to a point of order.

Mr. HOAR. I desire to raise the question whether any further debate is in order until that reading has been had.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. When the reading of an amendment is demanded, that is the first thing to be done.

Mr. CULLOM. As the reading proceeds will it be in order to move such amendments as may seem necessary?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That can only be done by unanimous consent.

Mr. CULLOM. I ask that that course be pursued.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. INGALLS. What is the proposition?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The proposition is that amendments may be moved as the reading proceeds.

Mr. GIBSON. I rose to get some information from the Senator from Kentucky when he finished speaking. I desire to know of the Senator from Kentucky whether he intends to vote for the bill as proposed to be amended by the committee.

Mr. BECK. I shall do so because the committee have reported the bill back that way. It is only for that reason that I vote for it, and not because of any amount appropriated by it.

Mr. HOAR. I insist on my point of order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts insists on his point of order. The reading of the amendment will be proceeded with and it may be corrected as the reading proceeds.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. I believe the amendment moved by me is in order, which proposed to amend the proposition coming from the committee. I ask that the whole of the bill be stricken out except the enacting clause, the committee says "after the enacting clause," and to insert, and I have not heard yet that that amendment has been entertained. The RECORD certainly shows it to have been offered.

Mr. PLATT. It is not in order until the amendment of the committee is read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment of the committee will now be read at length and will be open to modification as the reading proceeds by paragraphs.

Mr. VEST. I have a copy of the bill, but when the Senator from Kansas [Mr. INGALLS] was speaking I could not find the clauses I was looking for. Are there two prints?

Mr. INGALLS. There are two prints.

Mr. VEST. Which one is correct?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill as originally reported from the Committee on Commerce was printed, and the amendment now proposed by the committee has been printed separately.

The Secretary proceeded to read the amendment submitted by Mr. MCMILLAN, and read to line 41.

Mr. MCMILLAN. In line 39, "$25,000" should be stricken out and "$18,750" inserted, so as to read:

Improving harbor at Boston, Massachusetts: Continuing improvement, $36,250; of which $18,750 are to be expended at Fort Point Channel, on Part A, below Congress Street Bridge.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection the amendment to the amendment will be made.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. I object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection being made, the question is upon agreeing to the amendment to the amendment striking out "$25,000" and inserting "$18,750."

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. Mr. President, I shall be very glad, if I am in order, to speak to this proposition.

This morning there has been a reflection on motives here which caused so many apologies, but the fact still stares us in the face that however much there may have been a kind of regret among Senators that their language yesterday was not such as they would have chosen in cooler debate, the devil underlies this bill all the same. I can comprehend why it is possible sometimes to get to the soft side even of a United States Senator.

This is the same amendment which proceeded from the committee that has criticised the action and the words of every Senator here who has dared to ask them whether they had considered the subject. I repeat again that they did not meet to prepare this proposition. I repeat that that committee, if it met at all, met after the original bill had been discussed, and that they met not earlier than 10 o'clock in the morning, and that they were in here before 11 o'clock.

I am not to be abashed, and I am not to be driven from my original position by the criticisms of members of that committee. The Senator from Michigan said yesterday what he thought was the duty of the true statesman. I will say what I think ought to be the duty of the true man. Did that committee consider this amendment? I say they did not, and if they did let them rise here and say that they did. There may be a true statesman and there may be a truthful man. I do not undertake to say that every member of that committee is not truthful, but then there is such a thing as suppressio veri. They have not dared yet to mention on this floor that they undertook to cut down the bill 25 per cent. because they had run away from their original proposition, which I think I am entitled to say I was the only Senator on this floor to attack. I am not ashamed of it, and I am not going to run away from the position which I took.

The Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECK] has not treated this question as it deserves to be treated. He spoke of New York Harbor. I am in favor of improving that harbor. I am in favor of increasing, if we can do it, the commerce of this country. But when you take off 25 per cent. in the way in which it is proposed to be done, you take 25 per cent. off from the amount because you are afraid to take out the apppropriations from the little streams which can not improve commerce and which promote no part of the commerce of this country.

This is what this bill does. It is a bill to make appropriations without regard to rivers and harbors, and I do not propose for one to let this committee escape, however much smoke shall be raised around it, like in a certain historical figure, by coming in and saying, "We reduce the appropriation 25 per cent." You ought not to take off 25 per cent. from the appropriations which you propose here for the improvement of rivers and harbors when we take but 25 per cent. off that which we are capable of knowing here, knowing the streams in our own States, what we propose to give them and that it can avail nothing, leaving that which is necessary for the improvement of the navigable rivers and harbors of our country.

This 25 per cent. reduction ought to shame a man who knows that he is taking off one-fourth from New York, one-fourth from Norfolk, one-fourth from Newport News, one-fourth from the James River, one-fourth from all navigable streams. But the Government must at all times and even under distressing circumstances help little streams and little creeks. That is what it is proposed to do; that is what is done in this bill; and every time there is an apology made for it, every time that Senators seem to want to come down, as they did in this bill, by a 25 per cent. reduction to a kind of mercy seat, which they have established here this morning, I intend to discuss it even if I have to utter the same sentiments and employ the same phraseology every time.

Mr. HOAR. The pending amendment was introduced by the chairman of the Committee on Commerce. After it was introduced last night one or two small amendments were made in it by the Senate in order that it might conform with what had been passed in the original bill. The amendments which had been made in the original bill since it was prepared were made in it. If it were not for that the chairman would have a right, as a matter of course, to modify his amendment now in all these little details which require correction.

I therefore ask unanimous consent that he may have the right to modify the amendment, of course subject to being adopted by the Senate afterward, as if it was an original amendment introduced by him.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is of opinion that the Senator from Minnesota might modify that part of the amendment which has not already been acted upon by the Senate in any way. He has a right to do that as to the amendment, except that part of it which has been put in by a vote of the Senate.

This amendment to the amendment will be regarded as agreed to.

The reading of the amendment was continued to line 73.

Mr. HOAR. I should like to ask a question of the chairman of the committee at this point. On line 74, page 4, I suppose the word "complete" should be stricken out.

Mr. McMILLAN. Yes; it should be "continuing improvement."

Mr. HOAR. Let the words "continuing improvement" be inserted instead of the words "to complete," at the beginning of line 74, because this cuts down the appropriation 25 per cent., not leaving enough to complete the improvement of the harbor at Wood's Holl.

Mr. McMILLAN. Let the amendment be modified by striking out the words "to complete" and inserting the words "continuing improvement."

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. I can not hear the discussion that goes on between Senators when they ask unanimous consent. If they want unanimous consent they ought to ask for it loud enough so that it can be responded to. I object to anything that can possibly go to the passing of this bill as it is reported from the committee, even if it is amended after the enacting clause.

Mr. McMILLAN. This is a mere modification to conform to the order of the Senate. In line 63, after the word "which," I propose to strike out "two thousand" and insert "fifteen hundred."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That modification will be made.

Mr. McMILLAN. In line 74 I move to strike out "to complete" and insert "continuing improvement."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That has already been done.

The reading of the amendment was resumed and continued to the end of line 80.

Mr. McMILLAN. In line 79, before "thousand," I wish to strike out "eight" and insert "six," and in line 145, before "thousand," to strike out "twelve" and insert "nine."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be so modified.

The reading of the amendment was resumed and continued to the end of line 146.

Mr. McMILLAN. In line 144 strike out "seventy-five" before "thousand" and insert "fifty-six thousand two hundred and fifty;" and in line 145 strike out "twenty," before "thousand," and insert "fifteen."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That modification will be made.

The reading of the amendment was resumed and continued to the end of line 190.

Mr. McMILLAN. Instead of "$30,000" in line 188 insert "$22,500."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That correction will be made.

The reading was resumed and continued to the end of line 235.

Mr. McMILLAN. In line 229 insert "$75,000" instead of "$100,000;" and in line 230 strike out "$150,000" and insert "$112,500."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The modifications will be made.

The reading was resumed and continued to the end of line 264.

Mr. McMILLAN. In line 262 strike out "$2,000" and insert "$1,500."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That correction will be made.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. Can the Senator from Minnesota explain this:

The Secretary of War is authorized to cede to the city of Chester, Pa., the upper and lower piers located in said city and extending into the Delaware River and formerly used as an ice-harbor.

To whom do the piers belong now?

Mr. McMILLAN. Those piers were erected by the General Government.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. Does the Government charge anybody for using or passing over them?

Mr. McMILLAN. No, sir.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. Then how does that become a part of a river and harbor bill?

Mr. McMILLAN. There is an appropriation made for an improvement at that harbor, and this is for the benefit of the harbor.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. The two items are not associated in this bill.

Mr. McMILLAN. They are all embraced.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. All in the same bill, but not close enough together to be associated. This is on page 9. I do not want to retard the reading of the amendment too long. I supposed the Senator would be ready to give a proper answer to any question about the details, as the committee had so much time to consider the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The reading will proceed.

The reading of the amendment was resumed and continued to the end of line 312.

Mr. McMILLAN. In line 309 strike out "forty" and insert "thirty," so as to read "$40,000."

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CULLOM in the chair). That modification will be made.

The reading of the amendment was resumed and continued to the end of line 339.

Mr. McMILLAN. In line 338 strike out "$3,750" and insert "$2,812."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That modification will be made.

The reading of the amendment was resumed and continued to the end of line 352.

Mr. McMILLAN. In line 351 strike out "$2,500" and insert "$1,875."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That modification will be made.

The reading of the bill was resumed and continued to the end of line 354.

Mr. LOGAN. The clause just read is a reduction of the appropriation for Calumet Harbor. I wish to call attention to the fact that the sum fixed here is $7,500, when the estimate was $100,000, which I think is pretty low scaling. I shall ask the Senate to put it up to $10,000 at least.

Mr. McMILLAN. Let the reading of the amendment be finished. We are correcting merely clerical errors while the amendment is being read.

Mr. LOGAN. The bill will not be amendable after it is gone through. The rule was stated by the President of the Senate that the amendments should be offered as we read the sections.

Mr. MILLER. The Senator is mistaken in regard to that, I think. The suggestion was that the chairman of the committee should correct his own amendment, by unanimous consent, while the reading went along. When the amendment has been read through and the chairman has made such corrections as he desires in order to put the whole amendment in the shape he desires, then of course it will be open to amendment the same as any other bill, but not till then.

Mr. LOGAN. If that is the understanding, I shall not interfere at this time; but the statement made by the President I took as notice that amendments could be offered during the reading, but if amendments can be offered afterward that will do just as well.

Mr. McMILLAN. As far as I am concerned, they can be.

Mr. LOGAN. I will wait until the reading is concluded. I propose to make the same motion in the next clause; I give notice now of it to the chairman that he may think about it. It is in reference to the Chicago Harbor.

The reading of the amendment was resumed and continued to the end of line 396.

Mr. McMILLAN. In line 595 strike "$50,000" and insert "$37-500."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The modification will be made.

The reading was resumed and continued to the end of line 449.

Mr. McMILLAN. In line 443 strike out "$18,000" and insert "$13,500;" and in line 446 strike out "12,000" and insert "$9,000."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Those modifications will be made.

The reading of the amendment was resumed to the end of line 485.

Mr. McMILLAN. In line 467 there is a misprint. Strike out "until" and insert "unless;" so as to read:

Unless the report of said board shall be in favor of making said canal free to commerce.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That modification will be made.

The reading was resumed and continued to the end of line 583.

Mr. McMILLAN. In line 582 strike out "$20,000" and insert "$15,000."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That modification will be made.

The reading was resumed and continued to the end of line 593.

Mr. McMILLAN. Strike out "$12,500" and insert "$9,375" in line 586; and in line 589 strike out "$12,500" and insert "$9,375."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Those modifications will be made.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That modification will be made.

The reading was resumed and continued to the end of line 639.

Mr. McMILLAN. In line 634 strike out "$40,000" and insert "$30,000," and in line 637 strike out "$10,000" and insert "$7,500."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Those modifications will be made.

The reading was resumed and continued to the end of line 690.

Mr. McMILLAN. In line 688 strike out "$5,000" and insert "$3,750," and the same change in line 689.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Those modifications will be made.

The reading was resumed and continued to the end of line 712.

Mr. McMILLAN. In line 705 strike out "$2,500" and insert "$1,875."

Mr. McMILLAN. In line 826 strike out "$5,000" and insert "$3,750;" and in line 328 strike out "$10,000" and insert "$7,500."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Those modifications will be made.

The reading was resumed and continued to the end of line 839.

Mr. FRYE. I call the attention of the Senator from Florida [Mr. CALL] to the clause from line 835 to line 839.

Mr. McMILLAN. That is an amendment inserted in the Senate. I can not change it.

Mr. FRYE. The item needs amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The understanding is that the chairman of the committee may go through with the amendment of the committee so as to correct it before any amendments are made by the Senate. The reading will proceed.

The reading of the amendment was resumed and continued to the end of line 873.

Mr. McMILLAN. In line 871 strike out "$15,000" and insert "$11,250;" and in line 872 strike out "$10,000" and insert "$7,500."

Mr. McMILLAN. It is like the others.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The modification will be made.

The reading of the amendment was resumed and continued to the end of line 1300.

Mr. VEST. There is a mistake in the print. In line 1293 we amended the clause by striking out the words "repairs of" and taking the letter "s" off the word "works;" making the clause read:

Improving Missouri River from its mouth to Sioux City: Continuing improvement, including necessary work at Omaha, &c.

Mr. McMILLAN. That was the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That modification will be made.

Mr. VEST. Now I move——

Mr. McMILLAN. Will the Senator from Missouri withhold any motion until we get through with the formal corrections?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate is going through the amendment, making the necessary corrections to put the amendment in the shape desired by the chairman of the committee.

Mr. VEST. Very well.

The reading of the amendment was resumed and continued to the end of line 1340.

Mr. McMILLAN. In line 1308 strike out "$50,000" and insert "$37,500;" in line 1310 strike out "$25,000" and insert "$18,750;" in line 1318 strike out "$37,500" and insert "$28,125;" in line 1337 strike out "$25,000" and insert "$18,750;" and in line 1339 strike out "$15,000" and insert "$11,250."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Those modifications will be made.

The reading was resumed and continued to the end of line 1461.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Those modifications will be made.

The reading was resumed and continued to the end of line 1478.

Mr. McMILLAN. That concludes the reading of the first section, and I desire to correct the amendment made by the Senate. On line 835, page 35:

Improving Manatee River, Florida: Continuing improvement, $7,500; improving Pease River, Florida: Continuing improvement, $2,250; of which $5,000 may be expended on Pease River.

I move to amend that so as to read:

Improving Manatee and Pease Rivers, Florida: Continuing improvement, $9,750; of which $5,000 may be expended on Pease River.

The Senator from Florida [Mr. CALL] consolidated the two items in the bill, and this reduces the gross amount.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FRYE in the chair.) That modification will be made.

The reading of the amendment was continued to line 133 of section 5.

Mr. HOAR. The words "Manchester Harbor" should be inserted under the head of "Massachusetts." It was by a mistake that those words were omitted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be corrected by the insertion of those words.

The Secretary resumed the reading of the amendment and continued the reading to line 204 of section 5.

Mr. McMILLAN. In line 204 "Glencoe Harbor" should read "Glen Cove Harbor."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That correction will be made.

The reading was resumed and continued to section 6.

Mr. HOAR. The last "section 6" should be "section 7."

Mr. EDMUNDS. The Secretary will arrange that under the general order.

The Secretary resumed and concluded the reading of the amendment.

Mr. McMILLAN. In line 1310 I suggest a change from "$25,000" to "$18,750."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That change will be made. The reading of the amendment having been concluded, the question before the Senate is on striking out all after the enacting clause of the bill and inserting the amendment offered by the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The amendment as corrected is to strike out all of the bill after the enacting clause and in lieu of the matter stricken out insert:

Said reports of preliminary examinations and surveys shall be made to the House of Representatives, and are hereby ordered to be printed when so made.

LEGISLATIVE, ETC., APPROPRIATION BILL.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had concurred in the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 8974) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887, and for other purposes; that the House had receded from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 39, 40, 41, 89, and 90; that the House further insisted on its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 2, 17, 88, 179, and 180, asked a further conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. HOLMAN, Mr. CABELL, and Mr. CANNON the managers on the part of the House at the further conference.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask that the Chair may lay before the Senate the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill, with the action of the House of Representatives.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives receding from its disagreement to certain amendments of the Senate, further insisting on its disagreement to certain other amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 8974) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887, and for other purposes, and asking a further conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. BECK. Will the Senator from Iowa tell us what these four amendments are that are disagreed to?

Mr. ALLISON. There are really but three topics of difference. The first is the one relating to Senator's clerks; the second, the amount appropriated for gaugers and storekeepers; and the third is the appropriation respecting statistics of divorce, the amendment found on page 93 of the bill. Those are the only three items. The other two amendments are merely formal. I move that the Senate still further insist on these amendments and agree to the further conference asked by the House.

Mr. INGALLS. I wish to make a suggestion here about the proceeding under these bills. That is, that I regard it as a mistake when the conferees have partially concluded their consultation upon a bill and have agreed to some amendments and disagreed to others, to accept a partial report and leave the matter open only as to the remaining amendments.

Now take this case. By successive reports the two committees have narrowed down the points of difference between the two Houses substantially to three, and one of them affects absolutely the Senate and nobody else. If we had all the amendments open, those affecting the House as well as the Senate and all other persons that are interested, we should have a great deal better lever to secure justice, so far as our own amendments are concerned, than we have now.

I think it is exceedingly bad policy when these reports are made to summarily consent and leave nothing but the disagreement upon a very few items which practically place the Senate at the disposal of the other branch of Congress. The Senator informs us that there is an item about the payment of clerks to Senators. If this process goes on, the next report will leave that the only item of disagreement, and then the House conferees will be at liberty to say, "Everything in this bill is agreed to, but we do not propose to agree to this, and you can either recede from it or let the bill go, as you please," and we shall be put in the attitude of asking for a further conference about a matter that affects this body alone, or else giving up the bill.

I regret very much, indeed, that the chairman of the committee sees fit to come in here on all these bills and report partial agreements, excluding those matters about which there is a practical difference, thus giving the House conferees a lever that I submit they ought not to be able to wield over this body.

Mr. ALLISON. I will say in response to the Senator from Kansas that the practice which he deprecates has been in existence for many years, and has been found, especially at short sessions, to be the only method of disposing of these bills.

Mr. INGALLS. This is not a short session.

Mr. ALLISON. Apparently not.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I hope it will turn out to be short.

Mr. ALLISON. Of course, the conference committee on the part of the Senate on this bill has merely carried out the usual practice. I think that the Senate will be able to take care of itself on these three remaining amendments; just how I do not know, but I undertake to say that the Senate, if it desires to adhere to the provision which relates exclusively to the convenience of conducting the business of the Senate, will so say to the House. Of course, a bill like this legislative appropriation bill is one of great detail, and it is quite agreeable to those having charge of it to close up a great many matters that are not serious in their character. This bill as it left the Senate had two hundred and thirty-nine amendments. The House agreed to eighty-six of them without the intervention of a conference, and the remaining amendments went into conference and the conferees agreed as to all but six or seven. We sent the disagreeing votes to the House, and they have receded from their disagreement on four of the amendments, leaving now only three subjects of difference.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I was not in when the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations opened this question. I should like to ask him to explain the position of the House of Representatives through its conferees on the subject of amendment 179, I believe it is, respecting the collection of statistics of marriage and divorce. It is a subject of great interest to very many people in the United States and I think a subject of much importance. I should like to know upon what grounds the House of Representatives through its conferees insists upon disagreeing to that amendment.

Mr. ALLISON. I suppose I could state generally, without stating what occurred in the conferencee committee.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The Senator has a right, and it is his duty, as a conferee, to state what did occur in the conference committee. It is quite different from all other questions between the two Houses. It is exactly what the Senate and the House of Representatives both have a right to know.

Mr. VEST. Will the Senator state the nature of the amendment?

Mr. EDMUNDS. It is for the collection of statistics of marriage and divorce. It is an amendment put in by the Senate and about which the conferees differ. I understand the necessity of the case and the parliamentary law both to be that the conferees in reporting to their respective Houses have a right and it is their duty to explain the views and presentations of the other side of the difference in order that if they seem to be reasonable the body may recede.

Mr. ALLISON. I will state the claim of the House of Representatives on the question, which I suppose was represented by the House conferees.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Of course, it must be.

Mr. ALLISON. It was, in the first place, that we have a great number of statistical bureaus and that they have been multiplying somewhat of late; that the Senate, in addition to this specific amendment, added considerably to the general appropriation for the Bureau of Labor, &c.; and that if these statistics were valuable they could be ascertained under those appropriations. That was their first claim.

Their next claim was that this sum of money was entirely too great for the purpose indicated; and the next claim was that the House had specifically decided against this amendment in such a way as to preclude the conferees from assenting to it. Those were their claims.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Now I wish to say, in asking the Senate still further to insist upon this amendment, that the amendment does not increase the bureaus of any Department of the Government. The subject has engaged the attention of thinking people all over the country for some years, and Congress has been appealed to to pass a special law upon the subject. A bill of that kind has been introduced for one, or two, or three Congresses back, I do not know how long, but has never got action. It was again introduced at this session and sent to the Committee on the Judiciary.

We examined the subject, feeling exactly as the House of Representatives does through its conferees in respect of not desiring to increase establishments in the executive offices any further than should be absolutely necessary. We examined the law concerning the establishment of the Bureau of Labor, and we were all satisfied that the establishment of the Bureau of Labor by the statute, in terms almost, and clearly within the scope of its terms, authorized the Bureau of Labor, respecting the social condition of the people of the United States, to collect those statistics.

We therefore were of the opinion that any new act of Congress on the subject was quite unnecessary; that adequate power existed in the Bureau of Labor now, and it only required a sufficient sum of money to be devoted to that object to enable the Bureau of Labor under its existing powers to accomplish it.

Accordingly, instead of reporting the bill favorably, as we otherwise would have done, we reported this amendment in the regular way and sent it to the Committee on Appropriations to be put in the proper bill, which is this, and it was put in the bill.

The amendment increases the appropriation for the Bureau of Labor; and anybody who looks at the reports of the Commissioner of Labor, which are valuable, will see——

Mr. BUTLER. What is the amount, may I ask?

Mr. EDMUNDS. Only $10,000, not half as much as the Commissioner says it ought to be if he is going back at all, which he can easily do, for information on the subject. He thought he ought to have $25,000, but the committee thought it fit to put in $10,000 and he would only have to go back as far as he could with that money to get started.

Then, as was explained in the Senate when the matter was up, the number of offices to which he must send in all the States and Territories of the Union which contain the records of marriages and of divorces is very great indeed. I stated a number the other day when the matter was before the Senate on the bill, and my friend from Texas [Mr. COKE] in speaking of the number of counties even where divorces might be had in the United States came over to me afterward and said to me that in respect of the number of counties I had not stated half enough for the whole United States. I made a general computation on my feet, a mere guess, as it might be called, and he said that Texas itself had not so many counties but offices where records of this kind are filed and kept, as large as the number that I had stated for the United States. I may overstate that, for I do not remember the details.

Now, when you take the whole number of the States, the whole number of the counties, and, as in New England, the whole number of the towns, as we call them, where marriage certificates are filed and recorded, the number of offices to which the Commissioner of Labor must send to obtain this information, it runs into the tens of thousands, I suppose.

Why the House of Representatives should say that this small sum should not be devoted to that object on the ground that the general appropriation for the Commissioner of Labor, which has hitherto been devoted to entirely different and appropriate questions, I agree, having been greatly enlarged for the purpose of those other questions, there should not be placed at his disposal $10,000 to commence this work, I am quite unable to understand.

If the House of Representatives had said, "We do not believe in this business at all; we do not care anything about the question of marriage and divorce in the United States in regard to the general interest and welfare of its people," that would be one thing; but if they said that, they then logically should say we should abolish the Bureau of Labor altogether, because labor is only one element in social progress and in social prosperity and in social happiness.

So, though I do not wish to take up the time, as I hope we shall adjourn some time this year, I do hope that the Senate will still insist upon this amendment, and that the Senate conferees will exert their diligence, consistent with proper respect to the House of Representatives, to bring them to the same mind.

Mr. ALLISON. I hope a vote will now be taken.

Mr. INGALLS. What does the Senator ask now?

Mr. ALLISON. I move that the Senate still further insist upon the points of difference and agree to the further conference asked for by the House.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Iowa moves that the Senate still further insist on its amendments not disposed of and agree to the further conference by the House of Representatives.

Mr. INGALLS. If there is any way in which the amendment which provides for the payment of clerks to Senators can be taken out of conference I should be glad to have it done; and I suppose that can be done by a motion to adhere.

The House of Representatives fix their own official staff. They select the number of their employés and determine the compensation that they shall receive. As I understand the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, the Senate did not attempt in that matter to make one hair white or black; they took it exactly as it came from the House without making any amendment or suggestion whatever.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The Senate added several names.

Mr. INGALLS. But the Senator from Iowa tells me that I am correct.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The Senate did put in two or three names.

Mr. ALLISON. That perhaps ought to be stated. We agreed to the substance of everything of value with reference to the House of Representatives. On the request of two members of the Committee on Appropriations of the House of Representatives, being two of those who were on the subcommittee which prepared the bill, we inserted some names merely for their convenience, in order that they might be reached; and when our attention was called to it, of course we immediately receded from that.

Mr. INGALLS. I respectfully submit, without desiring to speak in derogation of any person or any body of men, that the attempt to interfere with the amendments that were agreed to in this body as to the official staff of the Senate under the circumstances is an unwarrantable and unjustifiable interference with the prerogatives of this body; and I am somewhat surprised that the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations was willing to permit every other amendment in the bill, two hundred and sixty-nine in number, to be acted upon, and leave that open as a question of debate between the conferees of the two Houses.

I believe it was the duty of the Senate conferees to have said to the conferees on the part of the House at the outset, on the threshold, "This is one of the matters that we do not propose to dispute with you about. It is a matter that concerns this body and its official force and the discharge of its own duties, in which we are independent under the Constitution of the United States." And yet the Senate conferees have agreed to 266 out of 269, if that is the number.

Mr. ALLISON. Two hundred and thirty-nine.

Mr. INGALLS. They have agreed to two hundred and thirty-nine amendments, and have left this one that affects the constitution and convenience of this body open still between the two Houses. Eighty-six were agreed upon, the Senator informs us, without debate. That is, wherever we put up salaries——

Mr. ALLISON. They were agreed to in the House.

Mr. INGALLS. I say the House promptly agreed to all the amendments made by the Senate where we had put up the salaries of Democratic officials, where we had increased the salary of the Commissioner of Patents and the Commissioner of Pensions, that physical and mental wreck who is drawing $1,200 a year as a pension besides his salary. When we increased that salary from $4,000 to $5,000 there was no debate on that on the part of the conferees of the House of Representatives; that was promptly agreed to with the eighty-six others of a similar character.

So one by one the Senate conferees have agreed to eliminate from these two hundred and thirty-nine amendments everything about which there could be debate or discussion, and have left as the last one to confront us that involving the prerogatives and the rights of this body.

Mr. President, I am discontented with it, and I believe that every one who hears me feels the same way. It never ought to have been left open for debate. It is an invasion of our prerogatives and our rights.

While I do not suppose that the Senator from Iowa has any design of abandoning this amendment, I should like to fortify him a little, I should like to re-enforce him, not that he needs it, but we have got down within two of agreeing to all the amendments except this, and I fear that before long we shall have another report saying that the conferees have agreed to every amendment except the one involving the pay of clerks of Senators in this body; and then we shall be told we can either recede from that or let the bill go. I believe I will move that the Senate adhere to that amendment now.

Mr. BUTLER. And ask for the yeas and nays on it?

Mr. INGALLS. I move that the Senate adhere upon the item affecting the payment of clerks of those Senators who are not chairmen of committees.

Mr. DAWES. The Senator from Kansas belongs to that class of legislators and persons in the world we have seen a great many of, who are unwilling to take up with satisfaction. He has arraigned the conferees because they have agreed with the committee of conference on the other side upon matters which the other side have offered to agree with them upon. They have come to our terms upon every other matter but these three, and the Senator is not willing to take up with satisfaction on these.

With some little experience in matters of conference committees, going over several years, I find it the best way in those committees, just as fast as the committees agree upon items, to close them up. They are diminished in number the most rapidly in that way. When we come to concentrate our differences upon points, we can understand what is our duty in respect to each one of them better than when two hundred or more of them are afloat.

We have now closed up this bill upon more matters of difference between the two Houses than any other legislative bill that I ever had anything to do with, and more rapidly and more satisfactorily; and we have reduced, in less time by this conference than in any other conference that ever I was on upon a legislative bill, to three out of 135 of the differences. We can stand just as firmly upon those three as we could if 130 of them were afloat—differences of great importance, differences that would be vital, differences that would affect or cripple the executive branches of the Government.

It was the duty of the conference committee to agree as far as they could; and this goes back to another committee with the same condition of things that it went into the first committee.

Until a committee of conference shall show symptoms of giving up that which belongs to us it will be unnecessary for the Senate to take any extreme measure with any one of these points. I submit to the Senator from Kansas that the ordinary method of settling these things is the best, and the least friction between the two Houses upon matters about which there is no necessity for friction is the best way to come to an agreement.

I have no more idea that to save this bill we shall be obliged to give up either of those three items of difference than I have that we should have been unable to agree upon any of them. Suppose we should have started out in the committee of conference, each one of us, by planting ourselves upon two or three items on the one side or the other of difference, and announced to the conferees of the other branch, "You need not confer on these; these are not to be conferred upon, unless you take these as we have decided them." Announce that in the beginning and you come to an end of a conference.

Let this conference be pursued as all others are until there shall be an indication of the difference. The Senate need not be afraid to trust this or any committee of conference that shall be appointed by the Chair in the ordinary way.

Mr. BUTLER. Can the Senator from Massachusetts or the Senator from Iowa give any explanation of the fact that at every session of Congress we are confronted with this issue between the House of Representatives and the Senate upon this matter relating entirely and exclusively to ourselves? Now, I am like the Senator from Kansas——

Mr. DAWES. I can tell the Senator what I suppose is the reason.

Mr. BUTLER. I am getting a little impatient under this constant disposition on the part of the other branch of Congress to interfere with what, as the Senator from Kansas says, is our especial and peculiar prerogative, with which I submit they have nothing to do.

Mr. DAWES. I am not defending the position of the House. The position of the House in reference to it strikes me just as it does the Senator from South Carolina and the Senator from Kansas. I am only discussing the best method to deal with that difference. I have no idea but what they expect to yield, but they expect to go through with this form to maintain what they call a consistency upon certain points. It is all understood how far they are to go. But for us to throw an obstacle in the way by putting it where the bill must fail in the outset only puts further off an agreement. There is no doubt about the result if we go on in the ordinary way.

Mr. ALLISON. I do not wish to occupy any more time. I can assure the Senator from Kansas and the Senator from South Carolina that at least the conferees who have considered the bill thus far have endeavored to represent truly what they believed to be the unanimous judgment of the Senate upon this question; and I have no doubt any future conferees appointed by the Chair will do the same thing.

We have over and over again presented to the House of Representatives that it is the business of the Senate to choose its own officers, and that they have no right to interfere with our prerogative (if that is a proper word to use in that connection) any more than we have a right to say who their officers shall be or what the number of them shall be. Of course, the question of compensation can fairly be a matter of consideration between the two Houses.

I hope the Senator from Kansas will not now insist upon his motion to adhere to this amendment. I think we can get on with it better perhaps by having one further conference upon this subject.

Mr. CHACE. I should like to ask the Senator from Iowa a question. I ask him if the House of Representatives may take from us certain of our employés, our servants, may they not upon the same principle take from us others, and may they not then go on until they may take the whole, and thus cripple entirely the functions of this body?

Mr. ALLISON. I see no reason why they can not say, if they interfere at all, that we shall have only one secretary at that desk instead of four or three, or that we shall have only five messengers instead of one at each door of the Senate. I quite agree with the Senator.

Mr. CHACE. That is the way it strikes me, and it seems to me it becomes a question, as a matter of precedent, of very great importance. The House of Representatives may arrogate to itself to absolutely destroy the functions of this body by crippling our ability to conduct our business.

Mr. BECK. I have heard this question discussed time and again in conference, and I think the whole matter is so very safe in the hands of the chairman, the Senator from Iowa, that we had better trust to him to manage it his own way without telling him anything. I hope the Senator from Kansas will not press his motion to adhere.

Mr. INGALLS. Upon the assurance that the Senator from Iowa and his conferees will adhere to this amendment and consider themselves, as I understand them to say they are, instructed by the Senate to stand by it and never relinquish it, I will withdraw my motion to adhere.

Mr. SAULSBURY. It seems to me that there is one view of this question which has not been presented. I do not understand that the House undertake to dictate who shall be the employés of the Senate; they only exercise their constitutional right to say whether they will vote an appropriation for certain objects. I believe that the courtesy due the Senate requires that we shall insist, but I do not think they are justly censurable to the animadversions which have been made here, because in the exercise of their discretion they assume to say that there shall not be devoted an appropriation for this purpose. They do not undertake to say that every Senator shall not have a clerk; they only say that in this bill they will not appropriate money for that purpose. The criticisms here upon the House I think are unjust.

I hope the Senate conferees will insist upon the amendment, and I hope the House will yield; but I do not believe that these animadversions are exactly right.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion that the Senate further insist and agree to the request of the House for a further conference.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the presiding officer was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate; and Mr. ALLISON, Mr. DAWES, and Mr. COCKRELL were appointed.

RIVER AND HARBOR BILL.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 7480) making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes, the question being on the amendment proposed by Mr. MCMILLAN, from the Committee on Commerce, as a substitute.

Mr. LOGAN. It was understood by the chairman of the committee that I was to be permitted to offer amendments to the amendment after it had been read, and I desire to offer them now.

In line 353 I move to increase the appropriation for the improvement of Calumet Harbor, Illinois, from $7,500 to $10,000. It was reduced to $7,500, when the estimates are $100,000; and I think such a reduction is a little too much, compared with the reductions made in other cases. I do not wish to discuss the question. I merely wish a vote on it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In line 354, before the word "dollars," it is proposed to strike out the words "seven thousand five hundred" and to insert "ten thousand;" so as to read:

Improving harbor at Calumet, Ill.: Continuing improvement, $10,000.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Illinois to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

Mr. KENNA. I move to insert at the end of the first section what I send to the Secretary's desk.

Mr. LOGAN. Will the Senator allow me to offer another amendment to the next paragraph?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from West Virginia yield?

Mr. KENNA. Oh, yes; I have no disposition to crowd out the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. LOGAN. No, it is not crowding me at all; but the amendment I propose comes right in the next line. Lines 355 and 356 read:

Improving harbor at Chicago, Ill.: Continuing improvement, $75,000.

I offer an amendment to increase the amount to $150,000. I desire to call the attention of the chairman of the committee to the estimates and the appropriations which have been made in reference to other improvements. There is appropriated for improving the harbor at Mobile, on line 274, continuing improvements, $90,000; and there is appropriated for the improvement of the Chicago Harbor $75,000.

The estimate for the Chicago Harbor is $284,000. Out of the $284,000 of the estimate, $75,000 are given; of the estimate for the Mobile Harbor about one-half is given; also for the improvement at Muscle Shoals the chairman will find that the estimate is $400,000, and the committee appropriates $262,500.

All that I ask is that a great work like this in Chicago, which has been in progress for a great many years, a great improvement as it is, and a great harbor, and as necessary as that is, as every one knows who is acquainted with the commerce on the lakes, shall have at least enough to be able to do something. The $75,000 proposed to be appropriated will not dredge the sand in the channel that has to be dredged every year.

Not only that, but the engineers' estimate is $284,000 for its completion, and they say that $225,000 can be expended during this fiscal year, and they show the necessity for it. The amount has been reduced from $284,000, or $225,000 necessary for this year, down to $100,000, and then 25 per cent. off leaves it at $75,000. That does strike me as not being exactly what ought to be done in reference to a harbor of that character where the commerce is so great as it is at Chicago, where so many vessel come in and go out, and where great necessity exists for a harbor not only for the benefit of commerce but a harbor for the safety of vessels.

As is well known, Lake Michigan is one of the most treacherous lakes in the whole United States of America. There are more vessels lost on it than on any other lake; and this harbor is a great protection. It has protected hundreds and thousands and probably millions of dollars' worth of property since it has been put in such a shape that vessels could come in within the reach that is timbered out so as to protect them.

I do not wish to criticise the committee, nor do I criticise it at all; but in comparing this harbor with others which have larger appropriations for them, others which really are not as necessary as this one, others which do not require as much work or as great an expenditure, it does seem to me that it is not exactly the thing.

Mr. McMILLAN. This item was not changed by the Senate committee, and remained as it came from the House, except the reduction embraced in the amendment which I have submitted. The amount which the engineer said could be profitably expended during the year is $225,000. The appropriation as it came to us from the House is substantially 50 per cent. of that estimate; $112,500 would have been just 50 per cent. of the estimate. The appropriation for the harbor at Mobile was just 50 per cent. of the estimate also, and the Senate itself increased the appropriation for Muscle Shoals after the committee brought the bill into the Senate.

I should be glad to have larger appropriations for these great improvements if it could be done. I should be very glad to have the whole amount appropriated which the engineer says could be profitably expended during the year; but the harbor is not going to suffer with an appropriation of this amount for this year. None of these harbors are going to suffer. The engineers can use this money profitably, and the harbor will be ready for all the commerce that is established at that port.

I hope the Senator will be satisfied with the bill now as it stands and let the item remain. If this is to be increased the same reasoning would apply to all the others, and the amendment offered by me would not be sustained.

Mr. MILLER. I desire to say a single word, and that is that this item as it now stands at $75,000 is just 33⅓ per cent. of the amount asked for by the engineers, and that is more by far than the average we have given throughout the entire bill. Originally we gave nearly one-half; now it has been cut down by the amendment, and still this remains at just one-third, or 33⅓ per cent. I do hope that no changes whatever will be made in these sums or in these proportions at present.

Mr. LOGAN. I do not wish to enter into any discussion with Senators on the committee; I know it is perfectly useless; but at the same time the assertion of the Senator from New York I do not think would be borne out if he were to examine the bill very critically. I do not wish to call the attention of the Senate to them, but I could pick out quite a number of rivers and harbors where the reduction has not affected them as it has affected the appropriations for certain matters in the State of Illinois.

To illustrate: For the Illinois River some gentleman said I secured an increase of $50,000. That is true. The estimate was $350,000, and the statement of the engineer was that it was absolutely necessary to have the full appropriation for the reason that they were completing two locks and dams in that river. That appropriation is now cut down to $100,000. I had it raised to $150,000, and now it is put at $112,000. When you take that and compare it with other appropriations which I do not care to mention, not in that immediate section of the country, there is a very great and material difference so far as coming up to the estimates is concerned.

Perhaps I have no right to complain more than other people, and I do not wish to speak here by way of complaining, but merely to call attention to the fact that Chicago for a small village has not received exactly what it ought to have received and what it is entitled to from the hands of the committee or from the hands of the House, if I may speak of the House; and why I do not know; I can not tell. There has not been a river and harbor bill brought into the Senate for years that the very same thing has not occurred in reference to the Chicago Harbor.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President, I just want to say on this question of proportions that you may take Lake Champlain, on one side of which I live and on the other side is the great State of New York; you may take the appropriation for the breakwater at the harbor of Burlington, Vt., where the revenue collected is just about one-quarter of that collected at Chicago. There was in the bill as it came from the committee $25,000 to continue the work on that breakwater. That being reduced by 25 per cent. makes $18,750.

If you take the report of the engineer as to what can be profitably expended—I do not remember its detail, but knowing the place perfectly well—you might appropriate all the money that is necessary to complete that breakwater, to make it long enough to protect that growing town and increasing commerce, in any one year, because it is the mere question of applying your force to extending a breakwater. If you appropriated $200,000 it is only the question of putting down more cribs and more stone to extend the breakwater. As I say, I do not remember what the engineers said could be profitably expended, but I happen to know myself, as it is a mere question of cribs and stone, and with plenty of room, and plenty of timber, and plenty of stone, you can apply all the money at once.

But this appropriation for that particular part of Lake Champlain is cut down, and on the same principle, and it illustrates Chicago almost perfectly, for the reason that the revenues collected in that collection district are just about a quarter. As I remember, the revenues of Chicago are about $4,000,000, and they are about $1,000,000 in the district of Vermont. It makes a very fair comparison.

I appeal to the Senator from Illinois, the bill containing for public works and things in the State of Illinois, and going to the benefit of Chicago and the commerce there as it is claimed by the Hennepin Canal and the other canal and the Illinois River, that if we are to go on and put everything in Illinois up, as the Illinois River has been put up to above what the House had it, notwithstanding this ratable reduction, then we must go to every other locality in the country in order to make an equal average.

Mr. LOGAN. I said I was not going to discuss the proposition, and that I only asked for a vote; but to show how perfectly fair the Senator from Vermont, the assistant chairman of this committee, is about matters I will read what the estimate is in reference to Burlington, Vt.

Mr. EDMUNDS. On what page?

Mr. LOGAN. Page 356. The engineer says that there can be profitably expended in the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887, $50,000.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That would make two cribs.

Mr. LOGAN. The gentleman has had 50 per cent. allowed of the amount estimated for by going to that committee perhaps. With an estimate for Chicago of $284,000 we have $75,000. The Senator has very nearly 50 per cent. left in the bill to-day for Burlington, Vt.

Mr. McMILLAN. It is reduced 25 per cent.

Mr. LOGAN. I know it is reduced 25 per cent., and the reduction is exactly what I complain of in this bill, that the reduction is not fair to different parts of the country which deserve according to the estimates more money than is appropriated in the bill. Fifty thousand dollars is the estimate for Burlington and $284,000 for Chicago, and $18,000 is allowed to Burlington while $75,000 of the $284,000 is allowed to Chicago. That is the difference; and that is exactly what I complain of.

Mr. McMILLAN. The appropriation for Chicago was substantially 50 per cent., within $12,000 of 50 per cent. of the estimate of the engineer.

Mr. LOGAN. I beg the Senator's pardon.

Mr. McMILLAN. If the Senator will look at the estimate for the amount that can be profitably expended this year——

Mr. EDMUNDS. It is $225,000.

Mr. LOGAN. Yours was $50,000 and you get $18,000, while we get $75,000, and the Senator complains because Burlington has not been as fairly dealt with as Chicago. I know Burlington, Vt., is a very nice town. I have been there. I know it has very nice people and it is much larger than Chicago; it has much more business, and is more important and the people are more important, and men who understand these things represent them much better than Illinois is represented perhaps! They understand how to get things into bills, and then they understand very well how to get bills reduced after they have got all they want themselves, and how to drive committees to do these things. Against that I have naught to say except that my friend the Senator from Vermont on every occasion when I have said anything about Illinois seemed to have some kind of spite against the State. I do not know why; I can not tell; but no other propositions have been fought by the Senator from Vermont as the propositions coming from Illinois have been. There has not been one that he has not objected to, not one that he has not criticised, not one that he has not fought.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President, I must take the time of the Senate to have this little difference among friends out, and I will begin at the end of my friend's observations. He says there is not a thing for Illinois that the Senator from Vermont has not fought.

Mr. LOGAN. Oh, no. I said not one of the propositions here, and I will state them. He fought the increase for the Illinois River; he fought the Hennepin Canal; he fights the increase for Chicago; he objected to the increase for Calumet Harbor; and that is every one that has been mentioned on this floor by the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I then only fought the things that were mentioned and let those that were not mentioned go. The presumption is then that those which were not mentioned had some merit, and that those which had not merit enough to go alone and had to be carried on the broad and strong shoulders of my friend from Illinois, with a chip on each shoulder, would naturally attract the attention of somebody and he would make some inquiry about them. That is where we come.

Now when we come back to a comparison of Chicago with Burlington, I am bound to agree with my friend. Burlington is a town of more importance than Chicago, because my friend has said so. I never knew it before, but I know that he is a man who always states everything with absolute deliberation. I will mention one little circumstance as a comparison between the two towns. We do have social order and the execution of the law at Burlington, Vt. They do not always have it—not because my friend would not have it—in Chicago. And I will mention another thing, which is entirely apart from any personal badinage between my friend and myself. There has been put into this bill—against my vote and opinion, it is true, but put in, and I submit to it—a proposition which involves millions for the benefit of the commerce of Chicago and of Lake Michigan, as the friends of it claim. So the amount of public money to be expended in that quarter of the United States—and I do not care anything about State lines in these matters—is something enormous compared to any other part of the United States, with three or four exceptions which I will not waste the time of the Senate to state.

Now, therefore, if the Senator from Illinois, after this reduction of 25 per cent., having got the Illinois River—which this great canal is to give the go-by to entirely—put up, after this reduction, by a considerable sum above the House bill, proposes to go on rating up everything that happens to exist in the State of Illinois, I do not think it is right to the other parts of the country—not speaking for Vermont, because the interest of Vermont is not at all different from the interest of the rest of the people of the United States anywhere in these matters—but if we are to put this up, then let us go back and put up everything else and reject this whole amendment altogether.

Mr. LOGAN. I am very sorry that the Senator has come to the conclusion that I have a chip on each shoulder at different times. He certainly has not. He never carries chips on his shoulders, and if he did he would not find anybody who would want to knock them off. I certainly should not.

But I find there is a peculiarity always in the sincerity and justice of the Senator from Vermont. I do not know anything about Gordon's Landing, on Lake Champlain, in Vermont. I do not know what it is. I can not find it in the estimates. Probably it is there; I suppose the Senator can find it.

I notice an item of $25,000 for extending a pier at Gordon's Landing, in Vermont. That is reduced to $18,750. I notice in all matters in connection with Vermont that it has not been hurt very much, nor do I wish to hurt it. If the Senator wanted more I think he ought to have it if there was a necessity for it; but when persons are amply supplied with everything they desire themselves, when they get all they want themselves and then attack everything that belongs to other States, it is not the generous mode of proceeding that I think ought to be pursued by mankind generally outside or inside of the Senate.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I agree with you entirely.

Mr. LOGAN. And when the Senator says that Burlington is important I agree with him; but when he leaves the path of argument, when he deviates from the logic of the case as presented, and when he goes outside that case and casts a slur at the city of Chicago because they have had confusion there on account of strikes and anarchists, he goes further I think than that courtesy which belongs from one Senator to another should warrant him in going.

I will say to the Senator that the people of Chicago are just as good citizens as he is, and just as law-abiding as he is, and certainly they are not so pestiferous at home as he is in this body. [Laughter.] I will say that for them. Of course we have had our troubles there occasionally. In a population of nearly 700,000 we have some bad men. I am very sorry that we have them. There are other places, however, where there are bad men, not in Vermont, of course, but other places in the country where a less generous and kind people reside, less intelligent and less patriotic than those who reside in the State of and are the constituents of the Senator from Vermont.

Why, sir, I might say more and say it truthfully, but I will not, for I do not desire to cast slurs upon the constituents of anybody. It is a thing that I do not do. I do not engage in that kind of argument. No matter how futile my arguments may be, no one has found me casting slurs on the constituents of any other Senator for the benefit of a little proposition that might arise in a bill, and no great man ever did it.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I admit the force of that proposition, and we have found one great man in the Senate that does not do it. So we can drop that part of the subject.

Now, I wish to tell my distinguished friend from Illinois, for whom I always have had the greatest admiration, which increases from day to day, that he is mistaken in saying that anybody in the State of Vermont has got all the appropriations that that State ought to have.

Mr. LOGAN. I did not say that.

Mr. EDMUNDS. There are two places on the east side of Lake Champlain, to both of which go railway lines, that have their harbors and their commerce, for which no appropriation is made in this bill at all. Former appropriations have been made, and they ought to be made now, but I did not want to load this bill up, and I thought those places might wait for another year before I should even say a word to the committee about them. So the Senator is unjust, or rather I should say incorrect—he does not mean to be unjust—in saying that Vermont has got all she wants in the sense in which he speaks of that.

Mr. LOGAN. I did not say that.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The RECORD will show what the Senator said, and I will not enter into a dispute with him on this bill as to what he did say. The RECORD will show. So I think we may drop that out of the thing and go to the merits of this proposition.

I must repeat, that if in respect of the harbor of Chicago it is to be thrown out of relation with the harbor of New York, and the mouth of the Mississippi River, and Norfolk, and Baltimore, and Boston, and all these other great harbors, then we might just as well begin at the beginning and put everything up to its original status and go as much further as we can get anybody to go. That is just the short of it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LOGAN] to the amendment of the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. MCMILLAN].

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

Mr. VEST. On page 53, line 1296, after the words "Nebraska City," I move to strike out "three hundred and seventy-five thousand" and insert "five hundred thousand;" and I give notice that I shall move to put back the sums appropriated in the bill reported from the Commerce Committee and the bill as it came from the House that were given to the Missouri, Ohio, and Mississippi Rivers.

I have understood throughout the whole of this discussion that all Senators from all sections of the Union agreed as to the national character of these rivers, the Mississippi and its great tributaries, the Ohio and the Missouri. The appropriation for the Missouri River was one-half the amount that was estimated for by the engineer. It came from the House at $500,000 from the mouth of the river to Sioux City, a distance of over fifteen hundred miles, and in which the States of Missouri, Kansas, Nebraska, Iowa, and Minnesota are all interested. I now move that this appropriation of $500,000 be put back in the bill, and upon that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In line 1296, after the words "Nebraska City," it is moved to strike out "three hundred and seventy-five" and insert "five hundred;" so as to read:

Improving Missouri River from its mouth to Sioux City: Continuing improvement, including necessary repairs of works at Omaha, Atchison, Saint Joseph, Fort Leavenworth reservation, Arrow Rock, Kansas City, Plattsmouth, Brownsville, and Nebraska City, $500,000; to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War, in accordance with plans and estimates to be furnished by the Missouri River Commission.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. MCMILLAN. I think if this amendment is adopted it will lead to the entire rejection of the amendment of the committee, because other improvements in this bill will ask for the same increase. The amount appropriated to the Missouri River is $610,000.

Mr. VEST. You mean the whole river.

Mr. MCMILLAN. The whole river.

Mr. VEST. This only applies to part of it.

Mr. MCMILLAN. From the mouth of the Missouri to Sioux City the bill as it came from the House appropriated $500,000, and we reported it to the Senate without a change, except inserting certain points at which expenditures of the money might be made. The appropriation contained in this amendment will be 33 per cent. of the estimate of what can be expended this year.

While we all know that the Missouri River is a very important stream and contributes largely to the interests of commerce in the country, yet the interest of the stream will not suffer with the appropriation of the sum embraced in the bill. It will be expended at particular points in the river until the repairs and constructions of certain portions of the river are all completed. When that is done then the general plan of the improvement of the river will be entered upon.

I appeal to the Senator from Missouri to permit this amendment to pass as it has been offered by the committee in order to have this amount of expenditure, which is one-third of the estimate for this year, and the engineer has the discretion under this item of appropriation to spend this money at such places as in his discretion he deems best for the interests of the river. He is not limited in his expenditures to either of the points named here, nor to all of them; but he has as unlimited discretion so far as the expenditure of the money is concerned.

I hope the Senator will not insist upon his amendment, in the interest of the welfare of the Missouri River and of the whole bill.

Mr. VEST. Now, Mr. President, I want to say a very plain word about this amendment, because this is a practical illustration of how the thing operates.

I have never—I do not leave it to my assertion, I leave it to my colleagues in the Commerce Committee and my colleagues in the Senate—I have never asked or demanded, directly or indirectly, anything but what is fair and just in regard to the distribution of the money appropriated by this bill.

Mr. KENNA. That is true as to others also.

Mr. VEST. I admit it as to others, but I put this as a preliminary observation to what I shall say now. I am talking about facts, not methods.

This bill came from the House with an appropriation of $500,000 for the Missouri River. As a member of the Committee on Commerce I did not ask for an increase, though I might have secured it. Other members of the committee did ask increases and did increase this bill to the amount of $3,400,000—not all of it in their States, but much the larger portion of it. Under this reduction of 25 per cent., what is the result? Take certain States—and I do not mention them invidiously—take the State of New York with an increase of $900,000 in round numbers in the Senate bill. Take off 25 per cent. and the State of New York is still ahead of the amount appropriated by the House of Representatives.

Mr. MILLER. The Senator will permit me to say that the amount asked for the improvement of New York Harbor by the engineers was two and a half millions.

Mr. VEST. I am not talking about the engineers' estimates.

Mr. MILLER. The House gave $150,000 and we made it a million.

Mr. VEST. I am not talking about estimates. The estimate for the Mississippi River was $7,000,000 outside of local improvements. Nearly $10,000,000 was asked by the commission in all. The House gave the Lower Mississippi $2,100,000, and now, under the operations of this reduction bill, the Mississippi River, with 25 per cent. off, gets $1,275,000.

But I ask the Senator from New York this distinct question: How much did his State get under the House bill as it came to the Senate, and how much does it get now under the 25 per cent. reduction? Does he lose anything in his appropriations?

Mr. MILLER. The Senator knows how much New York got under the increase. I have stated it here repeatedly. It was between $900,000 and a million dollars, but it happened that bill as it came to this body had given to some large improvements their fair share and their just share, so much so that the Senators representing that portion of the country did not feel at liberty to ask for a dollar of increase; but when the engineers asked for two and a half million dollars to be expended in one year upon an improvement in New York and the bill contained $150,000, everybody admitted the justice of making it somewhere near right by giving a million dollars, which was still less than 50 per cent. of the estimate.

Mr. VEST. No friend of the Mississippi River ever said anything else except that that appropriation was too small in the House bill; and all that prevented me from having the appropriation increased—I have said it over and over again—was the fact that I did not want to endanger the whole bill and run the risk of losing the amount that was put in by the House. In other words I would rather have $2,150,000 for the Mississippi River than have nothing, not that I have admitted for a single minute that that appropriation was sufficient. But the Senator does not answer my question. I say this reduction is inequitable and unjust. It leaves his State with just as much as the bill gave it as it came from the House while it cuts off from the Mississippi River $800,000 and from the Missouri and Ohio $125,000 each.

Mr. MILLER. Will the Senator from Missouri answer this question? Does he believe that if the Senate Committee on Commerce had made up this bill originally, with the Senator from Missouri as a member of that committee, that committee could have been induced, or even that he would have asked it, to give a dollar more either to the Missouri or to the Mississippi River than the bill contained as it came to this body from the House and as it came out of that committee to the Senate?

Mr. VEST. Well, Mr. President, the Senator has a very poor opinion of my influence and industry on that committee if he thinks I could not have increased it, and if as an original proposition I had not made it twice or three times as great as the amount mentioned in the House bill.

Mr. KENNA. I should be glad if the Senator from Missouri would allow me to make a suggestion at this point?

Mr. VEST. Certainly.

Mr. KENNA. The Senator speaks of the House bill and the equities of the present proposition as based upon the bill as sent to us from the House. What have we to do with the House bill? It is true that these appropriations originated there, and they have been amended here, but I want to remind the Senator from Missouri of two facts of which he seems to be absolutely oblivious. The first is, that this bill came to the Senate as revised and adjusted by the Commerce Committee of the Senate; and the second is, that this proposition to reduce 25 per cent. all along the line has been made after the Senate has adjusted this bill in every detail and in reference to every item, so that the Senator stands in regard to the Mississippi and the Missouri Rivers' improvement precisely where every one of us stands in regard to improvements in his locality.

I am free to admit that if I could not go beyond the confines of my State I would be perfectly unwilling here to reduce the appropriation for the Great Kanawha River, but I hope to be able in dealing with this subject to reach all the appropriations and every commercial interest involved.

Mr. VEST. Yes, Mr. President, I know that the Senator has "no pent-up Utica." West Virginia has never done anything on the river and harbor bill! It has been utterly neglected in the interest of other sections of this country!

Mr. KENNA. Whether that is true or not——

Mr. VEST. The Senator seems to be utterly oblivious of the fact that the Mississippi River does not belong to the State I represent here at all; it belongs to the whole country, and there are States that have larger territory on its borders than my State can possibly have. It might as well be charged to the State of Louisiana or Arkansas or Tennessee or Kentucky, all of which border upon that great stream.

The Senator says we have nothing to do with the House bill. I say we have.

The simple question now before the Senate is whether those of us who did not increase our appropriations in the Commerce Committee are now to suffer because this bill was loaded down by other Senators until it came to the Senate in such a condition that we are compelled to apply a horizontal reduction to it. That is the whole question, and of that I complain. If I had ever supposed that this bill would have been loaded down to the extent it has until this Procrustean rule would have been applied to it by a reduction of 25 per cent., I would have seen that the Mississippi and Missouri Rivers should both have had an increase, so that they could have stood a reduction like other improvements in the country. These other States that have got increases from the Commerce Committee get just as much as they would have got if we had adopted the House bill without a single amendment.

Mr. PLUMB. I have a table here which will show that the Senator rather understates than overstates it. New York gets $1,372,000 by the bill as reduced and only $875,000 by the bill as it came from the House; North Carolina $274,000 by the bill as reduced, while it only got $266,000 by the bill as it came from the House; Michigan gets $901,000 by the bill as reduced, while it got $918,000 by the bill as it came from the House; and Maryland gets $300,000 by the reduced bill in place of $232,500 as the bill came from the House.

Mr. MAXEY. I should like to remind the Senator from Missouri that this is an appropriation for the Mississippi River which not only affects the States on the banks of that river and all its tributaries, but there are living on the Mississippi River and tributaries over fifteen million people who are interested in the appropriations for it. I am heartily in accord with the Senator from Missouri in regard to that river.

Mr. VEST. No one can overstate the importance of the navigation of that river to the Western country and to the whole Union.

But recurring to the salient point in this whole matter, if the appropriations for these great rivers can be increased so that this 25 per cent. reduction will affect them as it does the other appropriations in this bill, I am willing to take my share of the reduction. As to the little improvements inside of my State, I am willing they should be cut down; but I do think it is unjust and unequal and inequitable in every sense of the word that those of us upon that committee who, in the interests of the whole bill and all the improvements in this country, did not increase our appropriations should now suffer this iron rule that they propose to apply to every appropriation in this measure.

Mr. KENNA. I only want to say one word in response to the Senator from Missouri, and I desire to say that as concisely as I can.

I utterly repudiate the suggestion that seems to bear on his mind that this is a distribution of money by States. I believe I am speaking for the Commerce Committee as a whole when I say that the question of making a distribution of the amount appropriated for the improvement of the rivers and harbors of this country by States never entered into the mind of any member of that committee.

We are confronted here daily from one source and from another by the suggestion that this State has so much in this bill, and that State has much in this bill, and some other State has so much in this bill. Sir, I deny that the lines of States have anything to do with this bill, either from a constitutional standpoint or from the standpoint of distribution made by this committee. Our great water courses constitute a system, and our committee has endeavored to treat it so. The question of granting money or refusing to do it is one that is to turn on the general advantages to the country to be derived from this improvement proposed, not on the question whether accidentally a State line crosses a stream at one point or another.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. Mr. President——

Mr. KENNA. I prefer not to yield.

Now, Mr. President, I do not assert here that West Virginia has too much or too little in this bill. I am willing to say to the Senate that if there were one dollar in the bill which had been appropriated by virtue of the fact that by a system of distribution West Virginia should be entitled to so much, I should misrepresent my constituency if I did not stand here ready to relinquish it.

It is true, as the Senator from Missouri says, that the Mississippi does not belong to any State; and yet this seems to be marvelously true in the same line that geography and proximity exercise powerful influences with reference to certain persons. From the beginning of the Forty-fifth Congress to this day, I believe I speak with profound truth when I say that the Mississippi River has had no better friend than I have been.

Without referring to another branch of Congress, I am within the limits of truth as I do know it when I say that I gave the casting vote for the proposition which appropriated the first million dollars that ever went to that improvement; and I am as ready, as willing, and as earnest as any man can be to advance the great interests of the navigation of that river and its tributaries and the general system which it involves.

I am perfectly frank, however, when I state to the Senator from Missouri if he could eliminate the Mississippi River and add to it the Ohio and the Missouri, and say to him as he would possibly say to other members of Congress, "Improve this stream and no other, abandon your great harbors, abandon your other navigable waters," I should be one of the first to stay the hand of the Government and advance those great interests to the abandonment and prejudice of other water routes of this country.

There is a stream that develops mines and tends to the usefulness of commerce and the interchange of commodities beneficial to civilization, running by a hundred square miles of the finest coal fields on this earth in my State; and notwithstanding the fact that you can not run a 2,000-ton steamer up and down that stream, it is of as great interest and importance to us as the Mississippi or any other great commercial highway in this country; and we shall insist now, as we have insisted heretofore, that a like appropriation, by a tribute levied from the common taxation of the whole people, shall be expended in promotion of improvements likewise beneficial to the whole, by an equal and fair distribution everywhere.

That is all we ask for and we will be content with nothing less.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will call the roll.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. I ask the Senator to yield to an inquiry.

Mr. KENNA. I have yielded the floor.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. I know the Senator has. I did not want that information. The information I wanted I think the Senator could give. He says "our committee." I feel very much like the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. VANCE] did when he wanted to bid farewell to a bill, about which I differed with him and voted contrary to what he thought was proper, I feel like giving this a parting salute. I think that possibly "our committee" will carry this bill. I think that "our committee" has possibly done enough in considering the advantages that are to come from making the appropriations to different localities to secure votes enough to pass this bill. I believe that it is an animal called the beaver that can build dams with its tail, and there are streams in this bill not only in West Virginia but in other States that even the beaver would have a contempt for.

Now I refer to the Senator's suggestion to me by the use of this pronoun "our" that this committee has done something. I ask the Senator respectfully through the Chair how to get this bill back to this committee? This bill was reported here originally from the committee. It was discussed by the Senate and there was no way of getting the bill itself back to the committee except by a motion to recommit, and never was any motion made here to recommit this bill but it went back to "our committee" and came back here amended.

How did you get it back into your committee or "our committee?" How did the Senator from Minnesota get it there so that he could come here and say that this amendment comes from the Committee on Commerce? Was there ever a motion made to recommit the bill? Did the Senator from West Virginia who represents "our committee" ever hear of a motion to recommit this bill? There never was such a motion made. When the committee themselves ascertained from the discussion of the bill that it could not bear the sunlight and not even the gaslight of this salubrious Chamber, they then brought in what they called an amendment, and their amendment came on the principle of this bill and it is "our committee." It is not "our Senate."

I want to call the attention of the Senator from West Virginia to the fact that he does not lose one penny by this bill that he could have defended if he had taken the floor on the original bill, and I want to say the same of the Senator from Minnnesota, and I want to say of the Senators on this floor who have advocated the passage of this bill from the beginning that they have not stricken out any clause in it which provides for the purchase of property of private corporations and it appears here on a page three removes from that on which it appeared on the original bill. I forget the name of it, but I called attention to it on the first day of the discussion. So here is a river and harbor bill that proposes not to improve rivers and harbors alone, but to buy property of rotten corporations, and this amendment does not change the principle of the original bill. It simply says that franchises shall be bought for less than the original bill said. Strike all these things out and then you will be ready to improve rivers and harbors.

Mr. President, here is an improvement called "Tallahatchie: Continuing improvement, $2,625." Can the Senator tell me how the committee reached the conclusion that the Senate ought to vote that sum of money? Can he tell the Senate how they come back here and say that $1,200 will make a harbor—not improve one, but make a harbor? Can he come back here and show me how where two-thirds of this bill appropriates from $1,000 to $2,000, and it asserts every time that it is for continuing the improvement of a harbor when there is no such harbor as is named in the bill, and then ask Senators here to vote the appropriation?

I know that the State of Virginia is getting its share in the bill. I noticed to-day that Senators were prepared to grin a little when the Secretary read that the State of Virginia was getting this for the Pamunky, and that for the Mattaponi, and so on. But, sir, we want it for the improvement of harbors and of navigable rivers, and we do not want it for any other purpose. The State of Virginia has been incapable so far as I know of sending a man here to ask for an appropriation in the river and harbor bill that is not to improve a harbor. If she has, it has yet to be developed. It may be so at the other end of the Capitol, but so far as I am able to testify, and I can speak for myself, it is not here.

It is the same with this bill from the beginning to the last page of it. All these States are asking for contributions from the Federal Government, contributions not to improve rivers and harbors, but contributions to return men to the House of Representatives or to the Senate. I look through this bill and I do not find a change in it from what we had in the original bill, except in the reduction of 25 per cent. of the appropriations.

The Senator from Minnesota brought it back here as chairman of that committee after all that we had heard about deliberation in the committee-room upon the bill, and yet the whole of this day has been given up till within the last half-hour to amendments that he himself suggested. Where was that committee that brought back this amendment, and then after they had amended their own bill and stricken off 25 per cent. we are still asked to just vote blindly and blindfolded, as the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECK] expressed his willingness to do, for the amendment of the Committee on Commerce to this bill? I want an explanation of that. When I vote blindfolded I shall vote against appropriations; I shall not vote for them unless I do it with my eyes open.

I said in the start that I wanted to bid farewell to this bill; in other words, to say good-bye to it. It is going to pass, I take it. It will go back to the House of Representatives, and it will come here again through a conference committee that will be composed of the same men on either side who made up the bill, men who owe no responsibility, possibly, to the constituency who sent them into the one Chamber or the other; and we shall be asked, as we always are on such occasions, to acquiesce in the report of the conference committee when it comes back here.

No Senator who is opposed to it will be appointed on the conference committee. There will be men on it representing different political views, but no man who is opposed to the bill itself, no man on the other side of this question will be upon it. It will come back here the same bill, the same thing that came back here the second time from the Committee on Commerce appropriating money indiscriminately, and they will say then it is a question of privilege.

I have been reminded that I have gone beyond the five-minute rule. I should like to say a few more words only.

Mr. LOGAN. I want to call up a conference report when the Senator is through.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. Another conference report, not on an appropriation bill. That was the very matter I was discussing, that as soon as a conference report comes in we have nothing to do but to acquiesce and just adopt it. That is what they want with this bill in both ends of the Capitol—to get it out of here, to get it away from the Representatives, to get it away even from "our committee," to get it into the hands of a conference committee, to get it where a supposed President of the United States from Pennsylvania can assert that it is proper on the one side or a second President of the United States from somewhere else can assert that it is proper on the other side, the latter being from Iowa, and then we are asked to acquiesce in the results of the conference, and then we appropriate for rivers, little miserable places, to which it is proposed to give this money to the deprivation of the rights of the people who live on the harbors and on the rivers where alone commerce can be improved.

Mr. President, I know I have gone beyond the five-minute rule; I know that most of the Senators have done it; I know that I have transgressed it half a dozen times; I know that it is due to you, Mr. President, that I should say that you have indulged me more than once, but you have done no more to me than to other Senators.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll on the amendment of Mr. VEST.

Mr. BUTLER (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. CAMERON].

Mr. CAMDEN (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH].

Mr. CHACE (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Georgia [Mr. COLQUITT].

Mr. EDMUNDS (when Mr. MORRILL'S name was called). My colleague [Mr. MORRILL] is absent ill. He is paired with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. SAULSBURY]. If he were present, my colleague would vote "nay."

Mr. SAULSBURY (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL]; but as his colleague says he would vote "nay" if present, I vote "nay."

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I am paired with the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. MANDERSON], who has been called away from the city because of a death in his family. If he were here, I should vote "nay."

Mr. CONGER. My colleague [Mr. PALMER] is paired with the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. VANCE] on this question and on all questions to-day.

The result was announced—yeas 20, nays 30; as follows:

NATIONAL CEMETERY AT KNOXVILLE.

Mr. LOGAN. I desire to call up the conference report in reference to Knoxville Cemetery just received from the House. It will take but a moment. I present the report on the part of the conferees of the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will lay before the Senate a report of the committee of conference just received from the House of Representatives.

The Chief Clerk read the report, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (H. R. 5866) to construct a road to the national cemetery at Knoxville, Tenn., after a full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate No. 1, and agree to the same.

That the Senate recede from its amendment No. 2.

JOHN A. LOGAN,
BENJ. HARRISON,
Managers on the part of the Senate.
C. M. ANDERSON,
L. C. HOUK,
Managers on the part of the House.

The report was concurred in.

REPORT OF A COMMITTEE.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 8596) for the relief of Beaufort Lee and others, reported it without amendment.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. CULLOM (by request) introduced a bill (S. 2859) to incorporate the Great Falls Railway Company; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Railroads.

Mr. GIBSON introduced a bill (S. 2860) to cancel certain reservations of lands, on account of live-oak, in the southwestern land district of the State of Louisiana; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. BROWN. I introduce, by request, a bill to perfect the military record of James T. Hughes, together with the petition of Mrs. Hughes, the mother of the deceased, whose record is to be perfected by the bill.

The bill (S. 2861) to perfect the military record of James T. Hughes was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying petition, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. PLUMB introduced a bill (S. 2862) to provide for the entry of a certain tract of land for town-site purposes; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

LEGISLATIVE, ETC., APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask permission to place before the Senate the report of the conference committee on the legislative appropriation bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Iowa presents a conference report, which will be read.

Mr. ALLISON. The report is a disagreement.

The Chief Clerk read the report, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on certain amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 8974) "making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887, and for other purposes," having met, after full and free conference have been unable to agree.

W. B. ALLISON,
H. L. DAWES,
F. M. COCKRELL,
Managers on the part of the Senate.
W. S. HOLMAN,
GEO. C. CABELL,
J. G. CANNON,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. ALLISON. I move that the Senate still further insist on its amendments.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Iowa moves that the Senate still further insist on its amendments.

Mr. INGALLS. Are these the same amendments on which we had a debate about fifteen minutes ago?

Mr. ALLISON. Yes, sir.

Mr. INGALLS. It has been an extraordinarily rapid determination to reach a point of disagreement again, it seems to me. What is the condition?

Mr. ALLISON. The condition is a disagreement.

Mr. INGALLS. Has there been a full and free conference since that time?

Mr. ALLISON. Very full, and quite free.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Iowa moves that the Senate further insist.

The motion was agreed to.

MRS. SARAH YOUNG.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa, submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 2113) granting a pension to Mrs. Sarah Young, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the word "twelve" insert the word "twenty;" and the House agree to the same.

PHILETUS SAWYER,
JAMES F. WILSON,
W. C. WHITTHORNE,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

EDWIN B. WINANS,
JNO. A. SWOPE,
E. H. CONGER,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let that be explained.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. The Senate passed a bill granting a pension to Mrs. Sarah Young at the rate of $25. The House amended the bill by reducing the rate to $12. The Senate disagreed and asked for a conference which was granted, and the conferees have agreed upon $20 as the rate.

The report was concurred in.

THE RIVER AND HARBOR BILL.

Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 7480) making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The pending question is the amendment of the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. MCMILLAN].

Mr. KENNA. I offer an amendment to come in at the end of the first section.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment of the Senator from West Virginia will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to insert, as a new section, the following:

If, in the judgment of the Secretary of War, the public interests will be subserved by the withholding of the amount appropriated for any improvement provided for in this act for the current year he may do so in his discretion, and shall report such fact, and the reasons therefor, to the next session of Congress.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I move to amend the amendment by striking out the words "Secretary of War" and inserting "President of the United States."

Mr. KENNA. I have no objection to that modification. I inserted "Secretary of War" simply because the early part of the bill directs the expenditures to be under the Secretary of War.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I know, but this question of withholding is a much more important one.

Mr. KENNA. I have no objection to the modification.

Mr. PLUMB. I move to lay the amendment on the table.

Mr. KENNA. I hope the Senator will withdraw that motion until I explain it in a minute.

Mr. PLUMB. I withdraw the motion.

Mr. KENNA. It is the opinion as developed here of, I think, quite a majority of the Senate that under the discretion of the executive department that might be done which can be done under this amendment. I should like to leave it beyond any controversy, and for that reason offer the amendment.

It will be observed that the amendment does not vest the executive department with discretion to suspend these appropriations or the prosecution of any particular work indefinitely. It does allow it for the current year; but even if the suspension is made for the current year, the fact of the suspension or withholding and the reasons therefor are to be reported to the next session of Congress in December.

That is all I meant by offering the amendment, and I hope it will be the pleasure of the Senate and the friends of the bill to adopt it.

Mr. PLUMB. I move that it lie on the table.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Kansas moves that the amendment lie on the table.

Mr. BECK. Let it be read again. We heard it very indistinctly here.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be read again.

The Chief Clerk read the amendment.

Mr. BECK. That means that the President is to be substituted for the Congress of the United States, to do as he likes.

Mr. CHACE. I wish to offer an amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Kansas moves that the amendment lie on the table; that is not debatable.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. LOGAN. I desire to call the attention of the Senate, and especially of the chairman of the committee, to page 48, from line 1152 to line 1158, the appropriation for dredging and continuing the work on the Calumet River. There were $40,000 appropriated, and $15,000 of the $40,000 was to be expended between the Forks, one-half mile east of Hammond, Ind., and $7,500 of which was to be in dredging the river between the Forks and the State line of Illinois and Indiana, and $7,500 on the river at Hammond, Ind. On motion of the Senator from Indiana [Mr. HARRISON] the $15,000 was divided, making $7,500 to be applied in dredging opposite Hammond and the balance on the opposite side of the river between the Forks, &c. The reduction of 25 per cent. has been taken from the $40,000, leaving it $30,000 without any change in the $7,500 for the dredging at either of these places. I should like to know what the object of that is.

Mr. MCMILLAN. The Senator from Indiana called my attention to the fact that perhaps there might be some injustice done to the Senator from Illinois or some misunderstanding between himself and the Senator from Illinois. He did not ask for a reduction in these items, and on conference with the Senator from Indiana I suggested to him that the change should be made, and he called the attention of the Senator from Illinois who now has the floor to the fact and told him that he would ask me to make the change. The attention of the Senator from Illinois was called to it by the Senator from Indiana after a conference between myself and the Senator from Indiana in which I suggested that I would make that change, and I had risen to make it when the Senator from Illinois insisted upon taking the floor.

Mr. LOGAN. I know of no conference between you and the Senator from Indiana and never heard of it. The Senator from Indiana called my attention to the fact.

Mr. HARRISON. I called the attention both of the Senator from Minnesota and the Senator from Illinois, because this had been a matter of discussion and somewhat of agreement, and I felt that it was unfair, my attention having been called to it by the Senator from Illinois, that I should let it stand in that way. The Senator from Minnesota agreed to make the modification.

Mr. LOGAN. I knew nothing about that fact. We talked with the Senator from Indiana about it, and I once made a memorandum for the purpose of making the suggestion to the Senate. I knew nothing about the conference between the two Senators.

Mr. MCMILLAN. In line 1152 let "$15,000" be made "$11,250."

Mr. LOGAN. Why make it $11,250?

Mr. MCMILLAN. That is a reduction of 25 per cent.

Mr. LOGAN. But I want to make it $10,000 and add $5,000 to the $30,000 for continuing the improvement of Calumet River, so as to have $5,000 for dredging at each place.

Mr. MCMILLAN. In line 1154 change the "$7,500" to "$5,625," and in line 1157 change "$7,500" to "$5,625."

Mr. EDMUNDS. That puts it on the pro rata.

Mr. LOGAN. How is that?

Mr. MCMILLAN. It makes it conform to the proportion.

Mr. LOGAN. I know it reduces it that percentage, but it makes the appropriation for the dredging there larger than the appropriation for the whole river. That leaves $11,500 to be used in two certain places when there will be only $19,000 left for the whole river.

Mr. HARRISON. It is all for the whole river.

Mr. LOGAN. I know it is all for the whole river, but this is confined now on the suggestion of the Senator from Indiana to these two spots. The whole appropriation is only $30,000, and I suggest, if $20,000 is sufficient for the remainder of the work, that $10,000 be used for dredging. As the chairman proposes it, $11,500 would be used at these two places, leaving less than $19,000 for the rest of the river. I do not think that is fair. I suggest that the appropriation be $5,000 at each of the two places, and that the $10,000 be taken from the $30,000.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to amend the amendment so as to make it read:

Improving Calumet River, Illinois: Continuing improvement, $30,000; of which $11,250 are to be used between the Forks and one-half mile east of Hammond, Ind.; $5,625 of which are to be used in dredging the river between the Forks and the State line of Illinois and Indiana; and $5,625 on the river at Hammond, Ind.

Mr. LOGAN. I move to amend that by making it $5,000 to be used opposite Hammond and $5,000 at the other spot.

Mr. HARRISON. I hope the Senator from Illinois will not insist upon that. This is the exact state of the case: The Senate increased the amount of the total appropriation $5,000 and it increased the amount to be used between certain points from $10,000 to $15,000. Now the understanding upon which this amendment was reported was a uniform reduction of 25 per cent. on the aggregate and on each item to which it applied. That is exactly what I suggested to the Senator from Illinois, exactly what the Senator from Minnesota has proposed. It leaves it just as the Senate committee reported it, reducing the aggregate one-fourth to each item, as the Senate committee apportioned it. It is the same principle precisely that has been applied to every item in this bill from first to last.

Mr. LOGAN. I will not contend a moment about it, for it is no use. I know something about this work myself, though I find other people who are on the committee know more about it than I do although I live there.

The 25 per cent. reduction is on the $40,000 as it stood before and not on the $15,000. Forty thousand dollars was the aggregate appropriation and the reduction has been made on that. If the reduction is made on both the $40,000 and the $15,000 it is more than 25 per cent. in the aggregate. I think any person could make that calculation very rapidly. However, I shall not contend about it. Let the amendment be adopted.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. VEST. On page 58, line 1401, I move to strike out "one million six hundred and eighty-seven thousand five hundred" and insert "two million two hundred and fifty thousand."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 58, line 1401, it is proposed to strike out "one million six hundred and eighty-seven thousand five hundred" and insert "two million two hundred and fifty thousand;" so as to read:

Improving Mississippi River from head of the passes to the mouth of the Ohio River: Continuing improvement, $2,250,000; which sum shall be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War, in accordance with the plans, specifications, and recommendations of the Mississippi River Commission.

Mr. VEST. This is the last time I shall trouble the Senate on this bill. The Mississippi River Commission asked for continuing the improvement of the Mississippi River from Cairo, Ill., to the head of the passes, including the improvement of the Red River at and below the head of the Atchafalaya, $7,000,000. For local improvements at Columbus, Ky., Hickman, Ky., Memphis, Tenn., Greenville, Miss., Vicksburg, Miss., Natchez, Miss., New Orleans, La., in addition to the foregoing, $2,014,600; making, $9,014,600.

Mr. EDMUNDS. There is so much noise in the Chamber that I can not hear the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. VEST. It is no fault of mine. I am speaking as loud as I can.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Senators will please cease conversation and resume their seats.

Mr. VEST. If the Senator from Vermont desires I will again read what the Mississippi River Commission asks for the improvement of the Mississippi River from Cairo to the head of the passes:

For continuing the improvement	$7,000,000
For improvements in addition to the foregoing at Columbus, Hickman, Memphis, Greenville, Vicksburg, Natchez, and New Orleans	2,014,600
Making the estimate in the aggregate for the general improvement and the local improvement	9,014,600

The bill as it stands gives to the same reach of the river from Cairo to head of the passes $1,687,500. I propose to put back in the bill the amount the Committee on Commerce of the Senate reported, and which was the amount put in by the House of Representatives, $2,250,000; and on that I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. MCMILLAN. I move to lay this amendment on the table.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Minnesota moves to lay on the table the amendment of the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. VEST. I call for the yeas and nays on that motion.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CHACE (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Georgia [Mr. COLQUITT]. My colleague [Mr. ALDRICH] is paired with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. CAMDEN].

Mr. MCMILLAN (when Mr. SABIN'S name was called). My colleague [Mr. SABIN] is paired with the Senator from Indiana [Mr. VOORHEES]. If present, my colleague would vote "yea."

Mr. SPOONER (when Mr. SAWYER'S name was called). My colleague [Mr. SAWYER] is paired with the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. WHITTHORNE].

Mr. VOORHEES (when his name was called). I believe my pair has been announced with the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SABIN]. If he were here, I should vote "nay."

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I should vote "nay" if I were not paired with the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. MANDERSON].

Mr. BUTLER. I was requested by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB] to announce his pair with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. CAMERON].

Mr. BROWN. My colleague [Mr. COLQUITT] is paired with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. CHACE].

At this point Mr. PLUMB appeared and voted "yea."

Mr. BUTLER. I shall have to withdraw my vote, and announce my pair with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. CAMERON]. I withdraw my vote.

The result was announced—yeas 29, nays 19; as follows:

So the motion to lay the amendment to the amendment on the table was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question recurs on the adoption of the amendment proposed by the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. MCMILLAN], from the Committee on Commerce, on which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BLACKBURN (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. MANDERSON]. Were he present, he would vote "yea" and I should vote "nay."

Mr. BUTLER (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. CAMERON]. If he were present, he would vote "yea" and I should vote "nay."

Mr. SAULSBURY (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL]; but I am informed by his colleague that he would vote "yea." I shall therefore vote "yea."

Mr. SPOONER (when Mr. SAWYER'S name was called). My colleague [Mr. SAWYER] is paired with the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. WHITTHORNE]. If my colleague were present, he would vote "yea."

Mr. VOORHEES (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SABIN], who is absent on account of sickness.

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. BROWN (after having voted in the affirmative). I am paired now with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL], and therefore withdraw my vote. If the Senator from Vermont were here, I should vote "nay" and, as I understand, he would vote "yea."

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. I refrain from voting simply because yesterday I offered an amendment to this amendment striking out all after the enacting clause and inserting——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is not in order to interrupt the call of the roll.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. On account of the fact——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The roll-call can not be interrupted.

The result was announced—yeas 31, nays 18; as follows:

YEAS—31.

Allison,	Frye,	Jones of Nevada,	Saulsbury,
Beck,	Gorman,	Kenna,	Sherman,

Butler,	Logan,	Pike,	Voorhees,
Camden,	McPherson,	Plumb,	Whitthorne.
Cameron,	Manderson,	Riddleberger,

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. COCKRELL. The Committee on Appropriations has leave to sit during the sessions of the Senate, and I have been engaged in committee. When the vote was taken on the motion of the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. MCMILLAN] to lay on the table the amendment of my colleague [Mr. VEST], if I had been present I should have voted "nay" upon that motion, as I was in favor of the amendment.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time.

Mr. PLATT. On the passage of the bill let us have the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BLACKBURN (when his name was called). I am paired with the absent Senator from Nebraska [Mr. MANDERSON]; but assured as I am that he would vote for this bill were he present, I shall exercise my right, and vote "yea."

Mr. BUTLER (when Mr. CAMERON'S name was called). The Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. CAMERON] is paired with the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB]. The Senator from Pennsylvania, if present, would vote "yea" and the Senator from Kansas would vote "nay."

Mr. CHACE (when his name was called). If I were not paired with the Senator from Georgia [Mr. COLQUITT], I should vote "yea" on this bill. My colleague [Mr. ALDRICH] would also vote "yea" if he were not paired with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. CAMDEN].

Mr. CONGER (when Mr. PALMER'S name was called). I announce again that my colleague [Mr. PALMER] is absent on account of sickness. He is paired with the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. VANCE]. My colleague, if present, would vote "yea."

Mr. SAULSBURY (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL], but I understand he would vote "nay" if he were here. I transfer my pair to the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. JONES], who would vote "yea," and I vote "nay."

Mr. SPOONER (when his name was called). My colleague [Mr. SAWYER] is unavoidably absent. He would vote "yea" if he were present and not paired with the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. WHITTHORNE].

Mr. RANSOM (when the name of Mr. VANCE was called). My colleague [Mr. VANCE] is generally paired with the Senator from Michigan [Mr. PALMER], but if he were here my colleague would vote "yea."

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. CAMDEN. I am paired with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH], but learning from his colleague that if he were present he would vote "yea," I therefore vote "yea."

Mr. BROWN. My colleague [Mr. COLQUITT] is paired on this question with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. CHACE]. As I understand their positions, if my colleague were present he would vote "nay" and the Senator from Rhode Island would vote "yea."

Mr. KENNA. With the concurrence of the Senator from Delaware [Mr. SAULSBURY], I will transfer the pair between the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SABIN] and myself, so as to allow the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. JONES] to vote.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. I vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 42, nays 14; as follows:

YEAS—42.

So the bill was passed.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President——

Mr. MCMILLAN. I ask the Senator from Maine to yield to me to move that the Senate insist on its amendment to this bill and ask for a conference.

Mr. EDMUNDS. No; the House will probably agree to it.

Mr. HALE. That is part of the business that we have just been transacting. If the Senator chooses to make that motion now I shall not object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Minnesota moves that the Senate insist on its amendment to the river and harbor bill and ask for a conference.

The motion was agreed to.

LIGHT-HOUSE SUPPLY STEAMER.

Mr. MCMILLAN. I ask the Senator from Maine to yield to me to submit a conference report.

Mr. HALE. Certainly.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will receive it.

The Chief Clerk read the report, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 7627) "providing for the construction of a light-house supply steamer for the Atlantic and Gulf coasts," having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 2, and agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 1, and agree to the same with amendments as follows: In section 2 strike out all of line 3 and the first three words in line 4; after the words "New York," in line 5, insert "the cost of which shall not exceed the sum of $40,000;" in line 7, after the word "of," strike out "forty" and insert "three;" and at the end of the section add "and also to place and maintain at or near the southeast end of Hog Island Shoal, Naragansett Bay, Rhode Island, the light-ship recently withdrawn from Eel Grass Shoal;" so that the section will read:

"That the Light-House Board is authorized and required to establish and maintain light-ships at the following places: one at or near the south end of Ram Island Reef, Fisher's Island Sound, Long Island, New York, the cost of which shall not exceed the sum of $40,000; one, the cost of which shall not exceed the sum of $3,000, to be stationed off Grosse's Point, Lake Saint Clair, Michigan; and also to place and maintain at or near the southeast end of Hog Island Shoal, Naragansett Bay, Rhode Island, the light-ship recently withdrawn from Eel Grass Shoal."

And the Senate agree to the same.

S. J. R. MCMILLAN,
J. N. DOLPH,
A. P. GORMAN,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

MARTIN L. CLADY,
T. E. TARSNEY,
W. W. MORROW,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like that to be explained. It is impossible from hearing the report to understand what the points of difference were and what the effect of the agreement is.

Mr. MCMILLAN. The Senate passed several separate bills to provide for light-ships, and they amended a House bill providing for one by inserting additional ones which had been passed by the Senate in these separate bills. The House conferees agree to the Senate bills incorporated as an amendment on this bill reducing the amount of one of the appropriations where the Light-House Board thought it was not necessary that it should be more than $3,000, reducing it from an amount not exceeding $40,000, and the Light-House Board say that the $3,000 will be sufficient. The House assented to all of the propositions of the Senate otherwise.

The report was concurred in.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills and joint resolution from the House of Representatives were severally read twice by their titles and referred to the Committee on Education and Labor:

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HALE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the naval appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 8975) making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Maine wish the bill read now?

Mr. HALE. I propose to go on with the bill.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let us finish it to-night.

Mr. HALE. I ask that the formal reading be dispensed with and that the bill be considered with the committee amendments and the amendments acted on as they are reached in the reading.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection that course will be pursued and the amendments of the Committee on Appropriations will be acted on as they are reached in the reading of the bill.

The Secretary proceeded to read the bill.

The first amendment of the Committee of Appropriations was, under the head of "Pay of the Navy," in line 18, after the words "in all," to strike out—

Six million three hundred and twelve thousand seven hundred and seven dollars and twenty-six cents; besides which the sum of $576,380 of the surplus on hand to the credit of "Pay of the Navy" is hereby reappropriated and made available—

And in lieu thereof to insert:

Six million eight hundred and eighty-nine thousand and eighty-seven dollars and twenty-six cents—

So as to make the clause read:

Mr. HALE. That should be $7,129,087.26. I move to so amend the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under the head of "Pay, Miscellaneous," in line 34, after the word "cadets," to strike out "and for the payment of any such officers as may be in service, either upon the active or retired list, during the year ending June 30, 1887, in excess of the numbers of each class provided for in this act, and for any increase of pay arising from different duty, as the needs of the service may require;" and in line 57, after the word "thereof," to strike out "two hundred and twenty-five thousand" and insert "one hundred and ninety-one thousand one hundred;" so as to read:

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BECK. I desire to ask the Senator from Maine if some complaint was not made about the change in lines 57 and 58?

Mr. HALE. It may be that the amount is rather small.

Mr. BECK. It can perhaps be arranged afterward.

Mr. HALE. It can be arranged.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under the head of "Bureau of Navigation," in line 101, to reduce the appropriation for "foreign and local pilotage and towage of ships of war; services and materials in correcting compasses on board ships, and for adjusting and testing compasses on shore; nautical and astronomical instruments, nautical books, maps, charts, and sailing directions, and repairs of nautical instruments for ships of war; books for libraries of ships of war; naval signals and apparatus," &c., from $87,500 to $83,500.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, July 16, 1886.

The House met at 11 o'clock a. m. Prayer by Rev. Dr. BULLOCK, of Washington, D. C.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

CIVIL-SERVICE APPOINTMENTS, DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a letter from the secretary of the Civil Service Commission, in response to a resolution of the House calling for information as to the authority for appointments to positions in the civil service from the District of Columbia in excess of its proportion, and transmitting a list of employés appointed from the District of Columbia under the civil-service rules.

Mr. TAULBEE. I ask unanimous consent that the report be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Reform in the Civil Service.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

The report is as follows:

UNITED STATES CIVIL SERVICE COMMISSION,
Washington, D. C., July 14, 1886.

SIR: The United States Civil Service Commission has the honor to have certified to it the following resolution of the House of Representatives:

"Resolved, That the United States Civil Service Commission be, and is hereby, directed to inform this House by what authority twenty-three appointments to positions within the classified public service were made from the District of Columbia, when the proportion due to said District of Columbia was less than three for the year ending January 16, 1886."

To this resolution I am directed by the commission to reply that if the answer were confined to the resolution alone it would be stated that only two appointments, and not twenty-three, had been made from the District of Columbia upon certifications of the commission during the year ending January 16, 1886. But it is presumed by the commission that exact information upon the subject of the resolution was desired by the House of Representatives, and therefore there is herewith transmitted a full statement of all certifications for appointment from the District of Columbia made by the commission from the 16th day of July, 1883, when the civil-service act took effect, to the 16th day of January, 1886.

An examination of the tables furnished will show that these certifications were regularly made in pursuance of requisitions from the appointing power for persons examined for services of a special and technical character, and sometimes needed for temporary work only. The eligibles for these certifications were obtained by special examinations for places in the departmental service at Washington, as provided for in the rules promulgated by the President, when technical and peculiar qualifications were needed.

The positions to be filled were specially stated in every requisition, and called for persons eligible and graded highest, whether from the District of Columbia or otherwise; and in all cases those graded highest were certified by the commission for appointment. The necessary apportionment upon these special matters was placed with the appointing power, and, as directed by the civil-service act, the apportionment was made "as nearly as the conditions of good administration would warrant."

The highest special and technical qualifications were not obtainable through apportionment alone, and therefore the highest graded were certified and selected without regard to locality, because "good administration" required it.

This undoubtedly was the view taken by the commission as organized when all but one of these certifications and appointments were made.

Very respectfully,

RO. D. GRAHAM, Secretary.

HON. JOHN G. CARLISLE,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.

Apportionment of appointments to the Departments at Washington from the District of Columbia under the civil-service rules.

1. The civil-service act requires an apportionment of appointments to the Departments at Washington (which shall be made after its passage) to be made on the basis of population in the States, Territories, and the District of Columbia, respectively.

2. The whole number of appointments apportioned to the District of Columbia from July 16, 1883, to the 16th of January, 1886, is in fact twenty-six, but the commission had no control over the apportionments of four of them, which were made for the Pension Office. The apportionment of these four places was made under special rules Nos. 3 and 4.

Special rule No. 3 required a separate apportionment to be made of the one hundred and fifty places in the Pension Office, provided for by the act of July 7, 1884, except so far as they should be filled by promotions. After the promotions had been made only eighty-nine places were left to be apportioned. The apportionment of the eighty-nine appointments was made by the appointing power, the commission having no participation in the matter. Two of the eighty-nine places were filled from the District of Columbia, as follows: Marion Dorian, appointed July 14, 1884; Jared C. Nichols, appointed July 14, 1884.

Special rule No. 4 required a separate apportionment to be made of the one hundred and fifty places in the Pension Office provided for by the act of March 3, 1885, except so far as they should be filled by promotions or transfers. All these places, except sixty-eight, were filled by transfers and promotions. The apportionment under that special rule of the sixty-eight appointments was made by the appointing power, the commission having no participation in the matter. Two of the sixty-eight places were filled from the District of Columbia, as follows: Louis C. Walsh, appointed August 1, 1885; Joseph S. Vowles, appointed August 13, 1885.

[Extracts from the reports of the commission.]

The small excess secured by the District of Columbia was inevitable in the first stage of a new system mainly by reason of the need of securing well-trained experts in certain offices. (Third annual report, page 48.)

It is natural that at the seat of Government a large excess of applicants for the public service shall be found. Under the old system the District of Columbia supplied numbers of clerks greatly disproportioned to its population. The requirement by Congress that new appointments shall be apportioned to the States and Territories on a basis of population has diminished the chances of residents of Washington to secure Government places in the same ratio that it has increased the chances of those who reside elsewhere. (First annual report, page 24.)

Herewith is furnished a list of all those appointed from the District of Columbia to the classified departmental service, under the rules, from July 16, 1883, to January 16, 1886.

SENATE BILL REFERRED.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the bill (S. 1839) for the relief of Richard C. Ridgway and others; which was read a first and second time.

Mr. SPRINGER. This bill, or rather a House bill in precisely the same language, has been reported favorably by the Committee on Claims of this Congress, and was also reported favorably by the Committee on Ways and Means on three different occasions. I believe the present Speaker of the House reported it favorably at one time. As the Committee on Claims have already reported a similar bill favorably and the Senate bill is in identical language with it, I see no reason why it should not be passed at once, and therefore I ask unanimous consent to put it upon its passage.

Mr. TAULBEE. Reserving the right to object, I ask that the bill be read.

The bill was read at length.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. STONE, of Kentucky. I object.

Mr. KELLEY. I think if the gentleman will listen an instant he will withdraw his objection. This bill has been four times unanimously recommended, three times by the Committee on Ways and Means of the House, once by the present Speaker of the House, once by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HERBERT], and once by myself under instructions of the Committee on Ways and Means, and also by the Committee on Claims, from which it is now before the House under the new rule. It has also been recommended unanimously by the Committee on Claims of the Senate, and the gentleman from Illinois asks consent to substitute the Senate bill for the four times recommended bill of the House, which is in the same language. It has had five indorsements——

Mr. TAULBEE. Will the gentleman allow a question?

Mr. KELLEY. Certainly.

Mr. TAULBEE. Why is it that this is not a general law; or does this bill apply to all persons thus affected?

Mr. KELLEY. It applies to all persons thus affected and closes up that list of claims.

Mr. TAULBEE. I understand from the gentleman from Illinois that this relief has been recommended by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue.

Mr. KELLEY. Yes, sir; in each of the successive bills during the incumbency of the several Commissioners of Internal Revenue.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. This is not a general law?

Mr. KELLEY. It is, in effect, because it covers every case that can arise.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Every case that has arisen.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky objects.

Mr. KELLEY. Does the gentleman persist in his objection?

Mr. STONE, of Kentucky. I do not like to be considered as an obstructionist, and I do not intend to appear contrary; but I am opposed to giving precedence to any special character of claims. I belong to a committee that has been working since the session began with all the earnestness and vigor that was in it. We have bills of vast and vital importance on the Calendars, which we are unable by any sort of procedure to get before the House; and I do not intend, where my objection will prevent it, from this time forward, because we have been invariably and continually cut off from the consideration of claims—I do not intend as far as I am concerned that one class of claims shall have any precedence given to it over another. Let us consider all of them in their proper order.

Mr. KELLEY. But this is to remove an obstacle, not to create one. This is to substitute the Senate bill, which has been recommended and is in the same terms as the House bill. Its passage will remove an obstruction from the Calendar.

Mr. STONE, of Kentucky. Just so we have numbers of important bills upon the Calendar.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky objects.

The bill was referred to the Committee on Claims.

AMENDMENT OF A TITLE.

The SPEAKER. At the session of the House on yesterday evening the House passed a joint resolution (S. R. 40) entitled "A joint resolution providing for the payment of per diem laborers in Government employ on the 30th day of May of each year as on other days." The joint resolution was so amended as to strike out the "30th of May" and insert the words "Memorial or Decoration Day, and on the 4th of July." By an omission the title was not amended to conform to the amendments in the body of the resolution, and, if there be no objection, before the bill is transmitted to the Senate the Clerk will be directed to amend the title to correspond.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. O'DONNELL, indefinitely, on account of sickness.

To Mr. OUTHWAITE, for three days, on account of important business.

To Mr. HEWITT, until Monday next, on account of sickness.

To Mr. SYMES, for one week, on account of ill health.

To Mr. STEELE, indefinitely, on account of important business.

To Mr. NEGLEY, for one day, to attend to important business.

To Mr. ROBERTSON, of Kentucky, until Monday, on account of important business.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

On motion of Mr. COMPTON, by unanimous consent, leave was given to withdraw from the files of the House, without leaving copies, the papers in the case of Dennis W. Mullen.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. DUNN. I ask unanimous consent that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union be discharged from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 9376) for a public building at Helena, Ark.

Mr. ZACH. TAYLOR. Let the bill be read.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read, subject to objection.

The bill was read.

Mr. ZACH. TAYLOR. I object to the present consideration of the bill.

Mr. DAVIS. I ask unanimous consent to discharge the Committee of the Whole——

Mr. McMILLIN. Let us have the regular order.

Mr. MATSON. I rise to a privileged question.

The SPEAKER. There is a privileged question before the House. The Chair understands the gentleman from Kentucky to withdraw his objection to the consideration of the Senate bill (S. 1839) for the relief of Richard C. Ridgeway and others.

Mr. STONE, of Kentucky. On the representation of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLEY], and at his personal request, I withdraw my objection.

Mr. HOLMAN. I think the bill should go to the proper committee.

Mr. KELLEY. It has been before the House committee and has been reported favorably, as I have stated.

Mr. HOLMAN. I did not understand it had been considered by a committee of the House this session. If that is the fact I ask that the report may be read.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana withdraws his objection and asks for the reading of the report.

Mr. McMILLIN. I demand the regular order. I do so because my demand for the regular order has cut off other gentlemen, and I can not discriminate.

LEGISLATIVE APPROPRIATION BILL.

The SPEAKER. The House resumes the consideration of the conference report on the bill (H. R. 8974) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887, and for other purposes. Is the reading of the remainder of this conference report required? It has been printed in full in the RECORD.

Mr. TAULBEE. My recollection is the agreement was the report was to be printed in the RECORD and the further reading would be dispensed with.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] remarked that if it was printed in the RECORD he supposed the further reading would not be required; but that was not submitted to the House. The Chair is informed the original manuscript was sent to the Printing Office and has not yet been returned.

Mr. HOLMAN. I understood the further reading would not be required.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the report of the conference committee.

Mr. HOLMAN. I will state to the House that with the exception of five, on which there is no agreement, all the amendments of the Senate have been disposed of, the House as usual having made the larger number of concessions.

Mr. REED, of Maine. Why has the House made the larger number of concessions? Is it wrong oftener than the Senate?

Mr. HOLMAN. The House has made the larger number of concessions, as is ordinarily the case, on this principle: That portion of the bill which the Senate inserts is the Senate part of it. It is that body's revision of the action of the House; and it will ordinarily occur that of the amendments made a larger number should be concurred in than refused by the House. That must be almost inevitable in this body of amendments.

The amendments on which there was no agreement to which I now wish to call the attention of the House are, in the first place, amendments numbered 2 and 17, appropriating $23,232 for clerks of Senators. Those two amendments go together and constitute the amendment of the Senate appropriating $23,232 for clerks for the Senators who are not chairmen of committees. Disagreement is reported on those amendments.

Senate amendments numbered 39, 40, and 41 are amendments providing for one clerk at $1,600 and two clerks at $900 each for the Civil Service Commission. The conferees of the two bodies have not been able to agree upon that.

Amendment numbered 88 is the amendment of the Senate increasing the amount of the appropriations for the internal-revenue service. The House Committee on Appropriations appropriated the sum of $2,050,000 as the proper amount. The Committee of the Whole, its action being afterward sanctioned by the House, reduced that to $1,900,000. The Senate has restored the original figures, $2,050,000. Upon that the two Houses are not able to agree, the House conferees believing that inasmuch as the $2,050,000 is about $150,000 more than was expended in the last fiscal year, there is no necessity of appropriating so large a sum.

Mr. CABELL. The excess is $201,000.

Mr. HOLMAN. My friend from Virginia states it would be $201,000 of an excess above the expenditure of last year.

The next disagreement is on amendments 89 and 90, in which the Senate proposes an increase of $500 in the salary of the office of the assistant treasurer at Baltimore. The House fixed that salary at $4,000. The Senate proposes to increase it to $4,500, and the conferees have not been able to agree. As to that item, I wish to state, however, to the House that there is an unpleasant discrimination in the salaries of these assistant treasurers. The salary of the assistant treasurer at Cincinnati was put by the House at $4,500, and that was concurred in by the Senate. Cincinnati is the least important of all the subtreasuries, the transactions there amounting to but a little over $40,000,000 per annum, while Baltimore does a business running up above $53,000,000. And while the House conferees did not feel justified in receding from the disagreement on that item, I believe myself that if the Cincinnati salary remains, as it must remain, at $4,500, it would be an invidious discrimination against Baltimore to fix the salary of the assistant treasurer there at $4,000.

Mr. BLAND. What was done in the matter of the salary of the treasurer at Saint Louis, which is a larger subtreasury than that at Baltimore?

Mr. HOLMAN. The Senate amendment was concurred in.

Mr. BLANCHARD. What was done as to the salary of the treasurer at New Orleans?

Mr. HOLMAN. It was not changed.

Mr. BLANCHARD. That salary is left at $4,000, and the subtreasury at New Orleans does $15,000,000 more business per annum than the one at Cincinnati.

Mr. HOLMAN. That is true. The action of the House unhappily created an unjust discrimination between the salaries at these different subtreasuries; but most of them can not be corrected now, and the only question before the House is whether the salary of the assistant treasurer at Baltimore shall be made as high as that of the assistant treasurer at Cincinnati, Baltimore being the more important office of the two.

Mr. FINDLAY. Will the gentleman tell us the reason why the salary of the assistant treasurer at Baltimore was lowered from $4,500 to $4,000?

Mr. HOLMAN. That was done by the House. The House put it at $4,000 and the Senate raised it to $4,500.

Mr. FINDLAY. Why did not the House conferees agree to that change?

Mr. HOLMAN. I have already stated that that question is now submitted for the action of the House, and I have expressed my own opinion that there is an unjust discrimination made against Baltimore. The last amendments, Nos. 179 and 180, are the items inserted by the Senate for the collection of statistics in relation to marriage and divorce, $10,000. The conferees were not able to agree as to those items. If any gentleman desires to make a motion in relation to the item providing for the salary of the assistant treasurer at Baltimore I will now yield for that purpose.

The SPEAKER. That motion can not be made at this time. As soon as the conference report is agreed to or disagreed to, such a motion will be in order.

Mr. HOLMAN. Then I move that the conference report be agreed to, and on that I call the previous question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] demands the previous question upon the adoption of the conference report.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Mr. Speaker, I suggest to the gentleman from Indiana that we take up in their order these amendments on which the two Houses disagree.

The SPEAKER. That can not be done while the conference report is pending. As soon as that is disposed of, then it will be in order for any gentleman to make a motion that the House recede from its disagreement to any particular amendment.

Mr. RANDALL. The House had better first adopt the report and then deal with these other matters.

The SPEAKER. That is the first thing to be done.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Will the adoption of the report interfere with action on the separate amendments?

The SPEAKER. Not at all. It will leave them undisposed of. The House may recede from its disagreement to any of those amendments and ask for a further conference.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call the attention of the gentleman in charge of this bill to what I think is an omission in this report of the conference committee and in the explanatory statement accompanying it. I call his attention to amendments 200 to 209, inclusive, on page 98 of the bill. So far as I can discover they do not appear in this report or in the accompanying statement, and the report makes no mention of what was done with them in conference.

Mr. HOLMAN. They were concurred in by the House, and therefore they did not go into the conference. Mr. Speaker, I call the previous question on the adoption of the report.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question now is on agreeing to the report of the committee of conference.

Mr. PAYSON. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. PAYSON. If this report of the conference committee shall be agreed to, will that preclude a vote upon the separate amendments at a later stage of the proceedings?

The SPEAKER. It will conclude everything which the report settles; but as to those matters about which there is a disagreement they will not be concluded at all.

The conference report was agreed to.

Mr. HOLMAN moved to reconsider the vote by which the report was agreed to; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table. The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Speaker, I wish now to submit a motion, in general terms, that the House further insist upon its disagreement to the other Senate amendments.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I object. Let them be taken up in their order.

The SPEAKER. They can not be taken up unless some motion is made about them.

Mr. HOLMAN. I move that the House insist upon its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate not included in the conference report and ask for a further conference, but I will withhold that motion if any gentleman desires to submit a motion in relation to any particular amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana moves that the House insist on its disagreement as to the remaining amendments and request a further conference. Pending that, it is in order for any gentleman who desires to do so to move that the House recede from its disagreement to any particular amendment.

Mr. FINDLAY. I move that the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment with reference to the salary of the subtreasurer at Baltimore, and agree to the sum named by the Senate, $4,500. The amendments covering this matter are numbered 89 and 90. I do not propose to say anything on the question. I understand the gentleman in charge of the bill says that the original discrimination was an invidious one, and he is not prepared to stand by it.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the amendments as to which the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. FINDLAY] moves that the House recede from its disagreement and agree to the same.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment 89: In line 25, page 34, after "thousand" where it first occurs, insert "five hundred;" so as to make the salary of the assistant treasurer at Baltimore $4,500.

Amendment 90: In line 3, page 35, strike out "one" and insert "six;" so as to make the aggregate appropriation of the paragraph $21,600.

Mr. FINDLAY. I move the previous question on my motion.

The previous question was ordered.

The motion of Mr. FINDLAY that the House recede from its disagreement to Senate amendments numbered 89 and 90 and agree to the same was adopted, there being ayes 115, noes 3.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I move that the House recede from the disagreement to Senate amendment No. 88.

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope the House will not do that.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I wish to make a statement.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will first report the amendment so that the House may know what is pending.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment 88: On page 34, in lines 21 and 22, strike out "one million nine hundred" and insert "two million and fifty," so as to appropriate $2,050,000 for salaries and expenses of agents and surveyors, for fees and expenses of gaugers, for salaries of storekeepers and for miscellaneous expenses.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois moves that the House recede from its disagreement to this amendment and agree to the same.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Mr. Speaker, I am impelled to make this motion by a well-grounded belief that the amount which the House conferees insist upon is less than will probably be needed for a proper administration of the internal-revenue laws and for the protection of the Government from frauds in connection with the distillation of spirits and the manufacture of tobacco. The amount which the Senate insists upon is the sum which was originally recommended by the Committee on Appropriations and the sum which was appropriated for the last year. This amount, I am informed, may possibly be needed in the administration of the law for the coming year.

I have in my hand a communication addressed by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue to Senator ALLISON, chairman of the subcommittee on appropriations in the Senate, and, I believe, chairman of the committee. In this communication it is insisted that the amount contended for by the House conferees is $63,000 less than was necessarily expended for this service in 1885. By strict economy, owing to the condition of business in the country, the Internal Revenue Bureau was enabled to expend a far less sum last year; but, as stated in this communication, the business of distillation of spirits and the manufacture of tobacco is fluctuating, and if the business should increase, as it now apparently will, the Commissioner of Internal Revenue insists the service will be crippled, and he will have at his command an insufficient sum to protect the revenue from frauds.

Mr. HISCOCK. Will the gentleman state to what branch of the service this money is to be devoted?

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I was about to state that. This appropriation is to cover salaries and expenses of agents and surveyors, fees and expenses of gaugers, salaries of storekeepers, &c.

Mr. HISCOCK. Does this amendment contemplate any increase of force?

Mr. TOWNSHEND. It does not contemplate any increase, but simply the maintenance of the present force. But it is thought desirable that there should be a sufficient sum at the command of the bureau to allow an increase of force if the needs of the service should demand it.

Mr. HISCOCK. What I wish to know is whether the increase of this appropriation contemplates action on the part of the bureau looking to increasing the force.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Not at all, unless the necessity arises.

Mr. HISCOCK. That is precisely the point on which I am asking information.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. As I understand, it does not contemplate any increase of force at present.

Mr. RANDALL. Then what is the necessity of increasing the appropriation?

Mr. CANNON. Allow me a moment. As I understand, this amendment does not propose to fix by law any increase of force, but is designed to allow an increase of gaugers and storekeepers if the necessities of the service should demand it.

Mr. HISCOCK. An increase over what year?

Mr. CANNON. As I understand, this amendment embraces the appropriation from which the gaugers and storekeepers are paid; and of course the amount to be paid to these officers will depend upon whether the amount of distillation shall increase or diminish. If the amount of distillation should increase, more gaugers and storekeepers will be needed.

Mr. HISCOCK. But what I want to get at is this: Does this increase the force over the last fiscal year or the previous year?

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Not at all.

Mr. HISCOCK. And also whether it contemplates an increased business over the previous years?

Mr. BRADY. This would give the Commissioner of Internal Revenue discretion to appoint extra gaugers, storekeepers, &c.

Mr. HISCOCK. But what I want to get at is, if you give this amount, can he increase these appointments beyond the service of the last year or the preceding year?

Mr. BRADY. The bill as it left the House increased the amount by $150,000 over the amount expended last year.

Mr. HISCOCK. That is, then, he will have $150,000 more to increase the force than he had last year if this Senate amendment is concurred in.

Mr. CABELL. That is true.

Mr. CANNON. Oh, no.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I will explain to the gentleman from New York. The Senate amendment does not increase the appropriation for the current year a dollar. It simply gives that bureau the same amount that was given for the current year and the previous year. Now, some years it is found that more money is needed to protect the revenues from fraud than in other years.

No matter how large a sum is given the Treasury for this purpose, no more money will be expended than is actually needed for the service and an honest administration of the law for the protection of the revenue requires. The same amount was given last year, and yet, as I have already said, by a system of strict economy in the Internal Revenue Bureau it was enabled to leave a surplus of somewhere in the neighborhood of $200,000. The same officials will probably be there this year as in the past year, and from my knowledge of the officers of that department I am convinced they are honest, and will be as honest in the expenditures they make this coming year as in the past.

It is a little remarkable that the gentleman from Indiana who in the last Congress under a different political administration was willing to allow the amount that was allowed to that department, yet has not sufficient confidence in the present administration to leave the same sum for the next year in its hands.

Mr. HOLMAN. Does not the gentleman know that we reduced the amount in the last Congress some $200,000?

Mr. TOWNSHEND. And the service shows this: that the gentleman is contending for a sum which is just $63,000 less than was expended in 1885.

If the gentleman should be able to succeed in this amendment he might cripple that bureau so that it would not be able to honestly administer the revenue laws and protect the Government from frauds that may be committed in the manufacture of tobacco and the distillation of spirits.

I have in my hand a communication addressed by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue to the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations of the Senate, and it will answer every inquiry addressed by the gentleman from New York, and in my judgment ought to convince every fair-minded man, who wants the revenue laws to be honestly administered, that we ought to accept this amendment of the Senate.

Mr. HOLMAN. Permit me to suggest to the gentleman that the conference committee on the part of the Senate will undoubtedly agree to the reduction of the amount.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I ask that this communication be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, OFFICE OF INTERNAL REVENUE,
Washington, June 21, 1886.

SIR: With regard to that portion of the legislative, &c., appropriation relating to internal revenue, to which you referred this morning, the bill as passed by the House and referred to the Senate committee (see page 44) provides "for salaries and expenses of agents, &c., $1,900,000."

This is a reduction made on the floor of the House of $150,000 from the amount as reported by the House Appropriations Committee, which was $2,050,000. The amount which was recommended by the Secretary of the Treasury for this item was $2,100,000.

The reduction from the amount reported by the committee was based chiefly upon a statement from this office, showing that the expenditures in that behalf for the year ending June 30, instant, were—

For the first three quarters of the same	$1,359,098
And for the last quarter (estimated)	490,000
Total	1,849,098

The amount appropriated for the said year ending the 30th instant was $2,100,000. While the amount thus expended during the present fiscal year has by economy been kept down to the sum of $1,849,098 above stated, and while I propose to use my best endeavor to further economize during the coming year, as far as the true interests of the service will permit, yet it is desirable that the enforcement of the law should not be obstructed by a want of funds for that purpose; and as the moral effect upon those inclined to violate the law of a belief on their part that the office has been crippled by a failure to appropriate sufficient moneys to carry out its provisions is bad, I respectfully beg you to urge upon the Senate Committee on Appropriations the restoration in the above item of the sum of $150,000 at least, this making it the same sum reported by the House committee.

I desire to say further that the estimate of the Secretary of the Treasury was based upon the expenditure for the year ending June 30, 1885, which was $1,963,527.41. You will see by this that the sum as appropriated by the House would fall short over $63,000 should the expenses of the coming year be as great as for the fiscal year 1885.

The law compels the appointment and assignment of officers of the class of gaugers and storekeepers sufficient in number to enable the distillers to carry on their business in accordance with the provisions of law. The number of distilleries, especially of fruit brandies, and their production fluctuate considerably, and under the requirements of the law a deficiency would occur in case the coming year should bring a large increase of distillation, which is highly probable.

The encouragement of lawful distillation and the suppression of frauds against the internal revenue are sufficient reasons in my mind why the sum allowed in the above-mentioned item should not be limited to the amount appropriated by the bill as it passed the House.

Let me add, that if the bill taxing oleomargarine should pass, it would add an expense that would greatly enhance the necessity for a larger margin in this item.

Very respectfully,

JOS. S. MILLER, Commissioner.

CHAIRMAN COMMITTEE ON APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. RANDALL. How is that, Mr. Speaker?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois is entitled to an hour in his own right, deducting the time he has occupied the floor. Of course that does not prevent the House, when a gentleman obtains the floor in his own right and submits the motion, from ordering the previous question.

Mr. CABELL. Mr. Speaker, I did not know the gentleman had all the time he claims, but it makes no difference. The gentleman has misapprehended this amendment and the necessities for it; and I beg the House, because this is a matter that involves $150,000 of the people's money which is asked to be given to this bureau when there is not the slightest necessity for it, to attend closely to the facts involved in the case.

This question was discussed by the House when the legislative bill was before it; and after a full hearing of the matter and upon a full vote, with not more than a half-dozen votes against it, the provision was adopted by which we reduced the appropriation some $150,000—and why? When the Appropriations Committee sent in its bill to the House it is true that they put the amount of money appropriated for "revenue agents, gaugers, &c., and miscellaneous purposes" at $2,050,000. That was done in obedience to the estimates which had been sent to that committee. But the chairman of this committee, at the instance of a member on the other side of the House, sent to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue and asked him to say what had been his expenditures so far in the year and what would be the expenditures up to the 1st of July, 1886. He returned a letter giving the desired information; in other words, showing what had been the expenditures and what would be the expenditures for this service to the 1st day of July, 1886. I will read to the House an extract from that letter:

From the appropriation for salaries and expenses of agents and subordinate officers there was expended up to March 31, $1,359,098, and it is estimated that the expenses for the quarter ending June 30 will be about $490,000, making a total of $1,849,098.

Now, that information came to the Appropriations Committee after the bill came into the House; and, when it did so, after consultation with other members of the committee I offered the amendment to strike off $150,000 from the original recommendation of the committee so as to reduce the appropriation to $1,900,000. After discussion the House with but few dissenting voices adopted that amendment. And the bill as amended went to the Senate. The Senate put back upon the bill the $2,050,000 which the Committee on Appropriations had originally reported to the House.

This was done, I take it for granted, principally upon statements contained in the letter which the gentleman has had read, which, I take it, is a letter to the committee of the Senate. As soon as the action of the House became known the Internal Revenue Bureau officers set to work to have the appropriation made as they had asked it, and their operations, as a matter of course, were directed to the Senate. And the Senate, as I have said, put on that $150,000 which the House had stricken out.

I beg here to call the attention of the House to the fact that when we strike off that $150,000 which the Senate has added we have still left as a margin $51,000 more than was expended last year.

The gentleman from Illinois made, as I think, a disingenuous statement when he undertook to say that we appropriated less money than had ever been appropriated and less than had ever been expended. At the very time this House adopted that amendment we had the statement from the Commissioner of Internal Revenue that he had expended but $1,849,000, and we appropriated $1,900,000, thus giving him the sum of $51,000 more than he had expended, and more than he could reasonably suppose that he would be called upon to expend. There is absolutely nothing in the idea of the gentleman from Illinois that the failure to appropriate all the money asked for revenue agents, &c., will encourage lawbreakers to the perpetration of crime, or weaken the ability of the Department to employ all the officers needed for its operations or to repress all violations of the law.

Now, I will state, as one of the conferees on the part of the House, that we might have been willing and would have been willing rather than come back to the House with a disagreement to yield $40,000 or $50,000 to the Senate upon their requirement. We did not want to come back here with a disagreement. I was willing for myself to yield $50,000, but no more; so that there would have been appropriated $101,000 more than was expended last year, according to the statement of the Commissioner.

But the Senate committee would not yield—it was with them all, or nothing; so we disagreed.

The House surely could not have desired us to act otherwise than as we did. We can not understand why the Senate should want to give more, or why the Commissioner of Internal Revenue should want more than we offered. What does the Commissioner want with more money than $1,900,000? How can this House with any propriety give him for the ensuing year a sum greater by $100,000 than he expended this year?

I ask you, gentlemen of the House, to sustain this disagreement on the part of the House conferees and let this matter go back to conference. It will not do to thus give up the people's money without a struggle. I do not think there is a gentleman upon this floor, either Democrat or Republican, who can go before his constituents and with a clear conscience answer to them and show a reason why there should be turned over to any officer of the Government $201,000 in excess of what he had expended in the last fiscal year for the conduct of his Department.

The gentleman from Illinois stated that there was no reason why the appropriation recommended by the Senate should be cut down. Why, sir, the Commissioner of Internal Revenue—the very Commissioner who is seeking this immoderate sum, and against whom I make no aspersions, because I regard him with great favor though he is mistaken in this matter—this Commissioner says in this report that since the incoming of his administration he has discharged nine hundred and twenty-six officials. The gentleman from Illinois instead of reciting the expenditures last fiscal year, just passed, recited the expenditures under the Republican administration, the expenditures of the fiscal year 1884–'85. And what were those expenditures?

Those expenditures were in round numbers $1,963,000. But now comes the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. TOWNSHEND] applauding in one breath the Commissioner of Internal Revenue for his retrenchment and saving economy, and in the other demanding more money than was expended during Republican rule, and, worse than all, the Commissioner, while claiming credit for cutting down expenses and lopping off the heads of hundreds of officials, demands with emphasis that he shall be allowed more money by $200,000 than he expended last year, more than his Republican predecessor expended the year before that, and within a fraction of the large sum appropriated when the dismissed officials were in place under his predecessor and himself.

Mr. REED, of Maine. What is he to do when he reappoints these nine hundred and twenty-six men?

Mr. CABELL. He ought not to reappoint them. He was honest about this matter of reform. He did right, no doubt.

Mr. REED, of Maine. If not, perhaps the object of discharging them would not be accomplished.

Mr. HOLMAN. He can not appoint them under the law.

Mr. CABELL. I will say to the gentleman from Maine I am not undertaking to make a political harangue in discussing a question of this character.

Mr. REED, of Maine. I want to know why these men were discharged?

Mr. CABELL. I suppose there was no use for them. I suppose they had been fraudulently—I will not say fraudulently, but I will say improperly, billeted on the Government, and if the Commissioner and those above him were acting honestly, as I presume they were, those men were discharged from proper motives and should not have been allowed to remain an incubus and a load upon the Government. But if they are properly discharged they are not wanted now and do not require to be paid now. Since they have been discharged, however, we do not need to appropriate money as if they had been kept in service.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. CABELL. Yes, sir.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Suppose that by the establishment of new distilleries the business should increase?

Mr. RANDALL. Well, we will be here in December.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Suppose that new distilleries are established, do you propose to leave those distilleries without gaugers?

Mr. CABELL. No, sir; there will be plenty of gaugers, never fear.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. The object of having a sufficient fund placed at the command of the Commissioner is that he may meet whatever exigency may arise in the business.

Mr. CABELL. Certainly; and when you give him more than he expended last year he will be well equipped for any exigency.

Mr. RANDALL. What reason is there to think that there will be more this year than last year?

Mr. TOWNSHEND. He will not appoint one single officer unless the protection of the revenue demands it.

Mr. CABELL. I thought the gentleman merely desired to ask me a question. I trust the gentleman will not inject his speech into mine.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. What does the Commissioner want this money for?

Mr. CABELL. I have not the remotest idea. I only know that there has been a margin of $51,000 allowed to him by the vote of the House, and I think that is quite enough. I do not know what this money is wanted for. I can not conceive why more money is needed for next year than for last year.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Does the Commissioner give any reason?

Mr. CABELL. None on earth, except the reason suggested by my friend and colleague on the committee [Mr. TOWNSHEND], that "perhaps" the money may be wanted. Now, if you are going to bring "maybes" into this question, and if "perhaps" more money will be wanted, then I say "perhaps" not more than $51,000 in excess of what was spent last year can by possibility be wanted.

Mr. LONG. Should not we on this side of the House be justified in inferring that, the Commissioner having discharged nine hundred and twenty-six Republican officials, the money is wanted for the purpose of appointing nine hundred and twenty-six Democratic officials in their places?

Mr. CABELL. No, sir; I do not think that at all. I have no reason to know that they were all Republicans. My own opinion is that the discharges were made in good faith, and that the Commissioner has attempted to act honestly and for the good of the service. In justice, I ought perhaps to say that some of those officials who were discharged were not paid except by the owners of the distilleries, and when upon duty, but some of them were paid by the Government, and enough of them were so paid to justify us in claiming to have made a saving by these discharges.

Mr. LONG. But you say you do not know of any other reason for asking this money.

Mr. CABELL. I do not know of any reason except that the Commissioner thinks that perhaps in the course of the business of his bureau he may want to appoint some additional officials to attend to necessary duties, and that circumstances may arise which may involve expenses not now anticipated.

I think there ought to be a margin allowed for that, but we have already provided a margin of $51,000, and if this House goes beyond that and undertakes to put in this $150,000 I want the members to understand what they are doing; if they agree to what the Senate demands they will be appropriating $201,000 more than was expended last year. Now, gentlemen, are you going to do it?

Mr. HOLMAN. With the permission of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. CABELL] I will answer the question put by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LONG]. Can what he suggests be done, in view of the law? In other words, can his apprehension be realized that the dismissal of nine hundred and odd employés will result in the appointment of an equal number of new men during the present year? For three years this has been the law, and it has been included in every successive bill:

Provided, That the number of deputy collectors, gaugers, storekeepers, and clerks employed in the collection of internal revenue shall not be increased nor shall the salaries of said officers or employés be increased beyond the salaries paid during the last fiscal year.

Now, under that provision of law, which, as I have said, has been included in each successive bill for several years, how can there be an increase either in the number of employés or in their salaries?

Mr. LONG. I did not say there would be.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Does not the gentleman from Virginia know that the number of gaugers is not limited by law, and that if the business increases there is an absolute necessity for an increased number of gaugers? The law that he has read refers only to the special agents.

Mr. HOLMAN. The gentleman evidently did not hear the law which I read. It says: "Provided that the number of deputy collectors, gaugers, storekeepers, or clerks" shall not be increased.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. But must not the number of gaugers be increased if the business increases?

Mr. HOLMAN. Does not the law expressly prohibit an increase above the number employed last year?

Mr. TOWNSHEND. The law does not limit the number of storekeepers or gaugers, but——

Mr. CABELL. Now, I trust my friend will allow me to resume the floor. I do not occupy it very often. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LONG], who is usually a very fair man, has asked me as to the necessity which existed for the discharge of these men who have been discharged. I have no doubt, I repeat, that the Commissioner of Internal Revenue acted fairly, honorably, and honestly in this matter, for I believe he is a good official and a worthy man.

Whatever mistakes he may have made, I do not think he is such a partisan or so badly disposed that he will discharge men from the Government service when it is not necessary. He is, however, greatly in error when he asks to have this amount of money appropriated. There can be no reasonable purpose in having this sum laid up to his order. The only reason assigned is to provide against contingencies, the happening of which he has no right to anticipate; and certainly this House has no right to appropriate to meet such contingencies when we have not the remotest idea that the contingencies can or will happen.

Even if the contingencies apprehended should occur, there will be no special activity in the distilling business until the fall of the year; it is at that time, if at all, when additional guagers and storekeepers will be needed. We will come here again next winter. If the appropriation now made should by that time prove deficient, if it should appear that we have imposed too narrow a limitation, have failed to appropriate the full amount required, we can then pass an appropriation to remedy the deficiency.

Mr. SKINNER. Does not the history of the internal-revenue system show it to be a fact that as many gaugers and storekeepers are dropped as are appointed, that as many distilleries are daily going out of existence as daily come into existence?

Mr. CABELL. That is my information, and I believe it to be true.

Now, I think every gentleman in this House understands this matter. It is a plain, simple proposition. The Commissioner of Internal Revenue shows that for this work he expended last year in round numbers $1,849,000. We agree to appropriate $1,900,000, being $51,000 more than he expended during the last year. It seems to me this should be sufficient. The Republican administration expended $1,963,000; but since that time nine hundred officials, many of whom were paid by the Government, have been dispensed with.

We all realize the objection to these indefinite appropriations. In other words, we have judged it wise not to make appropriations in the dark. Now, there are only four classes of officials to be paid under this appropriation—agents, storekeepers, gaugers, and inspectors; the rest of the money is for miscellaneous purposes. What guide have you in the appropriations you make except the previous expenditures?

Mr. DIBBLE. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. CABELL. Certainly.

Mr. DIBBLE. Is not this appropriation $50,000 less than the appropriation for the last fiscal year?

Mr. CABELL. Yes, sir.

Mr. RANDALL. But it is $51,000 more than was expended last year.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. And $63,000 less than was expended the year before.

Mr. DIBBLE. If on an appropriation of $2,100,000 for the last year there has been a saving of $150,000, why not now leave a margin, as we did before? The experience of the last year has shown that the Commissioner of Internal Revenue can be trusted to curtail expenditures; and the appropriation proposed by the Senate amendment allows only a reasonable margin, being $50,000 less than the appropriation for last year.

Mr. CABELL. The actual expenditure, as the gentleman himself states, has during the last year been $150,000 less than the amount appropriated. That very fact shows that it is not necessary to make so large an appropriation as we made last year. We propose to allow the Commissioner a margin of $51,000, which is as much margin as ought to be allowed any public officer, I do not care who he is. If the Angel Gabriel himself should come down here and be placed at the head of a Department, I would not turn over to him hundreds of thousands of dollars from the Treasury of the people to be administered at his discretion, when it is the duty of the House of Representatives to see to it that all necessary money, and no more, is appropriated. When my friend from South Carolina goes home to his constituents and they ask him, "How have you administered the public moneys; to whose hands have you intrusted them?" will he not desire to say, "I intrusted the officials of the Government with only the sums necessary to carry on the operations of the Government, and no more?"

Mr. DIBBLE. My friend will allow me to say that this is only a question of judgment as to what is a reasonable margin. During the last year this bureau got along very well with $150,000 less than was appropriated. There was no extravagance of expenditure. Why should we fear to allow this year a smaller and certainly only a reasonable margin?

Mr. CABELL. There is no reason why the Commissioner of Internal Revenue can not during the coming year get along with the amount which he expended during the past year.

I now yield three minutes to my friend from Illinois [Mr. CANNON], and reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, if I can have the attention of the House I can say all I want to say in three minutes' time.

I regard it as of but little importance whether this appropriation remains as the House fixed it, or the Senate shall insist and the House shall recede. The truth is it is for the payment of gaugers and storekeepers, a service provided by law, and which can not be affected by the appropriation. If you do not appropriate enough of money, then the law says they shall be employed anyhow; and they will have to wait for their money to the end of the year. If you were to appropriate twice as much, there could not be a dollar of it spent except for the payment of gaugers and storekeepers provided under the law. No Commissioner of Internal Revenue can under the appropriation, with or without it, increase or decrease one gauger or storekeeper over what is required.

So the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. CABELL] is right enough that if we do not appropriate enough they will come in here for a deficiency.

The truth is, Mr. Speaker, the House recommends $50,000 more than was spent last year, and $63,000 less than was spent the year before. It may be $50,000 more will be spent this year, or it may be $150,000 less. It all depends on the number of distilleries and fruit-stills and the number of gaugers and storekeepers who may be found to be necessary. Having said this much, I do not care, except to close up the bill, what action the House takes, for in my opinion it is not of the slightest importance what disposition is made of it.

Mr. REED, of Maine. It is the usual discussion, then, of the difference between the appropriation bill and the deficiency bill.

Mr. CANNON. Precisely.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Let me inquire of the gentleman from Illinois whether it is not better when we have it within our power to prevent laying the foundation for a deficiency bill, and especially when it might so easily be guarded against?

Mr. RANDALL. Mr. Speaker, the adoption by the House of the motion of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. TOWNSHEND] is without excuse if we are to rely on the information in possession of the House. Its adoption would give in this appropriation bill more money than either the House or Senate considers necessary. It would give about $200,000 more than was expended for the same service last year by the very officer who is likely to expend it during the current year.

Why anybody on either side of this House should want unnecessarily to add $200,000 to the aggregate of this year's appropriations I am at a loss to conceive. The committee in the first instance gave what was asked, but on fuller information from the Commissioner of Internal Revenue the amount was reduced in this House $150,000. We have been further advised that while the Senate increased the amount to the original estimate, yet that body is now ready to make a reduction. But the motion of the gentleman from Illinois will estop the Senate and the House from placing the amount where, by the concurrent proceedings of the two Houses, it ought to be placed.

Mr. DIBBLE. What was the estimate the Department made for this service?

Mr. RANDALL. If I remember rightly the estimate was $2,100,000 for the current year.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Fifty thousand dollars more than the Senate provided.

Mr. RANDALL. When we come to take these estimates they are not always reliable.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Is not the Secretary of the Treasury reliable, in his judgment?

Mr. RANDALL. I am not to be diverted.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Let me ask my friend from Pennsylvania whether the officer who administers the law with his experience is not better qualified than the gentleman from Pennsylvania to form a judgment in the matter?

Mr. RANDALL. I answer that the Secretary of the Treasury estimated for last year $2,300,000. The law reduced it $200,000, and it appears there was expended about $150,000 less than the law gave.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. That was by a different Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. RANDALL. I am not discussing distinctions of party as to Secretaries of the Treasury. We do not follow the estimates in every case, and yet the Government goes along while the expenditures are found far below the appropriations.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Did my friend from Pennsylvania listen to the communication which was read?

Mr. RANDALL. Yes; I have heard both sides and both letters.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. That communication differs radically from the gentleman as to what is required by the service.

Mr. RANDALL. I think I am as well informed by experience of twenty years as the Commissioner with a few months' service.

Mr. HISCOCK. I understand the gentleman to say he is willing to stand here upon the position there will be no deficiency.

Mr. RANDALL. In this bill?

Mr. HISCOCK. Yes, sir.

Mr. RANDALL. I say that the law prevents a deficiency.

Mr. HISCOCK. Oh, I know what the law prevents, or attempts to prevent——

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Suppose new distilleries are created and the business increases?

Mr. RANDALL. The gentleman must not allow his imagination to mislead him. He may conjecture that new distilleries will be established, but the past history shows that the business of manufacturing and consumption go hand in hand together. In point of fact there is not a great deal more whisky produced than is sold. I have no apprehension from that source.

Mr. HISCOCK. The gentleman from Pennsylvania and myself differ as to the law preventing a deficiency.

Mr. RANDALL. It prevents it so far as language can be employed to accomplish such a purpose.

Mr. HISCOCK. But you have nothing in the law prohibiting the Commissioner of Internal Revenue from spending all of this money in nine months if he wants to. I suppose the gentleman will not dispute that; nor can you put anything in the law which would prevent it.

Mr. RANDALL. Well——

Mr. HISCOCK. Wait a moment. Now let me come to the other question: Are you willing to advise the House that you will not come in here at the next session and ask a deficiency for this service?

Mr. RANDALL. I never commit myself to the acts of another.

Mr. HISCOCK. Well, give us your own opinion.

Mr. RANDALL. I will say, however, that judging by the expenditures of the last year, when the amount was about $50,000 less than is fixed by the House in this bill, I believe said sum will be adequate.

Mr. HISCOCK. Then, in your opinion, this claim for an increase on the part of the present Commissioner of Internal Revenue is to create unnecessary gaugers and storekeepers.

Mr. RANDALL. No, I do not say that; but I do distinctly say that this request of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue to have about $200,000 more than he expended last year for like service, when the law prevents an increase of pay to these employés——

Mr. HISCOCK. No, he has not the power to increase the pay; but you know he has the power to increase the number of gaugers.

Mr. RANDALL. Or an increase of expenditures therefor, is absolutely unjustifiable.

Mr. HISCOCK. It may be unjustifiable, but it is not illegal. He may employ gaugers and storekeepers to any number he pleases.

Mr. RANDALL. I say more; that I do not think he places the administration under which he holds office in a right attitude when he seeks to get more money for the coming year than he expended last year. [Applause on the Democratic side.] And further I say to the House that he ought not to have the opportunity of expending more money than he employed last year. If there should be an excess of expenditure over appropriation, and such contingency arises, then——

Mr. TOWNSHEND. What?

Mr. RANDALL. Then I will be ready to meet it in some way. But why any one on either side of the House should want to give more money than is shown to be necessary for the collection of the internal revenue I am at a loss to know, in view of the fact that this very officer with this $50,000 less than you propose to give him for the current year collected an increased amount of revenue from these same sources over the prior year.

Mr. REID, of North Carolina. With $200,000 less of expenditures.

Mr. HISCOCK. I intend to vote with you upon the strength of your recommendations and assurances; and all I have said on my part has been simply for the purpose of getting your assurance and recommendation.

Mr. RANDALL. I do not give any assurance. I give nothing except the deductions from the facts of the situation.

Mr. HISCOCK. Then upon your statement of facts before the House I propose to stand by you for one.

Mr. RANDALL. Now, Mr. Speaker, I have promised to yield to the gentleman from Indiana, who desires a vote.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I hope the gentleman from Indiana will not deprive the House of an opportunity to reply to the reflections upon the department.

Mr. HOLMAN. I think in all fairness to the gentleman from Illinois that he should be permitted to have some time. How much does the gentleman desire?

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Well, I have reserved my own time, but only desire a few moments and will take it now.

Mr. HOLMAN. How much time?

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I do not think the gentleman ought to limit me, but I think five minutes will be sufficient.

Mr. HOLMAN. Very well.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Now, Mr. Speaker, I have discharged my duty in bringing to the knowledge of this House the statement and assurances of the Treasury officials in regard to what they believe may probably be the needs of the service. That is all I have desired to do. It is a matter of no personal interest to me any more than it is to every other honest tax-payer in the land. I have not a single distillery in my district. I have no manufactory of tobacco in my district. My people are consumers to a very moderate extent of both articles. They manufacture neither. But what I say is this: When the chief of the bureau positively asserts, as he has asserted in this communication, that this reduction of the amount of money that has been asked for may result in serious detriment to that service, I think we ought to have confidence in his integrity and veracity and give consideration to his recommendations.

The Commissioner has stated in that communication that the effect of the reduction of this appropriation will be to encourage those who are inclined to commit frauds in the distillation of spirits and in the manufacture of tobacco. I am impressed with the belief that there is much in his assertion. The other day when the gentleman from Pennsylvania supported an amendment here striking from the sundry civil bill the fraud fund which it is asserted at the Department is absolutely necessary to protect the Government from the frauds committed by moonshiners and others who have been defrauding the revenue, when certain gentlemen on this floor wanted to strike out that appropriation, it struck me then it was an insidious attempt to break down the internal-revenue tax to which many are opposed; and I resisted that effort then as I resist now the effort to cut down the appropriation to that bureau to an extent which may seriously cripple the efficiency of that service. I will state of this officer that if you put in his hands $5,000,000, I would trust him for an economical expenditure of that money.

This is a sum less than we intrusted to officers of a former administration. Why should we not give our own officials the same degree of confidence as we did the others? I do not want a single dollar more expended than may be needed for an economical administration of the Government. But these officers who are controlling the affairs of this Government must not be crippled in their efforts to administer the Government efficiently. And I believe that the assertion of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue may come true, that if you reduce this sum down to a point where there is danger of crippling the efficiency of the service you encourage those who are inclined to do so to commit frauds on the revenue. That is all I have to say.

Mr. HOLMAN. Does the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CABELL] wish more time?

Mr. CABELL. I do not wish to occupy more time. I have not heard anything to which I think it necessary to reply.

Mr. HOLMAN. I wish to say to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. TOWNSHEND] there is really no trouble about this matter. Every dollar required to carry on this important bureau of the Government will be appropriated. There is no material difference of opinion as to this matter between the conferees on the part of the two Houses. I feel authorized to say the Senate conferees do not regard it as absolutely necessary that the whole sum named shall be appropriated. The proper concessions will be made and the amount appropriated will be, at least in the judgment of the conferees, ample for the purpose. There is not the slightest occasion for any comment as to the management of this office; for I think we all agree that the present Commissioner of Internal Revenue has proved himself a very competent and efficient public officer, and that he has managed the affairs of that office exceedingly well. He reduced the expenses last year as compared with the preceding year over $115,000.

Mr. SPRINGER. More than that. Here is the report of the Treasurer showing a reduction of $829,000.

Mr. HOLMAN. The expenditures in this branch of the service which we are now discussing were in the previous year $1,963,527.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. He has reduced the expenses in another direction.

Mr. HOLMAN. I am speaking of one item.

Mr. SPRINGER. The figures I cited apply to the whole service.

Mr. HOLMAN. There is a heavy reduction in the expenses of the bureau. For this item the expenditures last year were $1,849,098, showing a difference of $114,429.

Mr. REID, of North Carolina. I have a statement from the Department showing a reduction of expenses of $200,000 in the Internal Revenue Bureau.

Mr. HOLMAN. I am speaking of this one item alone.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I wish to put on record as a portion of my remarks a statement showing the appropriations for this service for a series of years, and I wish to call the attention of the House to the fact that in the first session of the Forty-fourth Congress the appropriation for this branch of the service was $1,475,000. The amount gradually ran up.

The following is the statement referred to by Mr. HOLMAN:

Appropriations for salaries of storekeepers, gaugers, &c., of internal revenue.

1886	$2,100,000
1885	2,300,000
1884	2,300,000
1883	2,300,000
1882	2,100,000
1881	1,700,000
1880	1,500,000
1879	1,500,000
1878	1,800,000
1877	1,475,000
1876	2,300,000

Mr. SPRINGER. I ask the gentleman to yield to me to state this fact: I have before me a statement from the Treasurer of the United States, showing the entire reduction in the internal-revenue department. It shows that during the last fiscal year the decrease of expenditures in the collection of internal revenue, as compared with the year 1885, was $829,361.32.

Mr. HOLMAN. I now call the previous question.

Mr. RANDALL. What is the pending question?

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state it. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. TOWNSHEND] moves that the House recede from its disagreement to the Senate amendment which has been read, and agree to the same.

Mr. RANDALL. I ask a division on that, so that the conferees may know the numerical vote of the House on that question.

The previous question was ordered.

The question being taken on Mr. TOWNSHEND'S motion, there were—ayes 5, noes 125.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. No quorum.

The SPEAKER. The Chair appoints as tellers the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. TOWNSHEND] and the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN].

Mr. TOWNSHEND. As this division is entirely useless, I will not insist on a quorum.

So (further count not being called for) the motion was not agreed to.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. I move that the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 179 and agree to the same; and in regard to that I desire to make a brief statement, not to occupy over a minute.

The Clerk read Senate amendment 179, as follows:

To enable the Commissioner of Labor to collect and report to Congress the statistics of and relating to marriage and divorce in the several States and Territories and in the District of Columbia, $10,000.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I simply wish to say that, in my judgment, this is enlightened legislation, and the duty of making this examination is very properly assigned to the Commissioner of Labor, because the industrial condition of the country does affect the family, and we want to know whether this country is traveling in the direction of France, which has increased in population only 1 per cent. in thirty-six years. We want to know whether there are influences at work which are carrying this Republic in the same direction; and I think, as I have already said, that these amendments put upon the bill by the Senate are enlightened legislation and do the Senate much honor. I also wish to call attention to the fact that upon a yea-and-nay vote in the House the motion to concur received 108 or 110 votes. I hope that the House will recede and agree to this amendment.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Speaker, I rise only to call the previous question on the motion, and to say that I do not think there will be any very serious trouble in coming to some agreement about this item.

The question was taken on ordering the previous question upon the motion that the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment and agree to the same; and there were—ayes 51, noes 74.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. I ask for tellers.

Mr. DINGLEY. I suggest to the gentleman from Iowa that he had better not press that demand, the gentleman from Indiana having assured us that an agreement can probably be reached upon this item in conference.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. Very well; I do not press the demand for tellers.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede from its disagreements to the amendments numbered 39 and 40.

The amendments were read, as follows:

Amendment numbered 39: Page 15, line 7, after "dollars," insert "one clerk of class 3."

Amendment numbered 40: Page 15, line 7, after "one" where it occurs the third time in said line insert "two clerks at $900."

Mr. CANNON. A single word, Mr. Speaker, about these amendments. This one clerk at $1,600 and these two clerks at $900 have been put into the bill by the Senate for the Civil Service Commission. A communication from that commission to the Senate committee, which is embodied in the report upon this subject, states:

The clerical force of the commission now consists, besides the secretary and stenographer, of one clerk of class 2 and one clerk of class 1. The appropriation bill just passed by the House provides for the same force for the coming year. It is utterly inadequate, being barely sufficient (with the help of the messenger, who is an expert type-writer, and the laborer, who is constantly employed on clerical work), for the dispatch of absolutely current work, leaving the important records and tabulations which should be kept up to date untouched. It is therefore recommended that to the present force there be added one clerk of class 3 and two clerks at $1,000.

The Senate amends that suggestion by providing for one clerk of class 3 and two clerks at $900. I have read the statement of the Civil Service Commission. Let me say, in addition, that I am not here to fight the battle of this Civil Service Commission, but, as long as the law remains upon the statute-book and you keep the Civil Service Commission, for one I am willing to give them the force that is necessary, and that without reference to whether the commission performed its duty or not. To be perfectly honest and frank about it, I am inclined to think that whether you give this force or whether you do not give it, the duty of that commission in enforcing the law in good faith will be neglected; yet while the law remains on the statute-book and the commission remains in existence I, as a member on the minority side of this House, do not propose to furnish you, or your administration, or your commission any excuse for not performing its duty.

Having said this much and made this motion to concur, so far as I am concerned I am ready to vote.

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Speaker, I think, in view of the fact that the Civil Service Commission have sent a communication to the Senate stating that they need this additional force for the proper discharge of their duties, the House ought in all fairness to agree to this additional allowance. I hope that will be done even without a division, in order that this arm of the public service may be enabled to go on and perform its functions as the law requires it to do. I hope there will be no objection.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Speaker, before calling the previous question I simply wish to add that the objection to these items is that when we once organize a bureau its tendency always is to extend and increase the number of its employés and enlarge its expenditures. These bureaus seem to grow steadily and remorselessly, without any possibility of their being restricted unless by the positive action of Congress. The tendency is to magnify every public employment, to magnify the duties of every office, and I think that especially in the early history of a Government bureau there ought to be great hesitation in yielding to its demands for increased force and larger expenditure. It is for that reason the conferees on the part of the House did not yield this point.

Mr. SPRINGER. I concede the force of the gentleman's argument, but the country is growing, and I think these Departments must grow with the growth of the country.

The SPEAKER. The question is on ordering the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The question being taken on the motion of Mr. CANNON that the House recede from its disagreements to Senate amendments 39 and 40 and agree to the same, there were—ayes 67, noes 77.

Mr. CUTCHEON. I call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. SPRINGER. Oh, no; let us have tellers.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Is this a motion to concur in the amendment of the Senate allowing additional clerks?

The SPEAKER. The Senate adopted two amendments allowing three additional clerks to the Civil Service Commissioners. The House disagreed to those amendments. The gentleman from Illinois now moves that the House recede from its disagreement and agree to the amendments. The question is on that motion.

Mr. BRAGG. I desire to make an inquiry—I do not know whether it is a parliamentary question or not; it may be something of that nature. I desire to know whether there is any provision by which anybody will be authorized to examine these clerks before they are appointed.

Mr. CUTCHEON. They would come under the civil-service rules, and would have to pass the examination applicable to clerks of the classes specified.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 123, nays 111, not voting 88; as follows:

During the roll-call,

On motion of Mr. SPRINGER, by unanimous consent, the reading of the names was dispensed with.

The following pairs were announced from the Clerk's desk:

Until further notice:

Mr. SPRIGGS with Mr. OWEN.

Mr. DAWSON with Mr. RANNEY.

Mr. HEARD with Mr. BAYNE.

Mr. HAMMOND with Mr. CASWELL.

Mr. NORWOOD with Mr. O'DONNELL.

Mr. VIELE with Mr. GALLINGER.

Mr. ROBERTSON with Mr. STEELE.

Mr. FELIX CAMPBELL with Mr. DAVENPORT.

Mr. RIGGS with Mr. PHELPS.

Mr. STORM with Mr. LOUTTIT.

Mr. SNYDER with Mr. BRADY.

Mr. PIDCOCK with Mr. SYMES.

Mr. O'FERRALL with Mr. VAN SCHAICK.

Mr. GREEN, of North Carolina, with Mr. HANBACK.

Mr. ARNOT with Mr. THOMAS, of Illinois.

Mr. REESE with Mr. BUCHANAN.

Mr. BARBOUR with Mr. LIBBEY, until December next.

Mr. ROGERS with Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR, until the end of the session.

For this day:

Mr. HEWITT with Mr. BUCK.

Mr. SENEY with Mr. FELTON.

Mr. MULLER with Mr. GUENTHER.

Mr. COX with Mr. LEHLBACH.

Mr. OUTHWAITE with Mr. LITTLE. If Mr. OUTHWAITE were present, Mr. LITTLE would vote in the affirmative.

Mr. THROCKMORTON with Mr. SESSIONS.

Mr. LE FEVRE with Mr. NEGLEY.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio, with Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas.

The vote was then announced as above recorded.

Mr. HOLMAN. I move the House insist on its disagreement to the remaining amendments numbered 2 and 17.

Mr. CANNON. I ask the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] as to the amendment numbered 17, which relates to Senators' clerks, whether he does not think the House should take some action?

Mr. HOLMAN. Oh, yes; it is a matter upon which the House will have to act.

Mr. CANNON. I ask the gentleman whether there is any necessity at this stage of the session to send the conference back only to report further disagreement?

Mr. HOLMAN. I suggest inasmuch as four amendments go to the conference this might as well go.

Mr. CANNON. I am perfectly willing if the other side of the House wishes another conference.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would like to call the attention of the gentleman from Indiana to the fact that the amendment numbered 41 changing the amount of appropriation so as to conform to the recommendation of the Civil Service Commission, has not been disposed of.

Mr. HOLMAN. That is to be concurred in.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection the House will concur in that amendment.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. SPRINGER moved to reconsider the votes just taken; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. HOLMAN. I move the House further insist on its disagreement and ask for a further conference.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER appointed as managers on the part of the House Mr. HOLMAN, Mr. CABELL, and Mr. CANNON.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. NEECE, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (H. R. 758) granting a pension to Alexander Harper;

A bill (H. R. 944) for the relief of Mary Jane Conrad;

A bill (H. R. 1062) for the relief of Ernest H. Wardwell;

A bill (H. R. 1205) to provide for the construction of a bridge across the west channel of the Detroit River to connect Belle Isle Park with the mainland;

A bill (H. R. 3358) granting a pension to Hiram L. Wait;

A bill (H. R. 4139) for the relief of Thomas Sampson;

A bill (H. R. 4374) to increase the pension of Samuel Frost;

A bill (H. R. 5715) granting a pension to Mary Sprague;

A bill (H. R. 6087) granting a pension to Patrick Murphy;

A bill (H. R. 6979) authorizing the construction of additional lighthouse districts;

A bill (H. R. 7471) to provide for the establishment of additional aids to navigation to guide vessels through the channels leading to Pensacola, Fla.;

A bill (H. R. 7750) to place the name of John W. Payton on the pension-roll;

A bill (H. R. 8066) to pension Martha A. Vorhees;

A bill (H. R. 8351) for the relief of Edward Coleman;

A bill (H. R. 8372) granting a pension to John E. Doggett;

A bill (H. R. 8602) granting a pension to Sarah M. Carroll; and

A bill (H. R. 9438) appropriating money for the completion of the public building at Greensborough, N. C.

CARTER W. TILLER.

Mr. MATSON. I call up for consideration a bill (H. R. 4002) granting a pension to Carter W. Tiller, together with the accompanying message of the President. This bill has been twice before the House for consideration. I wish to say this pension claim is in the hands of a special examiner for the purpose of being investigated for allowance in the Pension Office. There seems to be but one point of difficulty remaining as to that claim; it is whether or not the soldier was in the line of duty at the time of capture. I think that can be cleared up by a special investigation. With a view of calling up other cases of the kind, at the request of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. TAULBEE] I ask that by unanimous consent the consideration of this matter be postponed to the fifth day of the next session of this Congress.

The motion was agreed to.

MRS. MARIA HUNTER.

Mr. MATSON. I call up as a matter of privilege for consideration a bill (H. R. 7167) granting a pension to Mrs. Maria Hunter, with the accompanying message of the President.

Mr. FORNEY. I raise the question of consideration against that, my object being to take up the fortification bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama raises the question of consideration. The question is, Will the House now proceed to consider the message and bill?

Mr. MATSON. I want to make a suggestion. If in the judgment of the House it is important that this bill, the fortifications bill, should go to the Senate at an early date, I do not want to insist upon this measure, because it can be called up at any time after the appropriation bill has been disposed of.

Mr. FORNEY. This is the last one of the general appropriation bills.

Mr. SMALLS. I would like to ask the chairman of the Committee on Invalid Pensions to allow this bill to go over until next Friday, as Mr. O'HARA, who made the minority report, is not present and will not be in his seat until next week.

Mr. MATSON. I have no objection.

Several MEMBERS. Say next week.

Mr. SMALLS. Very well; I will suggest that it go over until next Tuesday.

Mr. SPRINGER. I must object to that; Friday is private bill day, and this should go over until then.

The SPEAKER. As the question of consideration is raised against the bill, the first question is, Will the House proceed to consider it.

Mr. FORNEY. I withdraw the question of consideration if it will facilitate the disposition of it.

The SPEAKER. The question is on postponing the further consideration until Friday next.

Mr. PERKINS. I think the Speaker misunderstood the gentleman from South Carolina. He modified his request and made it Tuesday.

Mr. SMALLS. Yes, sir; Tuesday next.

Mr. SPRINGER. I insist upon Friday, that being private-bill day.

Mr. SMALLS. We have taken up all of the private-bill days for weeks upon other matters.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will submit the question to the House.

Mr. SPRINGER. I move to amend the motion by setting the consideration of the bill for next Friday.

The question was taken; and on a division there were—ayes 52, noes 82.

So the motion was not agreed to.

The motion to postpone the consideration of the bill until Tuesday was then agreed to.

ELIZABETH LUCE.

Mr. MATSON. I now call up House bill No. 5997, granting a pension to Elizabeth Luce; and I ask it to be considered in connection with the message of the President stating his objections.

Mr. FORNEY. Against that I raise the question of consideration.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I desire to ask the gentleman from Alabama how long a time the consideration of the fortifications bill will occupy?

Mr. FORNEY. I suppose we can get through with it to-morrow, unless gentlemen want the general debate extended. I understand four hours' debate is desired.

Mr. HOLMES. I trust this bill will be considered.

Mr. MATSON. I have learned enough of the condition of the appropriation bills to insist upon the consideration of this bill now, as against the fortifications bill. There is no immediate necessity for sending that bill to the Senate.

Mr. FORNEY. It is a question as to whether we will take up the general appropriation bill or a private bill.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I wish to make a parliamentary inquiry. There are two bills carried over from last Friday, both of them being private bills. I desire to ask if they do not come up prior to this one?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks not. These are private bills also, and are privileged under the Constitution.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I wish to say, in response to my colleague on the committee in charge of the fortifications bill, that this side of the House will expect two hours for general debate. I do not know what my friend wants on that side. But of course there is no pressing necessity for getting this bill to the Senate as they have their hands full.

Mr. REED, of Maine. And as reported it does not amount to much of a bill anyway. [Laughter.]

The question being taken, there were on a division—ayes 93, noes 73.

So the House determined to proceed to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. MATSON. Mr. Speaker, I now ask that this report be read and that the views of the minority be also read, and after that I propose to move the previous question, in which I hope I will be sustained by gentlemen on both sides of the House.

Mr. HOLMES. I trust the gentleman will not move the previous question yet, as a little explanation is desirable in regard to the medical evidence in this case.

Mr. MATSON. After the report is read if any gentleman insists that he has some word of explanation which is essential, I will yield ten or fifteen minutes.

The report of the Committee on Invalid Pensions on the veto message of the President of the United States, and the minority report accompanying the same, which have heretofore been printed in the RECORD, were again read.

Mr. MATSON. I now move the previous question.

Mr. HOLMES. I hope the gentleman will give at least twenty or thirty minutes' debate on this.

Mr. MATSON. It is impossible in the present state of the business. I am sure it is not needed, because the report sets forth the facts very fully.

Mr. LONG. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. If the previous question is ordered will there not be fifteen minutes' debate on either side?

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. MILLS in the chair). The previous question will cut off debate.

Mr. LONG. Does not the rule provide that where there has not been any debate fifteen minutes shall be allowed for and against after the previous question has been ordered?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The reading of the report, which has been held to be in the nature of debate, has occupied the time.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. The chairman of the committee said that after the reports were read he would yield time to discuss it.

Mr. MATSON. I said if any gentleman stated that he had a particular point I would be willing to yield a few minutes. But the gentleman has asked thirty minutes, which is inadmissible.

The previous question was ordered; there being on a division—ayes 85, noes 79.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question now is, Will the House on reconsideration agree to pass the bill, the veto of the President to the contrary notwithstanding? And on this question the Constitution requires the yeas and nays to be taken.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 116, nays 124, not voting 82; as follows:

Mr. GUENTHER. I am paired with Mr. MULLER, of New York, on all political questions. If this is to be considered a political question I will withdraw my vote. I will leave it to the Chair to determine.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. MILLS). That is a question which the gentleman must decide for himself.

Mr. GUENTHER. Judging from the vote it seems to have been made a political question, and I am somewhat uneasy about it. As it seems to be considered a political question, I withdraw my vote.

Mr. MATSON. I ask unanimous consent to dispense with the reading of the names.

Mr. HOLMES. I object.

The following additional pairs were announced:

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question on which the House has just voted is a question of reconsideration, and a motion to reconsider that vote would not be in order.

MRS. SARAH YOUNG.

Mr. WINANS. I submit a conference report.

The Clerk read as follows:

LIGHT-HOUSE SUPPLY STEAMER.

Mr. CLARDY. I submit the report of a committee of conference.

The report was read, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 7627) providing for the construction of a light-house supply steamer for the Atlantic and Gulf coasts, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 2, and agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 1, and agree to the same with amendments as follows: In section 2 strike out all of line 3 and the first three words in line 4; after the words "New York," in line 5, insert "the cost of which shall not exceed the sum of $40,000;" in line 7, after the word "of," strike out "forty" and insert "three;" and at the end of the section add "and also to place and maintain at or near the southeast end of Hog Island Shoal, Narragansett Bay, Rhode Island, the light-ship recently withdrawn from Eel Grass Shoal;" so that the section will read: "That the Light-House Board is authorized and required to establish and maintain light-ships at the following-named places: One at or near the south end of Ram Island Reef, Fisher's Island Sound, Long Island, New York, the cost of which shall not exceed the sum of $4.000; one, the cost of which shall not exceed the sum of $3,000, to be stationed off Grosse's Point, Lake Saint Clair, Michigan, and also to place and maintain at or near the southeast end of Hog Island Shoal, Narragansett Bay, Rhode Island, the light-ship recently withdrawn from Eel Grass Shoal."

The following is the statement of the House conferees:

In the matter of conference on Senate amendments to bill H. R. 7627, providing for the construction of a light-house supply steamer for the Atlantic and Gulf coasts, the managers on the part of the House report that the second amendment relates to a change of the title of the bill made necessary by the adoption of Senate amendment numbered 1.

Senate amendment numbered 1 provided for the construction of a light-ship at or near the south end of Ram Island Reef, Fisher's Island Sound, Long Island, to which the managers on the part of the House agreed with an amendment that the cost of such light-ship shall not exceed $40,000; said amendment numbered 1 provided also for a light-ship at or near Grosse Pointe, Lake Saint Clair, Michigan, the cost of which should not exceed $40,000, to which the managers on the part of the House agreed with an amendment striking out $40,000 and inserting $3,000.

Said amendment further provided for the establishment of a light-ship at the southeast end of Hog Island Shoal, Narragansett Bay, Rhode Island, to which the managers on the part of the House agreed with an amendment directing the Light-House Board to place and maintain at such point the light-ship recently withdrawn from Eel Grass Shoal, the effect of which is to obviate the necessity of constructing a new light-ship.

MARTIN L. CLARDY.
T. E. TARSNEY.
WM. W. MORROW.

The report was adopted.

Mr. CLARDY moved to reconsider the vote just taken; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ROAD TO KNOXVILLE NATIONAL CEMETERY.

Mr. HOUK. I submit a conference report.

The Clerk read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (H. R. 5866) to construct a road to the national cemetery at Knoxville, Tenn., after a full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 1, and agree to the same.

That the Senate recede from its amendment numbered 2.

C. M. ANDERSON,
L. C. HOUK,
Managers on the part of the House.
JOHN A. LOGAN,
BENJ. HARRISON,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

Mr. SPRINGER. The report does not state the effect of the amendments.

Mr. HOUK. The effect, if the gentleman will permit me, is this: Through a mistake, General LOGAN added two amendments instead of one, having misread the Quartermaster-General's letter. We are not building the road as far as the original bill contemplated, and the first amendment cuts the road off about half way. Then, through a mistake, he made the bill read that the road should be 35 feet wide. We want it 50 feet, and the Senate agrees to that.

The conference report was adopted.

Mr. HOUK moved to reconsider the vote by which the report was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

JOHN W. FARRIS.

Mr. MORRILL. Mr. Speaker, I present a privileged report from the Committee on Invalid Pensions in relation to the bill (H. R. 5137) granting a pension to John W. Farris. I ask that the report be printed in the RECORD and lie over.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. MATSON. I ask leave to file the views of the minority in that case.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

The following is the report:

Mr. MORRILL, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, submitted the following report:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the veto message of the President of the United States on the bill (H. R. 6136) granting an increase of pension to John W. Farris, submit the following report:

This bill was considered by the Committee on Invalid Pensions and was favorably reported May 4, 1866. The bill, having passed both Houses of Congress, was presented to the President, who returned it June 21, 1886, with the following message:

To the House of Representatives:

I hereby return without approval a bill originating in the House of Representatives, entitled "An act granting an increase of pension to John W. Farris," which bill is numbered 6136.

The claimant mentioned in this bill enlisted in the month of October, 1861, and was mustered out of the service in August, 1865.

In 1881, sixteen years after his discharge, he filed an application for a pension, alleging that he was afflicted with chronic diarrhea, contracted in the Army, and in 1885 his claim was allowed and he was granted a pension for that cause.

In September of the same year, and after this pension was granted, he filed an application for an increase of his rate, alleging that in 1884, his eyes became affected in consequence of his previous ailments and the debility consequent thereupon.

The ingenuity developed in the constant and persistent attacks upon the public Treasury by those claiming pensions and the increase of those already granted is exhibited in bold relief by this attempt to include sore eyes among the results of diarrhea.

I am entirely satisfied with the opinion of the medical referee, who, after examining this case in October, 1885, reported that "the disease of the eyes can not be admitted to be a result of chronic diarrhea."

On all grounds it seems to me that this claimant should be contented with the pension which has been already allowed him.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, June 21, 1886.

[H. R. 6136. Forty-ninth Congress, first session.]

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Secretary of the Interior be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to increase the pension of John W. Farris, late first lieutenant and adjutant of the Forty-eighth Illinois Volunteers, for disease of eyes, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws.

Claimant enlisted in Company K, Forty-eighth Illinois Volunteers, being at the time only fifteen years of age. September 8, 1864, he was promoted to be second lieutenant of his company, and was afterward promoted to be first lieutenant and adjutant of his regiment, and was mustered out August 16, 1865. On September 9, 1881, he made application for a pension, alleging chronic diarrhea and general debility. January 16, 1885, this application was approved, and pension allowed for "chronic diarrhea and resulting general debility." It is shown in the evidence that he contracted measles in the service, from which he had not fully recovered when he engaged in the battle of Shiloh, where he received a gunshot wound in his head, but did not leave the field. That from the effects of the measles and the exposure at said battle he contracted chronic diarrhea from which he has suffered ever since, and for which he is now receiving a pension.

September 4, 1885, claimant filed an application for increase of pension, alleging "that since the granting of said certificate affiant's general condition has grown worse. That in July, 1884, he was taken with sore eyes, and that said sore eyes resulted from the long and aggravated general debility contracted in the Army." February 16, 1886, the application for increase was rejected on the ground that "the disease of the eyes can not be admitted as the result of chronic diarrhea."

It will be noticed that in his application for increase he alleges that the disease of his eyes was the result of the general debility contracted in the Army; the medical examiner, if your committee understand his language, denies that the disease of the eyes can be the result of chronic diarrhea. The following evidence was submitted in support of his claim. Dr. James McComb, a reputable physician of twenty years, testifies under date of January 27, 1886:

"I have frequently treated him for chronic diarrhea, and have known for many years that he was a sufferer from that disease; that in 1884, when he was first attacked with conjunctivitis, I, in connection with my partner, Dr. Billings, treated the claimant until he went to the city of Saint Louis for treatment by Dr. Michel, professor of opthalmology in Missouri Medical College; that, in my opinion, his impaired vision and protracted eye disease is the result of a chronic constitutional disability."

Dr. James M. Billings, of Lebanon, Mo., testifies, January 27, 1886:

"I have often treated claimant for chronic diarrhea, with which he was afflicted. That in 1884, when claimant was attacked with sore eyes, Dr. McComb and myself treated him until he went to Saint Louis for treatment by an oculist. That at the time I first treated the claimant for sore eyes I attributed said disease to constitutional causes, and I am now, and ever have been from that time, of the opinion that his impaired vision and protracted eye disease is the result of a vitiated constitution."

Dr. Charles E. Michel, oculist, of Missouri Medical College, certifies "that he has been treating Senator J. W. Farris for chronic conjunctivitis with granulation since January, 1885, and that I am satisfied that a vitiated constitutional condition is to blame for his impaired vision and prolonged eye affection."

The examining board of surgeons at Lebanon, Mo., report, October 21, 1885:

"We find the conjunctiva of both eyelids thickened and in a state of chronic inflammation. There is an opacity of the cornea of both eyes, resulting from ulceration, which is of the nebulous variety. The vessels of the conjunctiva of the cornea are very much enlarged. The opacity of the left cornea extends over the pupil, and almost completely obstructs the vision. That of the right eye is less extensive—about two-thirds. He can not distinguish the largest test type with the left eye, but with the right eye can distinguish it at a distance of 17 inches. He is totally incapacitated for manual labor. He is in our opinion entitled to a second-grade rating for the disability caused by chronic diarrhea resulting in general debility and sore eyes."

This evidence was carefully discussed and weighed when the case was considered by the committee. Upon the committee are two able physicians of long and extensive practice. The evidence was submitted to them, and they were requested to decide upon the merits of the question as to whether disease of the eyes would be a natural result of long-continued chronic diarrhea and general debility. They decided, after a careful consideration of the matter, that it would be, and recommended a favorable report in the case. Dr. John Swinburne, a member of this House, one of the most noted physicians of this country, a gentleman who for forty years has had a large and varied practice, who was himself a distinguished Army surgeon during the late war, and afterward at the siege of Paris, expresses himself as follows:

"My experience is that where any inflammation occurs while one is suffering from any exhausting disease, such as chronic diarrhea of years' standing, and especially those involving the eyes (conjunctivitis), the disease becomes chronic, and does not yield so long as the diarrhea continues. Also that persons suffering from chronic diarrhea, or other exhaustive ailments, are more liable to contract low forms of inflammation, and particularly the eyes (conjunctivitis)."

Your committee in considering this case had before them the evidence of five physicians, men known to be skilled in the practice of their profession—one of them a distinguished oculist, and a professor of a well-known medical college—who, after a personal examination of claimant and months of acquaintance with him, declared that they were satisfied that his disease of the eyes was the result of his "vitiated constitutional condition." The other able physicians who had examined the evidence declared that the conclusions reached by those who had examined the claimant were logical and reasonable.

On the other hand was the statement of the medical examiner, that "the disease of the eyes can not be admitted as the result of chronic diarrhea," and this was formally approved by the medical referee. Neither of them had ever seen the man, nor can your committee discover that they had any evidence before them except the affidavits of the five physicians which are set forth in this report. It was simply a question whether the opinions of two men, who had never seen a patient, should weigh more than those of five just as able and as skilled, who had personally examined him, with the judgment of three more added who had given the case just as careful thought and attention as the two had.

But there are other matters which enter into a full and fair consideration of this case. Your committee, in considering the bills that have been referred to them, have labored under the impression that they were not wholly restricted to the consideration of cases that could properly be allowed in the Pension Office, nor were they confined to the rules and regulations of that bureau, but they have assumed that they had an enlarged jurisdiction, and that upon them devolved the delicate duty of meting out justice and equity in cases where adequate relief could not be afforded under existing laws. They do not therefore deem it absolutely essential that it shall be proven with mathematical certainty that this claimant's loss of sight was entirely the result of his military service. It is probably beyond the power of human skill to trace unerringly the connection between his present disability and the days and months lengthened into years that he passed in camp and on the march or the terrible ordeals of the battlefields and the hospitals.

It is known that this man enlisted early in the war when a mere lad; that he served nearly four years, though much of the time a constant sufferer from the terrible disease which has clung to him ever since. That he was a brave and gallant soldier, and so distinguished himself by his fidelity and bravery that he won two commissions before he was twenty years of age. That he came out of the service diseased and broken down, justly entitled to a pension, which he proudly refused to accept until worn and weakened by his disability incurred in the service. That for sixteen years he cheerfully surrendered to the Government that pension to which he was justly entitled. That he has now entirely lost the sight of one eye, and that of the other is very seriously impaired. In a few more months he will probably be forever shut out from the light of the sun, and for him during the remainder of his years on earth there will only be one endless night. If this brave boy had not enlisted in the military service of the United States he would have been now, at the age of forty years, in the prime of manhood instead of being an almost helpless wreck. That Congress has the power to grant the relief asked for no one questions. That it is its duty your committee, without a dissenting voice, believe. They therefore recommend the passage of the bill, the objection of the President to the contrary notwithstanding.

The views of the minority will be submitted hereafter.

INTEROCEANIC CANAL.

Mr. BELMONT. Mr. Speaker, I desire to submit a privileged report.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The report will be read.

The report was read, as follows:

The Committee on Foreign Affairs, having had under consideration the following resolution, beg leave to report the same with an amendment in the nature of a substitute, and recommend its adoption:

"Resolved, That the President be requested, if not incompatible with the public interests, to furnish the House of Representatives with all correspondence not heretofore made public between the Government of the United States and the Republics of Nicaragua and Costa Rica since 1876 in reference to the location and construction of an interoceanic canal via San Juan River and Lake Nicaragua, and relating to the treaty or other rights of the bordering republics."

The substitute was agreed to.

The resolution as amended was then adopted.

Mr. BELMONT moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

DAVID T. ELDERKIN.

Mr. CONGER. Mr. Speaker, I desire to present a privileged report from the Committee on Invalid Pensions on the bill (H. R. 5995) granting a pension to David T. Elderkin and the President's message vetoing the same. I ask that the report be printed in the RECORD and lie over.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. MATSON. I will ask leave to file the views of the minority in that case.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

The report is as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the message of the President of the United States returning House bill 5995 with his objections thereto, report.

The veto message is as follows:

To the House of Representatives:

I return herewith without approval House bill No. 5995, entitled "An act granting a pension to David T. Elderkin."

This claimant enlisted August 5, 1862. From his record it appears that he was dishonorably discharged the service, to date from June 11, 1863, with loss of all pay, bounty, and allowances.

He filed a declaration for a pension in 1882, claiming that he was wounded in the head by a shell January 1, 1863, which cut his cheek close to his right ear, causing almost total deafness.

There is conflicting evidence as to the claimant's freedom from deafness prior to enlistment, and on a special examination it was shown that he was slightly hard of hearing before enlistment. Indeed the claimant himself stated to the special examiner and also to the board of surgeons that he had been somewhat deaf from childhood.

In 1882 an examining surgeon reports that he finds no scar or evidence of wound, but his hearing is very much impaired.

The claim was rejected in 1885 on the ground that deafness existed prior to enlistment, and also because of no ratable disability by reason of alleged wound in the cheek.

I think, considering the manner of the soldier's discharge and the facts developed, that the claimant should not be pensioned.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, June 23, 1886.

[H. R. 5995. Forty-ninth Congress, first session.]

An act granting a pension to David T. Elderkin.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Secretary of the Interior be, and hereby is, authorized to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of David T. Elderkin, late of Company K, One hundredth Regiment Illinois Infantry Volunteers.

JOHN G. CARLISLE,
Speaker of the House of Representatives
JOHN SHERMAN,
President of the Senate pro tempore.

I certify that this act originated in the House of Representatives.

Attest: JNO. B. CLARK, JR., Clerk.

The following is the military history of this soldier:

He enlisted August 5, 1862, in Company K, One hundredth Regiment Illinois Infantry Volunteers; was wounded and taken prisoner at battle of Stone River, December 31, 1863; confined in Libby prison forty-one days; paroled at Annapolis, Md., and sent to Benton barracks, Missouri, from whence, upon the advice of commander and officers, he went home with the assurance that his discharge would follow him. Not receiving it, he returned in two weeks and went home again upon same advice. His discharge was not sent him, but he never returned, being totally unfit for duty, and was never paid. On June 23, 1875, he received from the War Department a dishonorable discharge "to date from June 11, 1863, with loss of all pay, bounty, and allowance."

On October 14, 1882, he filed application for pension, alleging that at battle of Murfreesborough or Stone River, Tennessee, he received a shell wound on side of the head by a shell which had taken off the head of a fellow soldier just before it struck him, which wound has resulted in his almost total deafness, and that he was captured, &c., as above stated. This claim was rejected November 5, 1885, "on the ground that said disability existed before enlistment."

A large amount of testimony has been taken in this case, by two special examiners, and it is clearly proven that claimant was slightly deaf at enlistment, but not to such a degree as prevented his acceptance into the service by examiner, and his performance of the duties of a soldier, until wounded in battle and taken prisoner.

Special Examiner J. J. Purman, who seems to have made a very extensive and thorough examination in Illinois among claimant's old comrades, says he finds conclusive evidence that soldier was somewhat deaf at enlistment, but also finds evidence showing that he was much deafer after the battle of Stone River than before, and recommends rejection for deafness alone, but thinks claimant entitled to something for the wound and its results.

Peter M. Chisholm, of Joliet, Ill., and whose reputation and character are certified to as excellent, testifies before special examiner:

"I first got acquainted with claimant in 1859; lived just 1 mile from him; he and I enlisted about the same time. * * * At the battle of Murfreesborough claimant and myself were both taken prisoners. I was taken prisoner two or three days before the battle and he was taken at the time of the battle. While we were both prisoners at Chattanooga, Tenn., and while the battle was yet going on, I met the claimant and I could hardly make him hear, and I asked him what made him so much more deaf than he used to be, and he then told me he had got hurt in the battle of Murfreesborough. He said a cannon-ball had passed by and just grazed his head and shoulders on the left side, and that since that he could not hear as well as before. He came home from the service in June, 1863, and I was mustered out in June, 1865.

"The same summer or the fall after I came home I met claimant and he was more deaf than when I last saw him in the Army."

In another affidavit Chisholm testifies:

"In regard to the charge of desertion that is made against David Elderkin, of Company K, One hundredth Illinois Volunteer Infantry, on file in the War Department at Washington, I, Peter M. Chisholm, of Braidwood, Will County, Illinois, being duly sworn, depose and say that I was a private in Company E, One hundredth Illinois Volunteers; that I enlisted about August 18, 1862, at New Lenox, Ill., and that I am and have been intimately acquainted with David Elderkin since 1859. I knew when he enlisted and was near him on the march south from Nashville, Tenn., just before the battle of Stone River which took place January 1, 1863; that I was taken prisoner about December 28, 1862; that I did not see Elderkin again till about January 1, 1863, when he arrived a prisoner at Chattanooga, Tenn., where I was also held as a prisoner by the rebels; that we were both taken from this place to Richmond, Va., together, that when we arrived there we were separated, he going to Libby prison and I to Castle Thunder; that I saw him one day while he was in Libby prison; that I was paroled and sent to Annapolis, Md.

"After being there some ten days David Elderkin arrived, and I met him on the wharf when the boat arrived. After remaining there some time we were sent to Benton barracks, Missouri. We arrived there together on March 17, 1863. He was very deaf, and I took him to a doctor of an Illinois regiment, whose name I have since forgotten, and asked him if he could do anything for this man. The doctor examined him and said he would have to be discharged, that he was not fit for the service. Elderkin then asked for a discharge, but the doctor told him he had no orders to examine him, but that he would have to be discharged.

"Some of the officers and soldiers, to my certain knowledge, advised him to go home; that he was unfit for the service, and that if he went home his discharge would follow him. As I was a particular friend of his, he came to me to consult about the matter, and asked me what would be the result if he went home. I told him it would be all right; that they could not hurt him as he was not fit for the service. This I gave him as my opinion. He then went home, but returned in about two weeks to see about his discharge. His discharge had not arrived. So I and other soldiers then advised him to go home and report to the provost marshal and state his case to him; that he was unfit for duty, and would be discharged. I had great influence over him, and it may be that I am to blame for his going home as he did. I am willing to swear positively that he never intended to desert.

"David Elderkin was a very conscientious man, and I do not believe he could be induced to do anything he thought wrong. He was not posted as to the rules and regulations, and in this matter acted entirely on the advice of others. I was with him almost continually from the close of the battle of Stone River till he left Benton Barracks, Missouri, which was some time in June, 1863. I am no relation of David Elderkin, and have no interest whatever in the clearing up of his case."

Several other affidavits are on file showing that his hearing was much worse after he returned from the Army than it was before. He claims to have a roaring sound in his ears like musketry or artillery, which has existed ever since the wound was received, but with greater severity in last few years.

The following is taken from the examination by the full board at Waverly, Iowa, July 30, 1885:

"On percussing his head, he says, it jars all over and aches like a toothache; that the noise in his head came right on after the injury, but two years ago last spring the noises became very much exaggerated and have continued so until this time. Owing to his mental inaptitude his wife gave most of the answers to our inquiries * * * He can not hear the watch tick at the ear or in the mouth, but does hear loud conversation (his wife says a good deal by the lip movements of the speaker).

"On rough handling at the angle of the lower jaw, he says it hurts on the scarred angle, which is a little swollen. Upon the statement of claimant that the ringing in his ears commenced upon the receipt of injury, and has continued ever since, and became worse two years ago last spring, we rate on the subjective symptoms only, namely: injury to the jaw and resulting hyperesthesia of the brain and nerves. He is, in our opinion, entitled to an 8-8 total rating for the disability caused by injury to jaw and disorder of brain."

It is not an uncommon thing for persons suffering from deafness caused by such injuries as this of Elderkin's, and with such resulting ringing and roaring in their heads, to finally become insane.

This result has already come upon Daniel Elderkin, as will be seen by the following affidavit of the commissioners of insanity for Black Hawk, Iowa:

"The undersigned, Dr. D. W. Crouse and E. T. Corwin, commissioners of insanity of said county, do hereby certify that we were present at the examination of David T. Elderkin for custody and treatment as an insane person. Said Elderkin was laboring under the delusion that he saw the head of a comrade taken off by a shell in battle, &c., and that the evidence in the case, with his actions, were conclusive beyond a doubt that said Elderkin was of unsound mind."

It is also in proof that claimant is very poor, and has a wife and seven children. The following petition is on file in the case, signed by a very large number of citizens, many of them, officers and business men of the county, of the very highest character and standing:

"Your petitioners, citizens of Black Hawk County, Iowa, respectfully show that we are personally acquainted with David T. Elderkin, of Finchford, this county, formerly of Company K, One hundredth Regiment Illinois Volunteers; that he has resided in this county for a number of years; that before he became insane he was a man of truth and veracity, and any statements he then made in regard to his claim for a pension are entitled to full credit and belief. Also, that, so far as his health would permit, he has been a hard-working, industrious man up to the time his health failed and he became insane; that he has a wife and children that are dependent almost entirely on him for their support; that we believe him entitled to a pension. And will forever pray," &c.

This seems to your committee a very sad and a very meritorious case, and the only possible objection to its passage lies in the fact of his dishonorable discharge. But this seems to be fairly explained, and while technically the soldier might have been a deserter, he certainly was not in spirit or intent. Knowing that he was valueless as a soldier, upon the advice of his friends he went home, and openly remained there expecting his discharge.

The Pension Office does not seem to have considered this as a bar to his receiving a pension, else why send examiners into several States at great expense to determine the other questions involved without any reference to this.

This man was accepted into the service as sufficiently sound for enrollment. He served faithfully until wounded and taken prisoner. His disability has continued to increase until now it has developed into hopeless insanity. He never received any pay.

In view of the high character of this claimant, as testified to by the best citizens of his county, his disease and deplorable insanity, unquestionably resulting from his wound and the circumstances connected therewith, as shown by the testimony of the insane commission quoted above, and the recommendation of the Waverly examining board, your committee believe that a generous and grateful Government can and should afford the relief asked for, regardless of the formal dishonorable discharge, and therefore recommend the passage of the bill, the objections of the President to the contrary, notwithstanding.

The views of the minority will be submitted hereafter.

MRS. CATHARINE M'CARTY.

Mr. MATSON. I desire to call up the bill (H. R. 5603) granting a pension to Mrs. Catharine McCarty, and ask for its present consideration, with the message of the President stating his objections. I ask that the report be read, and also the views of the minority.

The report and the views of the minority, heretofore printed in the RECORD, were read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is, Will the House, on reconsideration, agree to pass this bill? And on that the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. MATSON] demands the previous question.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I will say to the chairman of the Committee on Invalid Pensions that I desire an opportunity to explain this bill.

Mr. MATSON. I withdraw the demand for the previous question and yield five minutes to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. CONGER. Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask the chairman of the Committee on Invalid Pensions to yield us more time for the consideration of this question. It is only just to the gentlemen who have joined in making this report that they should have time to state their reasons for recommending the passage of the bill over the veto.

Mr. MATSON. The gentlemen who have joined in the report have stated their case in their own way in the report. The gentleman from Iowa who introduced the bill [Mr. WEAVER] asks five minutes and I have yielded him that time.

Mr. CONGER. The chairman knows very well, however, that there is not an opportunity in a report of this kind to state all the circumstances of a case.

Mr. MATSON. If the report does not state all the circumstances, that certainly is not the fault of the gentleman, who did not write the report. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. WEAVER].

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I would like the close attention of the House during the few minutes that I am to speak.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. I wish to know whether, under the rules, fifteen minutes' debate are not allowed on each side?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That time is allowed where there has been no debate, but in this case there has been the reading of the report, which is in the nature of debate.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Does the reading of the report, occupying eight minutes, cut off the whole thirty minutes allowed under the rule?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The rule says that where there has been no debate there shall be thirty minutes allowed, fifteen minutes on each side; but the reading of the report is debate, and therefore this case does not come within the provisions of the rule.

Mr. BOUTELLE. It is not so understood by the House.

Mr. DINGLEY. That is rather a techical decision, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. PARKER. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. WEAVER] has the floor.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. Now, Mr. Speaker, this case had the careful consideration of the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and it passed the House. The veto message of the President has also had careful consideration, and the committee have reported this bill back with the recommendation that it do pass, the President's veto to the contrary notwithstanding. It is perfectly clear to my mind that this bill ought to pass. This soldier died while he was in the service. His widow is poor and has a large family on her hands. The circumstances attending the death must, however, control her right to a pension. In brief, they are these: The soldier was asked by one of his comrades to taste of some medicine which he had in a bottle. The soldier did taste of it and it killed him; that is all there is in this case. The medicine had been prepared for a sick soldier. It was not a case of suicide; it was purely an accident. I appeal to the soldiers present here on both sides of the House to say if they did not know in their own experience of a great many men who were killed accidentally while in the service by gunshots, and we all know that nobody ever raised a question about their widows being entitled to a pension. It would be a very hard rule, indeed, to say that this widow is not entitled to a pension under the circumstances.

This is exactly a case in which Congress ought to interfere. The widow is not entitled to a pension under the general law; by reason of its universality she is technically excluded. But the equities of the case are all with her, just as though her husband had died from any other cause than accidentally taking poison.

I think the House understands this case; and, with a proper understanding of it, I believe there is generosity and independence enough here (without intending to cast the least reflection upon the Executive) to insure the passage of this bill. The opinion of the President is the opinion of one man. It has called this House and the committee to a careful reconsideration of the bill. Such careful re-examination has now been had——

Mr. BROWN, of Pennsylvania. I would like to ask the gentleman a question before he closes. Is there any evidence in this case showing that the soldier had knowledge he was taking poison?

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. None at all. There is no evidence of any fault on his part, except that he placed confidence in a comrade who handed him the poison; and that was not a crime.

I appeal to this House to show to the country that we mean only to draw proper distinctions and that we intend to pension every one who presents an equitable claim for a pension. Suppose a physician had prescribed this medicine for this soldier and he had made a mistake in taking an overdose, would his widow be deprived of a just claim for a pension? Certainly not. Suppose somebody had poisoned a spring from which the soldier took a drink, would the widow be justly deprived of a pension? Certainly not. Here, the temptation being held out by a comrade, the soldier tasted this fluid and it killed him. Now, under these circumstances I see no reason on earth for depriving this widow of a pension, and I do not believe this House is disposed to do any such thing.

Mr. MATSON. Mr. Speaker, it is perhaps true, as the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. WEAVER] says, that the widow ought not to suffer for the negligence of her husband. She ought not to suffer on account of his negligence, unless she is claiming on account of his negligence. In this case she is claiming a pension because of her husband's death occasioned by his gross carelessness. This, it seems to me, concludes the case against her.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. How could there be "gross carelessness" on the part of the soldier when his comrade held out the fluid to him, and he himself did not know what it was?

Mr. MATSON. Because his act of drinking that fluid had nothing whatever to do with his military duty; because he had no business whatever to taste the medicine; because the evidence shows he thought it was whisky he was drinking; and because he drank a great deal more than a mere taste of it, or it would not have killed him.

Mr. CUTCHEON. Does the gentleman know how much of the fluid extract of colchicum suffices to kill a man?

Mr. MATSON. I do not.

Mr. CUTCHEON. Half a teaspoonful will do it.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. Every physician or other person having knowledge of this medical preparation knows that to the taste it is pleasant and apparently harmless. So far as the taste is concerned, it is like ordinary wine; and this man could not tell whether it was a deadly poison or not. Half a teaspoonful of that fluid, I am assured, is sufficient to cause death.

Mr. MATSON. Still, it is the fact that the soldier in drinking that liquid was not in the line of his duty. He was grossly careless in tasting it at all, simply because he was asked to taste it. More than that, he was told, as the evidence in the case shows, that it had a very peculiar taste and a very peculiar smell. He was put on his guard. After sufficient notice or warning he recklessly drank enough to kill him. He certainly was guilty of very gross negligence; and his widow is now claiming a pension because of his gross negligence. I am disposed to be as liberal, I trust and believe, toward the soldiers' widows of this country as any one ought to be; but when a widow claims a pension on account of her husband's recklessness, she must suffer the consequences of the reckless act of her husband.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. There stands beside me a celebrated physician of this country, now a member of this House, the gentleman from New York [Mr. SWINBURNE]; and he will tell the chairman of the Committee on Invalid Pensions that a glass of sherry wine and a glass of the fluid extract of colchicum are so similar to the taste that an inexperienced person could not tell the difference between them.

Mr. SWINBURNE assented.

Mr. MATSON. That may be true; I do not know anything about it. Still the fact remains that the act of the soldier in drinking that fluid had nothing whatever to do with his military duty. He was killed outside of the line of his duty just as much as if he had been engaged in some business in which he had no right to be engaged. There can not be any question about this case. More than that, as is stated in the minority report, Hon. Wayne MacVeagh, when Attorney-General of the United States, gave an opinion on this case, showing clearly that under the circumstances stated the widow could not have a claim for a pension.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. We concede that under the general law there is no right to a pension.

Mr. MATSON. There is no right under any law.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. But there is under the equities of the case.

Mr. MATSON. No; not under the equities.

Mr. HENDERSON of Iowa. Suppose that the soldier had been accidentally shot in the camp?

Mr. MATSON. That would be a different case altogether.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. Can you discover any real difference in principle?

Mr. MATSON. I can. If the soldier had been shot while in camp, while engaged in the line of his duty and as a result of the pursuit of duty, his widow would undoubtedly be entitled to a pension.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. Substantially the fact here is that this soldier's comrade did shoot him—not with a gun but with poison.

Mr. MATSON. The comrade did not "shoot him;" this soldier took the poison himself.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. But he took it under false pretenses; he supposed he was taking something harmless.

Mr. JOHNSTON, of Indiana. Will the gentleman from Indiana yield to me for a question?

Mr. MATSON. I will.

Mr. JOHNSTON, of Indiana. Let me inquire whether the gentleman from Indiana had those views when he reported this bill or whether he has entertained them only since the reception of the President's veto message?

Mr. MATSON. I do not remember anything about the bill; whether I was present or not I can not say; but whether I was or not does not make any difference to me. When I come to reconsider a case, if I find I am wrong I have sense enough to see it, and if on examination I find I am wrong I will say so.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. You were right then but wrong now.

Mr. MATSON. It may be a mere difference of opinion. Now, Mr. Speaker, I demand the previous question.

Mr. BURROWS. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. CANNON. Let me first ask a question. The other day we passed a Mexican pension bill putting the widows of Mexican soldiers on the pension-roll without reference to disability.

Mr. CUTCHEON. Without reference to service.

Mr. CANNON. Does not the gentleman think it is quite as proper for us to put this unfortunate woman, the widow of a soldier, upon the pension-roll under the circumstances which have been stated?

Mr. MATSON. In reply to that question of the gentleman from Illinois, all I have to say is that what may be proper to do under general legislation it may be improper to do in special cases.

Mr. CUTCHEON. The reverse exactly is the truth.

Mr. MATSON. When you come to put all the widows of the last war on the pension-roll without regard to the cause of the death of the soldier, you present an entirely different question from selecting out one widow who can not trace her husband's death as having been caused in the service. That is an entirely different question.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. He would have been supporting her now if he had not been in the service.

Mr. BURROWS. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. MILLS in the chair). The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BURROWS. My parliamentary inquiry is in reference to the question of recognition. This is the second veto message upon which we have been called to vote, and in both instances the gentleman from Indiana has taken the floor and demanded the previous question.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That has been because he is the chairman of the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Mr. BURROWS. I have not yet stated the whole question. When a gentleman on the part of a committee takes charge of a matter it is supposed he is a member of the majority of the committee which has signed the report in favor of the bill, but when it turns out that he does not belong to the majority of the committee but has on the contrary signed the views of the minority, I submit, then, as a matter of parliamentary practice, that some member on the part of a majority of the committee which makes the report should first be recognized for the purpose of demanding the previous question and not any gentleman who has signed the views of the minority. Hereafter I hope the Chair will recognize some one who signs the majority report. [Cries of "Vote!"]

Mr. CUTCHEON. Every bill should be in the hands of its friends and not in the hands of its enemies.

Mr. BURROWS. Some one should be recognized who represents not the views of the minority but the views of the majority.

Mr. REED, of Maine. I submit this is a serious question, because the member who is recognized by the Chair is the one who is entitled to call for the previous question, and therefore regulates in the first instance the debate. It is a very important privilege and ought not to be granted to any one opposed to the bill. It is not pretended that the gentleman from Indiana represents the majority in this matter.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It has been the parliamentary custom to recognize the chairman of the committee which makes the report.

Mr. BOUTELLE. He did not make the report at all.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. The gentleman does not say he represents the majority of the committee.

Mr. BOUTELLE. But, on the contrary, he is opposed to the report of the majority.

Mr. CUTCHEON. Why should he have the control when he says himself that he is opposed to it?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman appeal from the decision of the Chair?

Mr. CUTCHEON. I do.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. I wish to say one word.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Gentlemen will take their seats.

Mr. McMILLIN. I rise to a point of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. McMILLIN. I make the point of order that no appeal from the decision of the Chair on the question of recognition can be taken.

Mr. SPRINGER. I say very frankly, while I do not agree with the Chair, that the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. MATSON] is entitled to make the report, although he was in the minority, and that it is a question this House has nothing to do with. The Speaker recognized him, and recognized him to move the previous question, and therefore he had a right to make the motion, and that is all there is of it.

Mr. CANNON. No Chair can do that thing with impunity or without a protest.

Mr. SPRINGER. It is not a question that comes before the House at all.

I will vote with you gentlemen against ordering the previous question, so that a member representing the majority report may be recognized to control the debate thereafter. That is the only way to do it. You can not appeal from the decision of the Chair on a question of recognition.

Mr. REED, of Maine. I thought the House would not permit a matter of this kind to be controlled by a man who has not the affirmative of the question. I do not think the ordinary parliamentary proceedings would justify it; and I am glad to see the gentleman from Illinois has come to the rescue of the proprieties on this occasion.

Mr. BLAND. But there was no objection to the recognition. When the gentleman from Indiana rose, that was the time to make the objection. It is now too late.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. I want to make a remark. I appeal to the members of the House in disposing of this question to leave party out of the question. It is no party question; it is only whether this poor widow shall have the pension or not.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is upon the appeal from the decision of the Chair.

Mr. SPRINGER. I hope the Chair will not entertain the appeal.

Mr. McMILLIN. I have already made the point of order that the Chair can not entertain such an appeal. There is not an instance on record where such a thing has been done under such circumstances.

Mr. SPRINGER. I hope the gentleman from Michigan will withdraw the appeal.

Mr. CUTCHEON. It is not a question of recognition at all, but the right of a man who signed a minority report to take control of a bill as against the majority of the committee. I do not want a minority to succeed in cutting the throat of a bill reported by a majority of the committee in this manner. It is against that that I enter my protest.

Mr. RANDALL. Mr. Speaker, I submit that the gentleman from Indiana who is chairman of the Committee on Invalid Pensions was permitted to make this report by consent of the majority of this committee, and that no one has a right to complain of his being recognized in that relation.

Mr. BURROWS. But it was supposed when he made the report that he was in favor of it. It turns out now, before we are through with the question, that the gentleman who made the report and held out to the House that he was in favor of it signed a minority report. That report was read, and immediately thereupon he demanded the previous question.

Mr. MATSON. How did the gentleman from Michigan get the idea that I favored either of these bills?

Mr. BURROWS. Why, that was the understanding clearly on the floor.

Mr. MATSON. How? By simply calling them up?

Mr. BURROWS. Certainly.

Mr. McKINLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask the indulgence of the House for one moment on this subject. I ask to read from page 326 of the Manual:

> By parliamentary courtesy the member upon whose motion a subject is brought before the House is first entitled to the floor. So, too, it is an invariable practice of the Speaker, at every new stage of a bill, or proposition, to recognize first the member who has had charge of it, even if another member addressed him first, provided he is competitor for the floor.

Now, I am quite sure that the gentleman occupying the chair to-day wants to do no injustice to the rules of the House or to the parliamentary rules of procedure which govern all parliamentary bodies. I hope he will reconsider the decision and recognize some gentleman who favors the proposition before the House.

Mr. RANDALL. If I understand the condition of the question, no one else was recognized or was seeking recognition. There was no other competitor of the chairman of the Committee on Invalid Pensions who called the bill up.

Mr. HOLMES. I desire to say that I was a competitor. It was my bill; and further I want to say that the preceding bill, which came before the House in the same manner, the same minority, reported in the same words almost that they used in this bill, was unfairly treated by cutting off debate; and I want to show the pernicious effects of that ruling. Now, can the chairman of the committee get up and cut off debate, only allowing it, so far as he is concerned, saying we should not have further debate, after first agreeing in open House that debate may be had upon such points as any member wished to address to the House, and yet when I signify my desire to discuss the matter he demanded the previous question? Even after that he allowed a gentleman on the Democratic side to get up and make remarks after the previous question was called, but allows no explanation of the preceding bill involving the same points.

Mr. BLAND. I want to ask the gentleman, so as to have an understanding on this point, did he claim the floor as against the chairman?

Mr. HOLMES. I had a right to the floor.

Mr. RANDALL. But you did not assert it.

Mr. HOLMES. I asserted my right and tried to get it; but the previous question was sustained, and by a failure to secure an explanation of some of the facts in connection with the bill it was probably lost.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman was not entitled to the floor only by the courtesy of the Chair, for the reason that the Chair then had the floor to state the pending question.

The Chair will again state his understanding of the parliamentary law to be that the majority, as organized on the floor, have the right to bring in and take control of measures, and as soon as it is demonstrated by a vote on the floor that a majority is against the party proposing the measure, it is the duty of the Chair to recognize a gentleman then acting with the majority.

Mr. REED, of Maine. What party does the Speaker refer to?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The majority party.

Mr. REED, of Maine. Political party?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The majority party.

Mr. REED, of Maine. Political party?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The majority party as demonstrated by a vote on the question.

Mr. BOUTELLE. There has been no vote on this question.

Mr. REED, of Maine. But the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. CONGER] represented the majority party. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is: Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the House?

The question being put, the Speaker pro tempore stated that the "ayes" seemed to have it.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I call for a division.

Mr. REED, of Maine, and others. What is the question we are voting on?

The House again divided; and there were—ayes 93, noes none.

Mr. REED, of Maine. No quorum.

Mr. PERKINS. When the Chair has not the courtesy to state the proposition to the House, how can we vote?

Mr. BURROWS. We tried to get from the Chair a statement of what was the question.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question was on an appeal from a decision of the Chair.

Mr. PETTIBONE. We did not hear it.

Mr. BURROWS. What was the pending motion? Was there not a motion to lay the appeal on the table?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair does not remember.

Mr. BURROWS. That was the motion that was made.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question was on sustaining the decision of the Chair, and that was the question submitted. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. MATSON] has demanded the previous question. As many as are in favor——

Mr. CANNON. The point of no quorum was made.

Mr. BURROWS. The point was made on the last vote that no quorum had voted.

Mr. PAYNE. As I understand, the last vote was on the question of sustaining the decision of the Chair. No quorum voted, and the question of no quorum was raised.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. There was so much confusion in the House that the Chair did not understand that the point of no quorum was insisted on. The Chair will order tellers, and appoints the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BURROWS] and the gentleman from Indidiana [Mr. MATSON].

Mr. BURROWS (one of the tellers). On what question is the House now to vote?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. On the question whether the decision of the Chair shall stand as the judgment of the House.

Mr. CANNON. What was the decision of the Chair?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is: Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the House?

Mr. CANNON. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. CRISP. The House is dividing. I call for the regular order.

Mr. CANNON. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry, and also to raise a point of order. I want to know what the decision of the Chair was?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The decision of the Chair was that the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. MATSON] had control of the measure, and the Chair recognized the gentleman from Indiana to call up and conduct the progress of the bill as it passed through the House; from which decision an appeal was taken.

Mr. REED, of Maine. The Chair, as I understand, did not make the decision, but merely answered a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair gave a decision, and an appeal was taken from it by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BURROWS].

Mr. REED, of Maine. The Chair merely answered a parliamentary inquiry.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 91, noes none.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. I hope there will be no more filibustering on this pension bill. Let gentlemen come forward and vote.

Mr. BURROWS. I do not insist on the point of no quorum.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The "ayes" have it, and the decision of the Chair is sustained by the House.

Several members called "No quorum!"

Mr. MATSON. I want to say a word about this before we proceed any further. [Cries of "Regular order!"] I want to explain the reason—— [Cries of "Regular order!"] I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The House will come to order. Gentlemen will be seated.

Mr. MATSON. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry. Has the previous question been ordered?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The previous question has been demanded but a quorum did not vote.

Several MEMBERS. There was no vote taken on that question.

Mr. MATSON. I ask the indulgence of the House for a few moments——

Mr. REED, of Maine. You can withdraw the demand for the previous question.

Mr. MATSON. I do so for the purpose of saying this—— [Cries of "Regular order!"]

Mr. BLAND. I rise to make a privileged motion. I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. I hope that will be voted down.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 39, noes 94.

So the House refused to adjourn.

Mr. BLAND. I move that the House take a recess until 8 o'clock. We are doing nothing and there is no disposition to do anything.

Mr. RANDALL. I think a little calmness on both sides may bring us to an amicable result.

The motion for a recess was not agreed to.

Mr. REED, of Maine. The parliamentary law about this matter is perfectly clear if we do not confuse it. It is that the member who represents a majority of the committee has a right to be recognized to control a measure until the House indicates the contrary by its vote.

Mr. RANDALL. I ask the gentleman from Maine whether in this instance the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. MATSON] was not without competitor recognized as exponent of the committee?

Mr. REED, of Maine. I can not answer that question.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana, addressed the Chair.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED] has the floor.

Mr. REED, of Maine. This question arose from the answer which the Chair gave to a parliamentary inquiry made by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CUTCHEON]. That answer, I think, was not in accordance with what I have stated to be the parliamentary law, and which, I think, will generally be agreed to be the parliamentary law on the subject. It was upon that statement that the confusion arose as to whether the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. MATSON] was recognized without a competitor or not.

Mr. RANDALL. As he had been in all the prior cases.

Mr. REED, of Maine. But it is very undesirable that such a statement as that should go as the decision of the Chair and sanctioned as the decision of the House. And I think upon reflection, especially after what has been read by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. MCKINLEY], the Chair will see that the parliamentary proprieties and parliamentary rules require that the member who represents the majority of the committee should be recognized if there is a competition. And it is very possible that there may have been a misunderstanding on the part of the Chair as to the question, or a temporary misunderstanding as to parliamentary law. We want to get out of this in some sensible sort of way, and we want to do it in accordance with well-known and-well understood parliamentary law. I ask the gentlemen on the other side if I have misstated the rule.

Mr. RANDALL. Let us say a word on the other side. The Chair had recognized the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. MATSON] on all these veto cases, as far as I recollect, without controversy.

Mr. CONGER. If the gentleman will permit me, as the member of the Committee on Invalid Pensions who made this report, I had been seeking recognition of the Chair on the bill that was called up before, and as soon as it was disposed of I attempted to attract the attention of the Chair.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair first recognized the chairman of the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and he yielded to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. CONGER].

Mr. CONGER. Then, after the chairman of the Committee on Invalid Pensions was recognized to call up this bill, I asked that he give time to this side of the House for its discussion, which he refused.

Mr. RANDALL. As I understand the fact, since these cases began to be taken up for consideration the chairman of the Committee on Invalid Pensions has been recognized. In pursuance of that, the Chair again recognized him on this bill. Now, if the chairman of the committee does not represent the majority that fact will be developed immediately.

Mr. REED, of Maine. But does not the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] agree with me as to the parliamentary rule with regard to recognition by the Chair?

Mr. RANDALL. I agree with you exactly in this, that we ought to get out of this tangle; but I do not agree with you in any act or any word which would reflect upon the Chair as not following the parliamentary rule.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair has no pride in this matter at all. The Chair wants to do what is right.

Mr. RANDALL. I know that.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. MATSON], as chairman of the Committee on Invalid Pensions, the Chair thinks, ought to have control of the bills called up by that committee in the House.

Mr. LONG. Even if he does not represent the majority of the committee?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If he calls up a bill as to which he is in the minority, he can yield to some member of the committee who is in the majority; but how can the Chair know, when the gentleman calls up a bill, whether he is in the minority or not?

Mr. REED, of Maine. I submit that the Chair can not know that in advance, but when another gentleman seeks recognition and the fact becomes apparent that the majority is the other way, then, according to parliamentary usage, the Chair is bound to recognize that gentleman. I am aware—and probably that is what has misled the Chair in this matter—that it is the custom when a bill belonging to a particular committee is called up, for the chairman of that committee to take the floor and yield it to some other member of the committee who may have the bill specially in charge; but when there is a case of dispute as to who represents the majority of the committee, or rather when the fact is clearly developed that the chairman does not represent the majority, then he is not entitled to control the floor, because the principle of parliamentary law governs that a man ought to be allowed to manage the case which he is in favor of until the House manifests itself against it, when the control passes to the other side.

Now, I desire above all things not to have anything occur here in the nature of a personal reflection upon the Chair, though I do not suppose the Chair cares anything about it——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair can stand it.

Mr. REED, of Maine. This is one of those mistakes that sometimes occur in the hurly-burly of the proceedings of the House, and we desire to rectify it by going back to the sound principle which ought to govern in such cases.

Mr. BURROWS. Let me say further in this connection that in this case the Chair had no difficulty in determining that the chairman of the Committee on Invalid Pensions did not represent the majority, because as soon as the report and the views of the minority were read it became apparent to the Chair and to the House that the chairman belonged to the minority of the committee.

Mr. BLAND. I think the trouble arose in this way: The Speaker had been recognizing the chairman of the Committee on Invalid Pensions in all these cases and no other gentleman on the committee had claimed the floor until this controversy came up, but then the claim was made.

Mr. REED, of Maine. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. CONGER] had claimed the floor.

Mr. BLAND. Then after the Speaker had recognized the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. MATSON] the gentleman from Michigan arose——

Mr. HOLMES. Mr. Speaker, I wish to say that the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] labors under an error in this matter. The fact is that the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. CONGER] who represented the majority of the committee on this bill, and had the bill in charge, sought to obtain the floor before the chairman was recognized at all, and had promised to yield to me. Therefore, I say the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] is in error in asserting that nobody had claimed the floor in antagonism to the chairman of the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Mr. REED, of Maine. Now, Mr. Speaker, I suggest as a way to get out of this difficulty that the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. MATSON] withdraw his demand for the previous question and turn the case over to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. CONGER], who represents the majority of the committee.

Mr. SPRINGER. I suggest that my friend from Indiana, in a spirit of conciliation, yielding the questions that have been raised here as having arisen under a misapprehension, had better withdraw his demand for the previous question and let the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. CONGER] be recognized, and that will relieve the whole difficulty.

Mr. REED, of Maine. Yes; that will do it.

Mr. MATSON. I withdrew the demand for the previous question a while ago, and asked to be heard for a minute; but that side of the House hooted me down and would not listen to me. I will not withdraw it until I have had an opportunity to say how and why I took the lead in this matter.

Now, Mr. Speaker, if the gentlemen are willing to hear what I have to say—and nearly everybody has had his say in relation to this matter except me—I am perfectly willing to withdraw the demand for the previous question.

Mr. CUTCHEON. I rise to a point of order.

Mr. MATSON. Mr. Speaker, about one week ago——

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. I have a right to know, and I insist on my right to know, whether the demand for the previous question has been withdrawn or not.

Mr. MATSON. I have not withdrawn it.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I demand the regular order until it is withdrawn.

Mr. MATSON. Then upon the gentleman from Ohio is the responsibility for refusing to consider these pension bills.

Mr. BLAND. I rise to a privileged motion. I move that the House adjourn.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The House will be in order. The Chair has sustained the point made by the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. BLAND. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion of Mr. BLAND was not agreed to.

The question being taken on ordering the previous question, there were—ayes 83, noes 105.

Mr. MATSON. I call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. SPRINGER. I hope that will not be insisted upon.

Mr. MATSON. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Will the Chair state the question?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on ordering the previous question upon the passage of the bill, notwithstanding the objections of the President.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 117, nays 111, not voting 94; as follows:

So the previous question was ordered.

Mr. GUENTHER. I am paired on all political questions with the gentleman from New York [Mr. MULLER]. I have voted, but have since come to the conclusion that this is a political question. I therefore withdraw my vote.

The following additional pairs were announced:

Mr. HUDD with Mr. WHITING, on this vote.

Mr. COWLES with Mr. JOHNSTON, of Indiana, for this day, not to include the vote on pension bills.

Mr. LORE with Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania, until Monday next.

The following members were announced as paired for the rest of the day:

Mr. MAHONEY with Mr. STEWART, of Vermont.

Mr. DAVIDSON, of Florida, with Mr. KETCHAM.

Mr. CALDWELL with Mr. COOPER.

The result of the vote was announced as above stated.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The previous question having been ordered, the question is now on the passage of this bill notwithstanding the objections of the President. Before putting the question the Chair desires to make a statement.

The Chair had been recognizing the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. MATSON], the chairman of the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to indicate what pension bills should be taken up and to conduct the proceedings of the House thereon. The gentleman from Indiana had called up the pending bill and was proceeding with its management when a point of order was made or a parliamentary question asked in regard to the right of the gentleman from Indiana to recognition. The Chair at the time did not comprehend exactly the import of that question. The Chair thought the point made was as to the propriety of recognizing the gentleman from Indiana every time to call up these bills, and did not understand the point to be that the gentleman from Indiana, representing in this case a minority of the committee, had no right to make a report to the House; that only the majority of the committee can make an official report, the minority being recognized merely by the courtesy of the House to submit their views. If the Chair had comprehended the real issue raised, the ruling would have been different, but the confusion in the House was so great that the point did not get into the head of the Chair at the proper time. [Laughter.]

The Chair now rules that decision was wrong and retracts it. [Applause.] Hereafter when the majority makes a report the Chair will recognize a member of the majority to conduct the business of the House.

Mr. HOLMES. I ask the proposition of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] be adopted by unanimous consent, and we go back to the preceding bill and allow a statement to be made to the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. This bill is not through with.

Mr. BLAND. I demand the regular order. The Chair was right, as no one claimed the floor on that bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is, Will the House, on reconsideration, pass the bill, notwithstanding the objections of the President?

On that question the Constitution requires the vote to be taken by yeas and nays.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 124, nays 97, not voting 101; as follows:

YEAS—124.

Adams, G. E.	Bunnell,	Eldredge,	Goff,
Allen, C. H.	Burleigh,	Ellsberry,	Grosvenor,

On motion of Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana, by unanimous consent, the reading of the names was dispensed with.

Mr. WARD, of Indiana, with Mr. WHITING, on this vote.

Mr. LOWRY with Mr. KELLEY, for the remainder of the day.

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. MCCOOK, its Secretary, announced the passage of bills of the following titles without amendment:

A bill (H. R. 1580) for the relief of Emily B. Baker;

A bill (H. R. 3363) granting a pension to Jennette Dow;

A bill (H. R. 5705) granting a pension to Charles Wyant;

A bill (H. R. 5921) granting an increase of pension to John Ryan;

A bill (H. R. 6747) granting a pension to Mary A. Thomas; and

A bill (H. R. 7193) granting a pension to Sarah A. Tucker.

It further announced the passage of bills of the following titles; in which concurrence was requested:

A bill (S. 1531) granting increase of pension to William Winans;

A bill (S. 2259) to increase the pension of Thomas Chapman;

A bill (S. 2369) granting an increase of pension to William H. H. Price;

A bill (S. 2562) granting a pension to Henry F. Kaiser;

A bill (S. 2598) granting a pension to James Noyes; and

A bill (S. 2705) granting a pension to Frank W. Tubbesing.

It further requested the return of the bill (H. R. 5093) for the relief of Mary E. Carey.

It further announced that the Senate insisted on its amendments numbered 2, 17, 88, 179, and 180 to the bill (H. R. 8974) making appropriation for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887, and for other purposes, disagreed to by the House, and agreed to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses, and had appointed Mr. ALLISON, Mr. DAWES, and Mr. COCKRELL as managers of said conference on its part.

JOSEPH ROMISER.

Mr. MATSON. I now call up House bill 1059, to grant a pension to Joseph Romiser, and ask that it may be considered in connection with the President's message. In this connection I call for the reading of the report, which is unanimous.

Mr. McCOMAS. Permit me to suggest to the chairman of the Committee on Invalid Pensions that as the report is unanimous I think it would be entirely acceptable to the House to have a statement by the gentleman who made the report, and then by the chairman of the Committee on Invalid Pensions as to the facts, which are few, and it would save the time occupied in the reading of the report and the affidavits, the report itself being quite lengthy.

Mr. MATSON. I apprehend that the best information the House could have would be the reading of the report. After that, if the gentleman from Kansas wishes to make a statement, and the gentleman from Maryland desires that I shall make a statement, I will do so.

Mr. McCOMAS. These affidavits and the report are all printed in full in the RECORD of the 14th instant, and every member could have seen them on the day before yesterday. Many have already read the affidavits and the report. I am confident, if the chairman of the committee will allow me, that a brief statement of the gentleman who made the report, and then by the chairman of the committee, would be amply satisfactory.

Mr. MATSON. I am disposed to submit to the suggestion of the gentleman from Maryland.

Mr. REAGAN. That is, I suppose it is to be permitted to have a discussion of the bill by two persons who favor its passage and not to have the report read.

Mr. MATSON. I shall not ask the previous question if any gentleman desires to be heard. I withdraw the demand for the reading of the report, and yield five minutes to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. MORRILL].

Mr. MORRILL. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call the attention of the House to two points in this case very briefly. First, I wish to say that it is unanimously reported from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, who have considered the case. The President in submitting his veto message had no papers before him upon which to base a proper conclusion in reference to the merits of the claim, as I shall now show. He vetoed it in fact because there were no papers furnished him to sustain it. The Pension Bureau reported that the records showed no application as having been made for a pension in this case. This happened not to be true.

The Committee on Invalid Pensions had before them the papers when they made the original report in that case, and returned those papers to the Pension Office on the 16th day of May. Afterward when the veto message came in they again sent for the papers and carefully examined them, and on those papers made the report. So the veto was based upon an entire misapprehension of the facts. I feel confident that if these papers had been before the President the veto message would never have been written.

The simple facts of the case, Mr. Speaker, are these: This gentleman belonged to a company of provisional volunteers raised in Frostburg, Md., in June, 1861. An attack was impending on the Union forces at Cumberland, Md., and the proper authorities called upon the provisional companies in the neighborhood to come to their relief.

The Union forces were then under the command of Col. Lew. Wallace, of the Eleventh Indiana Volunteers, and stationed at that point. This company, in obedience to the call, marched to Cumberland. After reaching that point, and while standing in the line facing the enemy with their arms in their hands, by the accidental discharge of a musket this man Joseph Romiser was terribly wounded in the head, the ball entering the back part of his head on the left side, passing through the head and coming out through the cheek under the left eye, entirely destroying the hearing of one ear and the sight of one of his eyes. It is true that he never was regularly mustered into the United States service, but it is also true that this Government has uniformly recognized the principle that any man wounded in its defense, whether mustered in or regularly enlisted, a citizen serving for the moment in the United States forces, would be entitled to relief under the pension laws. In 1866 a law was passed giving cases of this kind——

Mr. REAGAN. How long has such a principle been in force when a man was not in the service at all?

Mr. MORRILL. The law passed in 1866 provides that—

Any person not an enlisted soldier in the Army, serving for the time being as a member of the militia of any State, under orders of an officer of the United States, or who volunteered for the time being to serve with any regularly organized military or naval forces of the United States, or who otherwise volunteered and rendered service in any engagement with rebels or Indians, disabled in consequence of wounds or injury received in the line of duty in such temporary service.

Mr. SOWDEN. On what grounds was this claim originally rejected at the Pension Office?

Mr. MORRILL. Because it was filed after the limitation had expired. The law of 1866 provided that all applications for pensions under it must be presented by or before 1868. In 1873 an act was passed extending the time for the presentation of such claims until July 4, 1874. Mr. Romiser failed to make application within the time, which was very limited. In 1879 he made his application, and the proof is overwhelming that the accident occurred as I have said. There is absolutely no question about the matter.

Mr. REAGAN. Then why did not the Department allow it?

Mr. MORRILL. Because he made it five years after the limitation had expired. The limitation for proving up these cases expired on the 4th of July, 1874. He did not know the law which was in force from 1868 to 1873.

Mr. LONG. Is it not the fact that the Department say they are "constrained to refuse?"

Mr. MORRILL. The Department in their refusal to grant the application say:

This office was constrained under the provisions of law, especially paragraph 4693 Revised Statutes, to reject the claim, applicant having never been regularly enrolled and having failed to make and complete his application prior to date of limitation established by said section, namely, July 4, 1874.

It has been the universal custom of Congress to grant pensions in cases of this kind. We have invariably at this session and in the preceding sessions of Congress granted pensions to the members of the Missouri militia who were wounded under similar circumstances. And more than that, the present President has signed bills of that kind.

Mr. REAGAN. In cases where the parties were wounded by accident?

Mr. MORRILL. Yes; where they were wounded by accident and not in battle.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MATSON. I yield the gentleman five minutes more.

Mr. MORRILL. I call to mind one or two cases where men were injured by the discharge of fire-arms in the hands of their own comrades. The President has signed bills of that kind.

It has never been a condition that men must be regularly mustered into the United States service in order to be entitled to pensions. It is only necessary to establish that he was serving in the defense of his country and under legitimate authority. There can be no question this man was under the command of General Lew. Wallace, of the Eleventh Indiana Volunteers, who was regularly mustered in the service.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. I understand this application was made to the Pension Bureau and was denied by the Commissioner of Pensions?

Mr. MORRILL. The case was rejected by the Commissioner of Pensions on the ground that the limitation had expired.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. In the opinion of the committee ought the claim to have been allowed under the law at the time it was made?

Mr. MORRILL. It could not be allowed under the existing law, because the law provided all cases of this kind had to be presented before the 4th of July, 1874.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. Is this, then, the allowance of a pension that ought to have been denied under the law?

Mr. MORRILL. We have many cases of that kind. The only difficulty was that the man failed to put in his application in time.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. Now, what is the difference between allowing this case in contravention of existing law and allowing the case that has just been denied?

Mr. McCOMAS. I suggest to the gentleman that we had better try one case at a time.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. I want to know the distinction which the committee make.

Mr. McCOMAS. And I want the pension for this man.

Mr. MORRILL. This man was terribly wounded in the line of duty. In the other case the man met his death by an act of carelessness on his own part. I think that will be admitted as to a man who drank excessively of that medicine so as to cause his death. But in this case there was no carelessness on the part of the applicant.

Mr. McADOO. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. MORRILL. Yes, sir.

Mr. McADOO. What is the custom in the Pension Bureau as to granting pensions in cases of accident like this?

Mr. MORRILL. Where the cases have been presented before the expiration of the limitation there has been no question about the granting of pensions in such cases.

Mr. OATES. Suppose a man in performing or attempting to perform an order fires at the enemy and shoots one of his comrades, that is accidental?

Mr. MORRILL. Yes, sir.

Mr. OATES. And the man is wounded while fully in the line of duty?

Mr. MORRILL. Yes; while fully in the line of duty. I thank the gentleman from Alabama for calling my attention to that fact. That is exactly this case. While this man's comrade was removing under orders the cap from his gun it was accidentally discharged, and this man received his terrible wound. The case is so clear that there ought not to be a single objection to the passage of the bill.

Mr. WILLIS. Well, let us put it through without more talk. It appears that the President had not these papers before him, and therefore could not pass on the merits of the case.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. How was it the President was not aware of these facts?

Mr. MORRILL. The Pension Department, through a mistake, had notified the President that there were no papers.

Mr. REAGAN. This is a case where it appeared the applicant was not actually mustered in the service. While that was an objection on the part of the Pension Office the proof seems to have satisfied the committee that he was actually in the service. I will not, therefore, regard that as an objection to his receiving the pension.

But the proof also shows that he was wounded by accident. Now, what I wish to call attention to is the fact that being wounded by accident, not being wounded in battle, not being wounded strictly in the line of duty, his case is the same as that of any other citizen at home in any vocation who may be similarly wounded.

Mr. MORRILL. Will the gentleman allow me to interrupt him a moment? The gentleman states this man was not in the line of duty. That is completely contradicted by the proof. He was standing in the ranks at the time he received his wound.

Mr. REAGAN. I know the gentleman relies on the fact that the man was in the service, although not mustered into the service, and on that account he says he received the wound when he was in the line of duty. Now, a wound or disability is only received in the line of duty when the wound is received in battle or the disease is contracted in the service.

He may contract a disease in the service that will disqualify him to support himself or his family. He may receive a wound in the service that will disqualify him to support himself or his family. But a wound received by accident is not, in the sense of the law, a wound received in the line of duty. If a person, being an enrolled soldier, is entitled to a pension because of a wound or injury received, not in the line of duty but by accident, the question is, will not the same disability received by accident by any citizen at any place, in any vocation in life, entitle him to a pension? I do not care to argue the question. I simply wish to call attention to the fact that this bill proposes to introduce the principle of pensioning a man who has been enlisted in the Army if, by accident—not by disease contracted in the service, not by a wound received in the line of duty—but if by accident he has been wounded or injured. That is the principle that is asserted by this bill, and it is one which it seems to me ought not to be approved by Congress.

Mr. MILLIKEN. Was not this man wounded in obeying orders?

Mr. REAGAN. I do not understand that a wound received by accident in this way is a wound received in obeying orders.

Mr. MILLIKEN. But was he not in the ranks and under orders at the time he received the wound?

Mr. REAGAN. O, Mr. Speaker, I understand, without reference to all these questions, that the gentleman from Maine [Mr. MILLIKEN] is in favor of pensioning anybody, and I did not make the point I have made with the expectation of defeating the passage of the bill, but simply because I felt it my duty to present the point to the House.

Mr. MATSON. Mr. Speaker, I will now yield two minutes to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE].

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, the language of the act which allows the granting of pensions to persons who, not having been mustered into the service, may still receive pension, is that they may receive it "in consequence of wounds or injuries received in the line of duty in such temporary service."

The wound in this case was received in June, 1861. It was received when the man was actually in line of battle, with his arm in his hand, awaiting an attack. While he was in that position a minie-ball from a musket in the hands of a comrade in the same company inflicted the injury under which he has since suffered and is now suffering. It seems to me, with great deference to my friend from Texas [Mr. REAGAN], that it would be a very rigorous rule which would construe the three words "line of duty" as meaning that that man was not actually in the line of duty when he was standing in the ranks ready to receive an attack. While he was so standing he was shot by a bullet from the gun of a comrade standing behind him, which was accidentally discharged, and it seems to me quite clear that that wound was received while he was in the line of duty.

I feel, Mr. Speaker, that I ought to vote, as far as it is consistent with the law, to give pensions to persons who in my judgment have performed real service to the Government, giving the benefit of the doubt to the claimant, and not against him. I vote with a good deal of reluctance to pension a drafted man who was brought into the service late in the war; but for a soldier who went in at the tap of the drum in June, 1861, when none of us knew much about technical rules of mustering in, and was at that time wounded, I am certainly inclined to vote, and there would have to be a pretty clear case against him to make me say that that sort of a man should not have a pension. As I understand the case, the ground upon which he is debarred from receiving a pension is purely technical. The limitation of the law cuts him out. I certainly do not feel like pleading the statute of limitations against that soldier. [Applause on both sides of the House.]

Mr. REAGAN. I desire to ask the gentleman from Kentucky a question if he will permit me.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. Certainly.

Mr. REAGAN. I will ask the gentleman if there has ever been a law passed which, in his opinion, contemplated the idea of a man being pensioned who was wounded by accident?

Mr. MATSON. Oh, certainly.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I will answer the question frankly. I can not answer it yes or no, because "accident" is in itself an ambiguous word; but I would not hesitate to pension a man who received a wound by an accident that might naturally have occurred while he was in the line of duty.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. Will the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE] permit me to read a few lines from the opinion of the Attorney-General in the McCarty case to show what may be done or what may happen "in the line of duty?"

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. Yes, sir.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. The Attorney-General writes to the Secretary of the Interior:

> His widow has applied for a pension, and you inquire whether his death was connected with the military service in such a manner as to justify the allowance of a pension. It does not appear, either in your letter or through the papers transmitted, what were the circumstances under which this mistake occurred. If he were an inmate of the hospital at the time, and took this medicine instead of some that had been prescribed for himself, committing the blunder either through inattention on his own part or through failure of the surgeon properly to distinguish the vials, the claim should be allowed. Similarly, if two vials stood together in his tent, and the negligence consisted simply in mistaking another bottle for his own.

In such a case, in the opinion of the Attorney-General, the pension should be allowed, the death having resulted while the soldier was "in the line of duty." [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

Mr. CRAIN. Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask the chairman of the Committee on Invalid Pensions why this man was not mustered into the service?

Mr. MATSON. I hold in my hand a letter written from Pittsburgh by a gentleman named Hoblitzell on the 10th day of June, 1861, to this man Romiser, which was filed with the papers in the Pension Office, from which letter it appears that the man Romiser was in correspondence with this friend in relation to entering a permanent company of the Union forces. He evidently intended to go into the permanent forces of the Army at least nine days before he was wounded.

Mr. LONG. And he did not go in because he was wounded?

Mr. MATSON. Evidently he did not go in, because he was disabled and could not serve.

Mr. Speaker, after very careful consideration I have arrived at the conclusion that this bill ought to pass. I have no hesitancy in saying that I have been reluctant to have bills passed over the veto of the President except in clear cases, because I believe that when the President states an objection to a bill it is entitled to very careful consideration.

Mr. DOUGHERTY. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. MATSON. What is it?

Mr. DOUGHERTY. It is claimed that there were in the Pension Office papers in relation to this case which were not laid before the President at the time he considered the case. Why were not these papers laid before the President?

Mr. MATSON. I will answer that question, although the gentleman interrupts the thread of my discourse very considerably. Here in my hand are the papers which were in the Pension Office. Here is the claim filed there June 7, 1879. The number of the claim is 290707. The President says in his veto message that the Pension Office reports there have been no papers filed on behalf of this man. How that statement came to be made I do not know. I feel very sure, however, that the Pension Office did so state to the President, otherwise I am confident the President would not have declared that the statement had been made to him. Probably the mistake resulted because of the negligence or error of some clerk; and that is the suggestion of the committee in its report.

Mr. SPRINGER. Is there anything in those papers which if the President had seen them would have led him to a different conclusion?

Several MEMBERS. Oh, yes.

Mr. PETTIBONE. Certainly; of course there is.

Mr. MATSON. I will answer the gentleman's question in the course of my statement.

The facts in this case are these: On the 19th of June, 1861, the city of Cumberland, Md., was threatened with an attack. On the 17th, I believe—two days previous—the confederate forces had burned two bridges within a very short distance of Cumberland, on the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad.

A MEMBER. And had driven back the guards.

Mr. MATSON. And had driven away the forces which were there attempting to protect those bridges. At that time this company, which was known as Capt. Frank Mason's company, a provisional company, had probably been organized (though as to the fact of its organization the proof, I apprehend, is not clear) for the purpose of entering the permanent service of the Government. These men were called upon by the authorities of Cumberland to go to that city to aid in its protection. They went there; and at the time of their arrival an attack was imminent. They remained there; and while there with guns loaded for the enemy, this man, standing in the ranks of the Union forces, received a horrible wound. Now the question is whether a pension should be refused in his case simply because he was not mustered into the service. The wound he received did not come from an enemy's gun; but that makes no difference either in law or equity. There are now upon the pension-roll at least a thousand men—probably more—who have been pensioned because of accidental injuries resulting from the carelessness of their comrades—not the result of their own carelessness—and incurred in the line of duty.

There can not be any question about this man having been in the line of duty. He and his comrades stood there with their guns loaded for the enemy, ready to fight. They went there in response to a summons, to meet an emergency, to protect the city of Cumberland, and to protect one of the main lines of communication that kept the capital in connection with the forces that were expected to defend it. You have staring you in the face the historical fact that up to this time there had been a call for only seventy-five thousand men and for three months; that this call was quickly filled, and that thousands and tens of thousands who desired to enter the service of the Government and go to the rescue of the Union were unable to find places in the Union ranks at that time——

Several MEMBERS. That is true.

Mr. MATSON. Because no call was made for any more troops until after the battle of Bull Run on the 21st of July, 1861.

So that, when you come to look at all the facts of this case, you see that here was a patriotic volunteer—not a drafted man—with his gun in his hand, ready and willing to defend the Government of the United States, and receiving under such circumstances a horrible wound—by accident, it is true, but a wound from which he is suffering to this day.

Mr. CUTCHEON. And received in the line of duty.

Mr. MATSON. Yes; strictly in the line of his duty. But somebody may say, "Yes, but he did not apply promptly for his pension." Is that to be counted against him? Because for years he voluntarily surrendered to this Government a pension which Congress ought to have given him years and years ago, and which until 1874 he could have obtained through the regular channels of the Pension-Office—because he has thus surrendered to the Government thousands of dollars will this Government now refuse him a pension for the rest of his life? He only asks for a pension from this time on; and that is all this bill proposes to give him. Are my friends here unwilling to do justice to one who deserves a pension? That is the question. If there were any doubt about this case I would not urge it. It is as clear as sunlight to me. I have no doubt about it. There is no dispute about the facts. How the President came to veto it is not a matter of consideration to me. I have a solemn duty to discharge as well as he; and when I find a clear case, one about which there is no doubt at all, where the right, the equity, and the justice of the claim are beyond dispute, I will not hesitate to say that man shall be pensioned.

I now call for the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is, Will the House on reconsideration pass the bill notwithstanding the objections of the President?

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 175, nays 38, not voting 109; as follows:

So (two-thirds having voted in favor thereof) the bill was passed over the veto of the President.

During the roll-call,

On motion of Mr. MATSON, by unanimous consent, the reading of the names were dispensed with.

The following additional pairs were announced from the Clerk's desk:

Mr. DANIEL with Mr. WHITING, until further notice.

Mr. BELMONT with Mr. LONG, until Monday next.

Mr. ADAMS, of New York, with Mr. EVANS, for the remainder of the day.

Mr. NEAL with Mr. HOUK, on this vote.

Mr. WALLACE with Mr. COMPTON, on this vote. If present, Mr. COMPTON would vote "ay" and Mr. WALLACE "no."

The vote was then announced as above recorded.

REPRINTING A REPORT.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas, by unanimous consent, offered a resolution that 3,800 copies of report 3209 on the bill (H. R. 9702) to reduce and equalize duties on imports, to reduce internal revenue taxes, and to modify the laws in relation to the collection of the revenue, be printed for the use of the House; which was referred to the Committee on Printing.

And then (at 4 o'clock and 59 minutes p. m.), on motion of Mr. MATSON, the House took a recess until 8 o'clock p. m.

EVENING SESSION.

The recess having expired, the House was called to order at 8 o'clock p. m. by the Chief Clerk, who directed the reading of the following communication:

SPEAKER'S ROOM, HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, D. C., July 16, 1886.

SIR: Hon. BENTON MCMILLIN is designated to preside as Speaker pro tempore at the session of the House this evening.

J. G. CARLISLE, Speaker.

Hon. JOHN B. CLARK, JR.,
Clerk House of Representatives.

Mr. MCMILLIN accordingly took the chair as Speaker pro tempore.

BILLS PASSED.

Mr. MORRILL. I ask unanimous consent that we now take up and pass the bills which were favorably reported by the Committee of the Whole on last Friday evening.

There was no objecton.

A bill (H. R. 7796) granting a pension to James Long was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

A bill (H. R. 9115) for the relief of Eugene E. McLean was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed (two-thirds voting in favor thereof).

Senate bills of the following titles were severally considered, ordered to a third reading, and being read the third time, were passed:

A bill (S. 1625) granting a pension to Rebecca Hollingsworth Humphreys;

A bill (S. 1289) granting a pension to Thomas J. Owen;

A bill (S. 1853) granting a pension to Isabella Jessup;

A bill (S. 2233) granting a pension to John P. McElroy;

A bill (S. 1766) granting a pension to William Brentano;

A bill (S. 2163) granting a pension to Powhattan B. Short; and

A bill (S. 2160) granting a pension to Mary J. Hagerman.

A bill (S. 2026) granting a pension to Wallis Pattee was considered, and recommitted to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, as recommended by the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. MORRILL moved to reconsider the several votes taken; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

WILLIAM H. WEAVER.

The bill (S. 1421) granting a pension to William H. Weaver was considered. The question being upon its passage,

Mr. WALLACE. Mr. Chairman, I do not think this is a bill that ought to pass the House. According to the report, as it appears in the RECORD, there have been numerous efforts made on the part of the claimant to prove himself worthy of a pension before the Pension Office. They sent various special examiners and made five or six different examinations in the case, and finally after all of these efforts it was decided by the Pension Office that this soldier was not entitled to a pension. I think that bill had better be passed over.

Mr. MATSON. I ask unanimous consent that this bill be laid aside informally, not to lose its status.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. MATSON. I move that the House now resolve itself into Committee of the Whole for the consideration of bills under the special order.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole, Mr. DOCKERY in the chair.

BILLS INFORMALLY PASSED OVER.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the unfinished business coming over from last Friday.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 2132) granting a pension to Fridoline Glastetter.

The bill was read.

The CHAIRMAN. The pending question, as the Chair understands it, is on the motion to lay aside the bill with a favorable recommendation. The committee was dividing, and the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. WALLACE] and the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. MATSON] will resume their places as tellers.

Mr. MATSON. I ask unanimous consent that this bill be passed over informally, not to lose its place on the Calendar.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 4097) for the relief of William J. Owings.

Mr. MATSON. I ask that the same order be made in that case.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 4702) amending sections 4756 and 4757 of the Revised Statutes, relating to pensions to certain disabled persons who have served in the Navy or Marine Corps.

Mr. MCMILLIN. That is a general bill, and I ask that the same order be made in this case.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 4712) to place the name of Jacob S. Biddle on the pension-roll.

Mr. MATSON. I ask that the same order be made in this case.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 1852) granting a pension to Mrs. Jane R. McQuaide.

Mr. CONGER. I ask that that bill be passed over, not to lose its place on the Calendar.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

JAMES M'GLEN.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 8474) granting a pension to James McGlen.

The bill is as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, directed to place on the pension-roll of the United States, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of James McGlynn, late a private in Company I, One hundred and thirty-sixth Regiment New York Volunteers.

The report (by Mr. SAWYER) is as follows:

That from the papers on file in the Pension Office and presented before this committee it appears that the soldier enlisted as a private in Company I, One hundred and thirty-sixth Regiment New York Volunteers, August 28, 1862, and was discharged June 13, 1865.

The soldier testifies:

"On or about the 2d day of May, 1863, he was detailed to watch the knapsacks, &c., of his company, which, with the regiment, had been ordered to advance; that while he was thus engaged he was requested by some members of another regiment to assist in carrying some logs to be used in constructing a breastwork, and while carrying a heavy log the men carrying the other end fell, leaving the weight resting on the shoulder of the claimant, which crushed him to the ground, injuring him in his shoulder and spraining his wrist; that shortly after the enemy charged the soldiers where he was and took him prisoner, and that he was wounded in his right wrist; that he was taken to Libby prison, where he was treated by a rebel surgeon, who removed the ball; that when wounded no officer or comrade of his company was present, only one man from each company being detailed to watch the baggage. This was the day of the battle of Chancellorsville."

H. L. Arnold testifies:

"That he was lieutenant-colonel of the One hundred and thirty-sixth Regiment when it was mustered out; that on the day of the battle of Chancellorsville he was captain of Company I in said regiment; that on the afternoon of that day the said regiment with the balance of brigade was ordered out on reconnaissance in force; that the claimant, who was a private in his company, was by a proper order left behind in charge of the knapsacks and other property of the company; that while gone the enemy, under command of Stonewall Jackson, made an attack upon that position and carried it; that when they returned to our lines they found them in a different position, and the claimant was missing and was reported missing for some time; that before that battle the claimant was an able-bodied man in good health."

Matthew Mead testifies:

"At the time of the battle of Chancellorsville, he was orderly sergeant of Company I, One hundred and thirty-sixth Regiment of New York Volunteers, to which soldier belonged; that in that capacity on the day of said battle he detailed the soldier to take charge of the baggage of said company; that at that battle the soldier was reported missing; that some time after that he was informed that the soldier was wounded and taken prisoner; that at the time of his capture the soldier was an able-bodied man in good health; that he next saw him the following September at Bridgeport, Ala., where he was unable to go on duty or carry a gun; that from that time until the regiment was mustered out the soldier was able to do only light duty, such as loading a pack-mule."

B. L. Hovey, M. D., testifies:

He was surgeon of the One hundred and thirty-sixth Regiment New York Volunteers; that during the summer of 1863 he treated the soldier for an injury to his shoulder and wrist, which he claimed to have received at the battle of Chancellorsville; that the injury was a severe one and disabled him from performing full military duty, and that after several weeks he so far recovered as to be able to perform light duty; that he has seen the soldier several times since his discharge and has examined him within four or five years prior to 1878, and that his arm is useless for the purpose of manual labor; that he knew the claimant and recollects him; that there is a perfect anchylosis of his wrist joint, and he has only a partial ability to close the fingers, the index finger being less useful than the others.

Charlemagne Fisk testifies in his affidavit of date of April 1, 1866:

"That he then resided at Livonia, Livingston County, New York (that being where the claimant lives). That he was a private in Company K, Eighty-sixth Regiment New York Volunteers; that at the battle of Chancellorsville he was detailed to guard knapsacks, &c.; that his lines were not more than 30 feet from the lines of the Eleventh Corps, where the soldier and others were guarding baggage, &c.; that this past summer when he was working with the claimant he thought he had seen him before, and asked him if he was not guarding baggage at the battle of Chancellorsville, and the soldier replied he was."

Said Fisk further testifies:

"I saw the soldier when he was wounded. I saw him throw up his gun and say he was shot. When the enemy charged upon us at that time we were all mixed up, and I escaped. I am now drawing a pension."

Robert Park testifies that he was a private in same company with claimant and saw him wounded at the battle of Chancellorsville.

Patrick McCadden testifies:

"He was a member of Company K, Thirty-third Regiment New York Volunteers, and was taken prisoner at the battle of Fredericksburg; that while so a prisoner he saw the claimant, also a prisoner, wounded in the shoulder; saw the rebel surgeons dress his wounds; that they were in the Libby prison together; that he did not see the claimant wounded, but was informed that he was wounded while guarding breastworks at the battle of Chancellorsville."

Matthew Mead testifies:

"That on the 2d day of May, 1863, he was lieutenant of Company I, One hundred and thirty-sixty Regiment of New York Volunteers; that on or about that day the claimant was detailed to guard the company's baggage; that it was reported at the time that the claimant had been taken prisoner; that he returned in about two months, and that when he returned he was disabled by an injury to his shoulder and arm to such an extent as to unfit him for military service."

Dr. John C. Patterson testifies:

"Treated the claimant during the fall months of 1865 for some disease of the shoulder, which, as deponent was informed, was the result of service in the Army."

Dr. Charles C. Richmond, in his affidavit of date of April 13, 1874, testifies:

"That he was well acquainted with the claimant, and had attended him professionally for about seven years; that the disease for which he has prescribed for him was inflammation of the sheaths of the tendons of the right wrist, which, as deponent was informed, was the result of his service as a soldier."

The records of the Adjutant-General's Office show:

"Reported as missing in action at Chancellorsville May 1, 1863, but since returned as an exchanged prisoner. Prisoner of War Records show him captured as above, paroled at City Point, Va., May 14 and 15, 1863, reported at Camp Parole, Maryland, May 15 and 16, 1863, and was sent to Convalescent Camp, Virginia, May 20, 1863."

The Surgeon-General reports that "there are no records of City Point, Va., on file prior to June 20, 1864, and no records of regiment on file."

John Craig, the examining surgeon, in his report of date of March 18, 1878, says:

"The metacarpal bone of the right forearm has been badly shattered and is now united so that at the place of union the bone is bent outward, the fingers bent so that he can not grasp anything firmly, which disables him from performing much manual labor with that hand."

The evidence shows the claimant to have been a sound, healthy man before the battle of Chancellorsville, and that down to this time he has remained a crippled, disabled man. The claim has been rejected at the Pension Office, but the member of the committee drawing this report is unable to state from the papers the ground of the rejection.

Your committee believe this to be a most meritorious case, and therefore recommend that the bill do pass, with an amendment to the bill and the title thereto, by changing the word "McGlynn" in the title and the same word in the sixth line of the bill to the word "McGlen."

The amendment of the committee was agreed to.

Mr. WALLACE. Mr. Chairman, the papers in this case, it seems to me, show very clearly the reason why the Pension Office did not grant the application of this soldier. He was captured at Chancellorsville and fifteen or eighteen days afterward was exchanged, and the records show that there was no evidence of disability whatever at the time of the exchange. I have also seen a letter from the Surgeon-General, who says there is no record at any of the camp hospitals around the city of Washington at that time to indicate that he was present. If he got this wound in his wrist at Chancellorsville, he certainly would have been in some of these hospitals and there would have been some record of it.

I think this is not a bill we should act upon. The case, according to the records as I have looked at them in the papers in the Pension Office, is decidedly weak; and the additional testimony of the Surgeon-General saying this man was not in any of these hospitals within thirty days after the battle of Chancellorsville is a strong indication that the wound was received at some other time. Among those papers is no claim made at the commencement of this period when he returned from Chancellorsville of the wound in the wrist, which is the only one on which this application is based. I ask that the case be passed over.

Mr. PETERS. A considerable portion of the facts set forth in the report come within my own knowledge. I was brigaded with the One hundred and thirty-sixth New York Regiment at Chancellorsville. I was one of the men ordered to strap knapsacks and go out on a reconnaissance in the direction of Spottsylvania Court House, some of our company being left to guard the knapsacks. Our brigade, under the command of General Barlow, was directed to make this reconnaissance and report it to General Birney. Thus far I can verify the statements made in this report.

The evidence, as I understand it, is overwhelming that this soldier received this injury as he claimed in his application, and also that he received the wound. The evidence is also overwhelming that he was taken prisoner. Those who were there at that time and who were connected with this brigade and the Eleventh Corps know that Jackson made his attack on the right of Howard's corps, rushed in upon the Eleventh Corps when their guns were stacked, drove them back in utter confusion, and captured all of these knapsacks and the greater portion of the soldiers left to guard them. I know as far as my regiment was concerned, and so far as every regiment connected with the brigade was concerned, we never saw our knapsacks again.

I listened to the evidence with some care, because the moment the One hundred and thirty-sixth New York Regiment was mentioned my interest was aroused in the matter, as I served with that regiment nearly three years. That evidence is overwhelming as to the facts set forth in the application of the claimant; and the great wonder to me is why this application was not granted at the Pension Department. Certainly if ever there was a case in which the injury to the soldier and the wound are clearly established by the testimony not only of officers but of privates, this is such a case. One of the affidavits made here is by the man who was afterward lieutenant-colonel of the regiment, but who was at that time captain of Company I. He makes an affidavit as to the material facts set forth in the application. It seems to me if there ever was a case where all the facts necessary to the granting of a pension have been established by overwhelming testimony, not by one affidavit or the evidence of one person, but by the evidence of five or six parties, it is this case.

The gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. WALLACE] makes the point that there is no record in any of the hospitals of this man having been treated. There is the evidence of one man who was captured afterward at Fredericksburg, I believe, and who saw this man in prison.

Mr. CUTCHEON. And saw his wound dressed.

Mr. PETERS. Yes; and saw his wound dressed in Libby prison. He saw a surgeon of the confederate army dress his wound.

It seems to me that must have escaped the attention of the gentleman from Louisiana. That not only corroborates the evidence of the witnesses who testified to the capture of this man and to his receiving his injury, but brings the evidence up until after the time of capture. The mere fact that he might not have had a hospital record after exchange should not outbalance the weight of the evidence of these witnesses who testified to his receiving his wound and being captured and the evidence of the man who testified to his wound being dressed in Libby prison. It seems to me this case should never have come here to ask the equitable interposition of Congress. The application should have been granted at the Pension Department; but as it was rejected there and is now before us for action, it seems to me it ought to be allowed.

Mr. SAWYER. Having introduced this bill and drawn the report accompanying it, I would like to say something in support of it. But in the first place I would like to ask the gentleman from Louisiana what he said with reference to the letter from the Surgeon-General. I did not hear him distinctly.

Mr. WALLACE. Among the papers was a letter from the Surgeon-General, which stated no such name as that of this soldier is to be found among the records of Camp Parole or other hospitals around the city of Washington.

Mr. SAWYER. I think if the gentleman had examined all the papers he would have found that he is laboring under a mistake.

Mr. WALLACE. I did examine all the papers.

Mr. SAWYER. Because I think he would have found that the remark of which he has spoken refers to another person, and not to this claimant.

The gentleman will find among the papers on record a report from the Adjutant-General's Office showing that this man was reported missing in action May 1, 1863, and was afterward returned as an exchanged prisoner of war.

Mr. WALLACE. At what date was he returned as an exchanged prisoner?

Mr. SAWYER. I can not tell without stopping to look at the record.

Mr. WALLACE. I think it was on the 24th of the same month, about three weeks after he was reported missing.

Mr. SAWYER. In the first place, then, the statement from the Adjutant-General's Office shows that this man was reported as missing at the battle of Chancellorsville, and that subsequently to that he was returned as an exchanged prisoner. Now he could not have been returned as an exchanged prisoner unless he had been taken prisoner.

Mr. WALLACE. Does it say anything about his being wounded when he was returned as an exchanged prisoner?

Mr. SAWYER. Probably not. The record of prisoners of war shows that he was captured at Chancellorsville on May 1, 1863; that he was paroled at City Point May 14 and 15, reported at Camp Parole on the 15th and 16th, and was sent to the convalescent camp May 20.

So, from the records of the Adjutant General's Office we have the facts that he was reported missing and returned a paroled prisoner, and from the other official records of the Government we have the facts of his capture and his return, and also the significant fact that he was sent to the convalescent camp, which it seems to me would not have happened if the man at that time had been free from wounds or disability. The Surgeon-General's Office reports that there are no records on file of the City Point Hospital prior to June 20, 1864, and it was prior to that time that this man was taken to that place. Another significant fact appears, that is, that there are no hospital records of that regiment on file.

To go back, this man was taken prisoner in May, 1863. Dr. Hovey, who was the surgeon of the regiment, swears in his affidavit that he treated him in the summer of 1863 for an injury to his shoulder and wrist, which he claimed to have received at the battle of Chancellorsville. Therefore this treatment was after that battle. It appears that the man had a wound in the wrist, which the evidence shows he had received, and we have the evidence of the surgeon that he treated him for that injury several times, and continued to treat him for the injury to the wrist down to 1878. It appears from the testimony of the captain of the company, who afterward became its lieutenant-colonel, and from the testimony of the orderly sergeant, that this man was detailed by the company, when they were on the reconnoissance which has been spoken of by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. PETERS], to take care of the knapsacks.

The man himself makes oath that he was taken prisoner at that time. We have the testimony of another man that he was present at the time this claimant was taken prisoner and saw him taken. We have the testimony of another that he was there at the time and saw him wounded, saw him throw up his gun, raise his hand, and exclaim that he was shot. Then we have the testimony of another man that he saw him at Libby prison, saw him in a wounded condition there, and saw his wound dressed by a rebel surgeon.

I can not imagine how you can make a stronger case than is made here. The man was placed by the proper officer in charge of the baggage; the confederates charged upon him while he was there and took him prisoner; he was shot in the wrist, taken prisoner, and taken to Libby prison, where his wounds were dressed by a confederate surgeon, as shown by the evidence, and he appeared in the camp, as appears by the official record, and it is shown that he has been in a crippled condition ever since. I think I recollect the paper to which the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. WALLACE] refers, and my recollection is that it relates to another person, one of the witnesses in the case, not to the claimant.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee will rise informally to receive a message from the Senate.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of its clerks, informed the House that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 2113) granting a pension to Mrs. Sarah Young.

The message further informed the House that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 5866) to construct a road to the national cemetery at Knoxville, Tenn.

The message further announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 7527) providing for the construction of the light-house supply steamer for the Atlantic and Gulf coasts.

The message also announced that the Senate further insisted upon its amendments numbered 2, 17, 88, 179, and 180 to the bill (H. R. 8974) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887, and for other purposes, disagreed to by the House of Representatives.

JAMES M'GLEN.

The Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar resumed its session.

Mr. SAWYER. As I was saying, Mr. Chairman, the evidence discloses the fact that this man, then a sound and healthy man, was standing at the post of duty by the command of his superior officer. We show him taken prisoner, a wounded man. We show him with his wounds being dressed in the prison of the enemy. We show him returning to his regiment and going to the convalescent camp. We show the surgeon of his regiment treating him for the very wound which we prove by two other witnesses he received at Chancellorsville. It appears from the records of the Department that this disability still continues. Now, I can not imagine how a stronger case can be made out than this. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

Mr. WALLACE. There is no question, I suppose, in the mind of any one that this man was captured and taken to Libby prison, but there is no evidence at all that he was shot in the battle of Chancellorsville. If he had been, he would be entitled to a pension from Congress unless he had already received it through the Pension Office. But the testimony does not show that he was hurt otherwise than being injured in the shoulder by a falling log, which was only a temporary injury and one of very small moment, from which he had evidently recovered by the time he was exchanged and returned to his regiment, fifteen or twenty days afterward. But as the man seems to have been wounded during the period that the war lasted, and as I feel that to be a justification for giving him a pension, I do not desire to be captious, and will withdraw my objection.

Mr. SAWYER. Now, if the gentleman will pardon me, I will call his attention—— [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

The question being taken, the bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

STEPHEN SAUER.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 5038) for the relief of Stephen Sauer.

The CHAIRMAN. This bill, having already passed the House, has been returned from the Senate with an amendment, which will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

After the words "Stephen Sauer," in line 6, insert "dependent father of George Sauer."

Mr. MATSON. I move that the bill be reported to the House with a recommendation that the amendment of the Senate be concurred in.

The motion was agreed to.

ROBERT POTTS.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 9119) granting a pension to Robert Potts.

Mr. MATSON. I ask unanimous consent that this bill be passed over informally, as the gentleman representing it is not present.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection the bill will be laid aside informally, retaining its place on the Calendar.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

CYRA L. WESTON.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 8310) granting a pension to Cyra L. Weston.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and hereby is, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Cyra L. Weston, dependent father of William L. Weston, late a private in Company B, One hundred and twenty-sixth Massachusetts Volunteers.

The amendment reported by the Committee on Invalid Pensions was read, as follows:

After the words "Company B," in line 7, strike out "One hundred and."

Mr. EDEN. I would like to hear the report in this case.

The report (by Mr. HAYNES) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R 8310) granting a pension to Cyra L. Weston, submit the following report:

Cyra L. Weston's claim as dependent father of William L. Weston, private Company B, Twenty-sixth Massachusetts Volunteers, was rejected by the Pension Office "on the ground that the nature of soldier's fatal disease and its origin in line of duty can not be shown; also, that while a prisoner he enlisted in the rebel service."

The records of the War Department show that at the age of eighteen the soldier enlisted as a private in the third unattached company of Massachusetts cavalry. He was enrolled on the 12th day of November, 1861, and was discharged at New Orleans, La., June 16, 1862, on surgeon's certificate of disability, which contains the following statement:

"Ever since the company was mounted, February 25, 1862, he has essayed to mount and drill and do service as a trooper, but has invariably failed, owing to weakness; has never done one day's mounted duty; in consequence, in my opinion, never can be fit for cavalry.

January 8, 1864, he enlisted as a private in the Twenty-sixth Massachusetts Regiment; was captured at the battle of Cedar Creek, Virginia, October 19, 1864. Prisoner of war records show him captured as above, confined at Richmond, Va., October 23, 1864, and sent to Salisbury, N. C., November 4, 1864, where he enlisted in the rebel army; date not given. Paroled at N. E. Ferry, North Carolina, March 3, 1865. Final statement by company commander reports him died in United States Army general hospital, Wilmington, N. C., March 17, 1865, of causes not stated.

Two special examinations were ordered in this case. The first was by D. J. Safford, special examiner, who examined claimant and witnesses in his vicinity, and whose report bears date April 6, 1885. In this report he says:

"From a careful study of all the evidence I am of the opinion that the claim is meritorious. Though the evidence as to dependence is not strong, still in the feeble condition of the claimant's wife, as shown, I think it should be accepted (Safford gives the names and addresses of several comrades who should be seen). As the names of others of the company and regiment, who were in prison with him, and in their examination the question of his enlisting in the rebel service should be inquired into, although I place very little reliance on that portion of the record, from the fact that, apparently, he died in consequence of exposure in prison."

The second examination was by S. J. Davis, special examiner, whose report bears date June 19, 1885. He examined such comrades of soldier as he was able to reach, touching the points of his disabilities in the service and his enlistment into the rebel army, and says in his report:

"While I may and do presume that if the real facts could be proved the claim would be allowed, nevertheless proof and not presumption must decide the case."

The testimony of Orville W. Booth and Francis W. Woods shows him to have had chronic diarrhea in his second service, the testimony of the former touching the time before he was taken prisoner, and that of the latter while in Salisbury prison.

The testimony of the latter also has a bearing upon his enlistment into the rebel army, inasmuch as he saw soldier in prison and conversed with him as late as about the middle of January.

There is nothing to indicate upon what information the War Department record is based. It will be observed the date of alleged enlistment is unknown and so stated. If it is correct, it must have been some time in the period of six or seven weeks between the middle of January and the 3d day of March. This committee are of opinion, from all the facts developed, that the accuracy of the record is open, to say the least, to very grave doubts, with the probabilities very strongly against it. It is a matter of common knowledge that many prisoners who are charged on the War Department records with this dishonorable act never in fact enlisted in the rebel army or entered the rebel service. We are of opinion that this is a case of that character. The fact that he was paroled as a prisoner of war and sent into our lines is to our minds conclusive on this point.

It is not reasonable to assume that if in the rebel service he would have been thus paroled. That act of the rebel authorities recognized him as a Union soldier in good standing, and is in itself a refutation of the charge that he had enlisted in their army. Were he living he might be able to clear up this adverse, and we think unjust, record. But he died in the hospital at Wilmington, and the record stands, which we are convinced is a great injustice to the memory of a soldier who gave his life to the service of his country.

From all the facts and circumstances surrounding the case there can be no reasonable doubt that his death was the result of his prison life and its attendant hardships and privations.

Two special examiners, examining witnesses face to face, were impressed that the claim was meritorious if the real facts could be developed.

But in cases similar to this the Pension Office has ruled that the claim must be rejected and that Congress alone can grant relief.

The claimant is poor, old, and infirm, has lost one eye, and but for the bar heretofore discussed has shown a meritorious claim. In view of all the circumstances surrounding his son's prison record, the doubts concerning his alleged enlistment in the rebel service, and his death, we think the Government may properly waive the objections standing against the allowance of this claim.

We therefore report the bill to the House with a recommendation that it be amended by striking out the words "one hundred and," in line 7, and that as so amended the bill do pass.

The amendment reported by the Committee on Invalid Pensions was agreed to.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

DUFF GREEN REED.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 8296) to remove the political disabilities of Duff Green Reed.

Mr. WHEELER. I ask for the consideration of this bill.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled (two-thirds of each House concurring therein), That all political disabilities imposed by the fourteenth amendment of the Constitution of the United States be, and the same are hereby, removed from Duff Green Reed.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

JAMES CARLIN.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 6314) to increase the pension of James Carlin.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby directed to increase the pension of James Carlin, late a private in Company I, Third Regiment Vermont Volunteers, and now on the pension-roll, to $50 a month.

An amendment reported by the Committee on Invalid Pensions was read, as follows:

In line 6 strike out "fifty" and insert "forty."

Mr. PERKINS. I ask unanimous consent that we adopt this evening the method of proceeding which has been pursued on several previous evenings—that when a bill has been read by its title, unless some member asks for its consideration, it be laid aside informally without losing its place on the Calendar.

Mr. HAYNES. I would like to have this case considered.

Mr. PERKINS. Of course I have no objection to the consideration of this case; but I ask that the arrangement I have suggested be made.

Mr. WINANS. I object. Let the bills be considered regularly in their order.

Mr. GROUT. Mr. Chairman, I understand the bill just read is before the Committee of the Whole for consideration?

The CHAIRMAN. It is.

Mr. EDEN. Let the report be read.

The report (by Mr. HAYNES) was read, as follows:

James Carlin was a private in Company F, Third Vermont Regiment. He lost his left leg above the knee at the battle of the Wilderness, for which he draws a pension of $30 per month. This bill proposes to increase his pension to $50 per month. The Pension Office has no authority to increase his pension beyond the present rate, unless that degree of helplessness is shown which would entitle him to a $50 rating. His present condition is shown by the affidavits of Drs. Morse and Holden, which are appended as a part of this report. They disclose a badly diseased stump, which renders his disability much greater than usually follows similar amputations. It has been the policy of Congress to grant an increase in this class of cases—to recognize the increased disability which results from diseased stumps, and to make proper allowance therefor—which the Pension Office is not permitted to do. The certificates hereto appended do not indicate a disability which would entitle claimant to a $50 rating, but we think he is equitably entitled to more than he at present receives.

We therefore recommend that the bill be amended so as to increase his pension to $40 per month, and that as so amended the bill do pass.

I, Frederick L. Morse, of Windsor, in the county of Windsor, on oath depose and say that I am a practicing physician, and a graduate of medicine from the University of Michigan in the year 1872, and commenced to practice my profession in said Windsor in 1872; that I immediately became acquainted with James Carlin, a harness maker and repairer, who had lost his left leg at the middle third of the thigh, and have been familiar with him and his troubles since my first acquaintance. The stump of said leg troubled him continually and was continually painful, with either a constant discharge or preparing for a discharge. His stump gave him so much trouble that it was thought best to operate with the hope of affording him relief. Therefore, on the 8th day of October, 1874, the operation proposed was done. The bone was laid bare on the end, when we found it was greatly enlarged, being of a round and somewhat oval shape; white, hard, and constituting within itself a diseased condition. It was not thought best to further expose the bone to search for dead or diseased bone, and after the removal of a small piece of the enlarged extremity with the hope of inducing a reduction of its size by absorption, the operation was completed. He made a very quick and good recovery from the operation, the stump healing rapidly. It soon broke out again, however, and the suppurating discharge has continued ever since with all the old symptoms greatly aggravated at times. There is a constant sore on the extremity of the stump, or on the side near the end, accompanied by a great deal of pain.

I can swear positively that his stump has had a badly diseased bone it it since I first knew him in 1872. His condition is such as would oblige him to refrain from labor absolutely unless it were of a kind that would not interfere with the stump at all. It is my opinion that, taking the work he attempts to do as a standard of judgment, his disability is fully one-half. I have no interest in any claim Mr. Carlin may make or is making for increase of pension.

FREDERICK L. MORSE.

Subscribed and sworn to this 25th day of February, A. D. 1886, before me, FRED. W. CADY, Notary Public.

I, Clarence P. Holden, of Windsor, county of Windsor and State of Vermont, do depose and say that I am a graduate in medicine of the New York Homeopathic Medical College; that I have been engaged in the practice of my profession ten years, and that I have known James Carlin, of Windsor, since November 1, 1882. That the said James Carlin has a diseased stump, resulting from an amputation in the middle third of the thigh; that the stump is greatly enlarged, and there is a place near the end of the stump from which pus is almost constantly being discharged. That the disease consists of hypertrophy of the bone, with almost constant inflammation and ulceration; and, further, that I have treated the said James Carlin at various times since November 1, 1882, and at one time when he was confined to his house and bed for about two weeks. And, further, that the above-described disease is a source of almost constant pain and suffering, frequently requiring the care of physician and attendant, and incapacitates him from all except very light manual labor, and many times is totally incapacitated from performing any labor whatever. That since my acquaintance and professional attendance began as aforesaid in November, 1882, with said James Carlin his general health and strength have suffered a marked deterioration; and, further, that, in my opinion, the said James Carlin, by reason of the above-described disease and disability, should receive a pension of at least $60 per month.

CLARENCE P. HOLDEN.

Sworn to and subscribed before me this 22d day of February, A. D. 1886.
[SEAL.] JOS. C. ENRIGHT, Notary Public.

The amendment reported by the committee was agreed to.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

ELLEN SADLER.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 1492) for the relief of Ellen Sadler, sister of John Sadler.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll the name of Ellen Sadler, sister of John Sadler, formerly of Company E, Sixty-eighth Regiment of Pennsylvania Volunteers.

An amendment reported by the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to add to the bill the words "and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month," was read.

Mr. WALLACE. Let the report be read.

The report (by Mr. HAYNES) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1492) for the relief of Ellen Sadler, sister of John Sadler, submit the following report:

This committee have examined the papers in this case, and find they fully substantiate the statements of the Senate report. While there is no direct evidence of the soldier's celibacy, the facts disclosed of care of soldier by mother and sister, and will of soldier making his sister sole legatee, and report of Commissioner of Pensions that no claim had been filed in soldier's name, establish his celibacy to our satisfaction. We append the Senate report and recommend the passage of the bill with the following amendment: After the word "volunteers," in the sixth line of the printed bill, insert "and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month."

The claimant, Ellen Sadler, is a sister of John Sadler, formerly of Company E, Sixty-eighth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers. No claim was ever made before the Pension Department, because this case does not come within the provisions of any general law.

The following letter from the Adjutant-General's Office gives the service of the soldier:

WAR DEPARTMENT, ADJUTANT-GENERAL'S OFFICE,
Washington, April 9, 1886.

SIR: I have the honor to return herewith a letter from the Senate Committee on Pensions, requesting the military record of John Sadler, as of Company E, Sixty-eighth Pennsylvania Volunteers, and, in compliance with instructions thereon, to report that the records of this office show that John J. Sadler was enrolled August 13, 1862, at Philadelphia, Pa., and mustered into service September 1, 1862, to serve three years as a private in Company E, Sixty-eighth Pennsylvania Volunteers; that he served therein to January 13, 1863, when he was discharged on surgeon's certificate of disability at Camp Pitcher, Virginia, because of "inguinal hernia of right side, contracted about five days ago while on duty." In said certificate the company commander also certifies that "John J. Sadler has been a good and attentive soldier and has had good health since his enlistment until the 30th December, 1862, when he was first attacked with this disease, supposed to have been brought on by wearing a cartridge-box."

I have the honor to be, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,
J. C. KELTON,
Acting Adjutant-General.

The SECRETARY OF WAR.

It appears from the evidence before your committee that the soldier was discharged for disability contracted in the service, which disability continued until his death. The certificates of physicians are on file with the papers. The testimony of comrades and others corroborates the evidence as to the incurrence of the disability in the service and its continuance since. The evidence is that the soldier, after his discharge, was unable to do any work whatever, and that his mother and sister were compelled to support him; that after his mother's death the burden of such support fell on his sister, Ellen Sadler, and that she did her duty until disabled by partial paralysis. This paralysis still continues, and it further appears that this sister is left in the most destitute circumstances. The soldier died at the Pennsylvania Hospital.

Your committee are of the opinion that the soldier died from the result of disease contracted in the service, and that his sister, who, it appears, is his only surviving relative and now utterly destitute, should receive from the Government some assistance which will in some measure take the place of that which the soldier would no doubt have contributed were he now alive and in good health. We therefore report back the bill with the recommendation that it do pass.

Mr. WALLACE. I desire to inquire whether it is customary to grant pensions to the sisters of soldiers who have died in the war—whether there are any precedents for it?

Mr. HAYNES. There are scores of precedents. My impression is there are probably a dozen in this Congress. Where the sister has been dependent on the soldier and where she is suffering under disability, where she is crippled, blind, or otherwise incapacitated for earning a livelihood, it is the invariable practice for Congress to grant relief.

Mr. PETTIBONE. That has been the practice for years.

The amendment reported by the committee was agreed to.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

THOMAS WALSH.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 8481) granting a pension to Thomas Walsh.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Thomas Walsh, late of Company F, Seventy-fourth Regiment of New York Volunteers.

Mr. WALLACE. I ask for the reading of the report.

The report (by Mr. PINDAR) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 8481) granting a pension to Thomas Walsh, have had the same under consideration, and beg leave to submit the following report:

Thomas Walsh, or Wallsh, enlisted as private in Company F, Seventy-fourth New York Volunteers, June 3, 1861, was captured in action at Brandy Station, Va., November 27, 1863, confined in prisons at Richmond and Andersonville until paroled, November 21, 1864, and mustered out January 10, 1865.

Claimant has been in the employ of the Government in this city ever since discharge until recently, when he became physically disqualified from performing his duties. In October, 1885, he applied for pension, alleging that he contracted kidney disease and enlargement of right testicle while prisoner of war. His condition two weeks after application for pension had been made may be best described by copying the report of Examining Surgeon Tyler, who was directed to make the examination at claimant's home:

"He is unable to make a statement, by reason of his present condition, intelligibly, or walk without the aid of another person. It is stated that paralysis occurred in June, 1885. Heart's action very irregular and intermittent; impulse feeble; is pale; has œdema of the ankles, and suffers from valvular lesions of the heart. The right testicle is enlarged; testicular sensation deadened; has chronic orchitis. Nothing definite as to cause can be obtained. Urine examined and found to contain a certain amount of mucus, but no albumen discovered under test and no distinct evidence of kidney disease. He suffers from hemiplegia on right side; contractions of fingers of right hand; can not articulate. Disability from orchitis one-half."

In support of this claim the following evidence has been filed:

John T. Smith, passed assistant engineer United States Navy, testifies—

"That he has been acquainted with claimant since 1865, about the time of his discharge. He was then suffering with kidney disease and disease of the testicles, and to affiant's personal knowledge continued to suffer therefrom until now he has become entirely helpless. It was well understood at the time affiant first formed claimant's acquaintance that said diseases were contracted while a prisoner of war."

Kate E. Schmalhoff testifies:

"That she has known claimant since about 1871, when he came to her house and occupied a room there about six years. About six months after coming there he was taken sick with troubles of kidneys and urinary organs; was very sick for about seven months. During the last two years of his residence with affiant he was in comparatively good health, but always complained of the old trouble, which he attributed to hardships while prisoner of war."

Dr. F. Donohue testifies—

"That in 1872 or 1873 he was called to treat claimant for a severe case of orchitis, and his history was to the effect that he was captured by Mosby's cavalry, and mounted barebacked on a tall, bony mule, on which he was taken to Richmond, which caused the disability."

Dr. G. L. Magruder testifies—

"That he treated claimant for hemiplegia of right side and aphonia since June, 1885."

Calvin B. Walker, late deputy commissioner of pensions, testifies—

That he was one of claimant's attorneys; that claimant is totally helpless physically, and is almost demented; that he has so completely lost his mind that he is wholly unable to furnish his attorneys with the necessary information to enable them to obtain the required evidence to establish the origin of his diseases in the service; that affiant is unable to obtain such information from other sources, but that he has such knowledge of the case as to satisfy him of the merit of the claim."

Claimant has an excellent reputation in the city in which he has lived and filled important trusts for over twenty years past. His present unfortunate condition came upon him so suddenly after years of suffering as to preclude the possibility of procuring the evidence necessary to establish his claim under the general pension law. It is true the evidence is meager, but what has been furnished is of the highest character, and can not be ignored by your committee. The soldier's services were long and faithful. For twelve months he was confined in Southern prisons. Within a month after release he was mustered out of service. Hence no record of treatment. If he was treated for his disabilities in the service the fact can not be shown by parol evidence. That he has suffered from diseases reasonably chargeable to exposure of prison life ever since discharge is clearly shown. Under all the circumstances your committee are inclined to give so worthy a claimant the benefit of any doubt as to origin, and therefore report favorably on the bill and ask that it do pass.

Mr. HIESTAND. I move the bill be laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

Mr. WALLACE. I object to this bill. The report does not state any good reason why the pension should be granted. Almost any man will have liver troubles or something of that sort if he lives long enough. Twenty years after the close of the war this does not seem to be a case where a pension should be granted.

Mr. MATSON. I ask the gentleman from Louisiana not to object to this bill. Since it was reported by the committee an affidavit has been brought and filed with the committee furnishing additional proof. This man is in a helpless condition. He was a prisoner of war a long time under aggravating circumstances. I do not think there is any doubt about his disability or that it was incurred in the service. The fact that he withheld his application until a late day is not to be taken against him. The report shows he held a Government position and that he felt delicacy in applying for a pension while he occupied that Government position.

He is so helpless that he has to be assisted when he walks. I think this bill should be allowed to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I ask the gentleman from Indiana whether it is not almost utterly impossible to comply with the regulations of the department as to furnishing facts.

Mr. MATSON. Not always.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Almost always.

Mr. MATSON. The Pension Office is liberal in such cases.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Is it not almost impossible in such cases to make strict proof?

Mr. MATSON. It is. Additional proof has been filed in this case, I will say to my friend from Ohio. I move the bill be laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

Mr. WALLACE. Does this additional evidence bear on the fact this trouble came from service in the Army?

Mr. MATSON. Recently he ran across a friend who had been in prison with him. His son-in-law filed that testimony with the committee last Friday.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Is there any evidence to show this party was not suffering with this disease prior to his enlistment in the Army.

Mr. MATSON. I do not remember enough of the case to answer the gentleman's question.

Mr. HIESTAND. He could not have entered the service if he had been suffering with the disease.

Mr. CUTCHEON. The presumption of law is in his favor. [Cries of "Vote!"]

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

MRS. ANNA SCHIER.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 7983) granting a pension to Mrs. Anna Schier.

The bill was read.

Mr. SPRINGER. Read the report.

The report was read.

Mr. WALLACE. I object to this bill.

Mr. MATSON. I ask the bill be passed over informally. It was introduced by the gentleman from New York [Mr. HEWITT], who is not present.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

CATHARINE LANIGAN.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 2349) granting a pension to Catharine Lanigan.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll the name of Catharine Lanigan, mother of John Lanigan, late of Company K, Twenty-third Illinois Volunteers, in the late war, at the rate of $50 per month, from and after the passage of this act, in lieu of the pension she is now receiving.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Let the report be read:

The report (by Mr. NEECE) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill S. 2349, submit the following report:

The Senate Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 776) granting arrears of pension to Catharine Lanigan, reported as follows:

"That Catharine Lanigan was pensioned at the rate of $15 per month from March 18, 1882, as dependent mother of John Lanigan, who served as second lieutenant of Company I, Twenty-third Illinois Volunteers, and who died September 11, 1881. A very thorough examination of this claim was made by the Pension Office, and the fact that the soldier died from causes originating in the service was medically established. The dependence of the mother upon the son during his life is shown, and it also appears that she has been bed-ridden for years.

"Mrs. Lanigan is now eighty-one years of age, has long been a helpless invalid, and is dependent for support upon the pension allowed her and the exertions of her two daughters. Her title to a pension having been satisfactorily established before the Pension Office, and the rating allowed under the general laws being insufficient for her maintenance in her helpless condition, the committee consider this an exceptional case, which justifies special action and the allowance of a higher pension to Mrs. Lanigan during the brief time that she can receive any benefit from the bounty of Congress.

"We therefore recommend that the original bill (S. 776) be indefinitely postponed, and the passage of the accompanying substitute bill, granting Mrs. Lanigan a pension at the rate of $50 per month."

Your committee find, on thorough examination of the papers in the case, the facts to be substantially as above set forth, to which we desire, however, to add that the proofs show Major Lanigan to have been a most gallant soldier, who, though a great sufferer from disease contracted while in the Army, never during his lifetime sought any relief from the Government. Indeed, your committee are advised that but for physical disabilities incurred during four years' service as a volunteer in the war of the rebellion, Major Lanigan might now be holding high rank in the regular Army, a captain's commission having been offered him immediately after the war in appreciation of his gallant conduct, which he declined for the reason that his health was already so far impaired by the disease from which he finally died as to render him unfit for active military duty.

He was practically the only support of his aged, widowed, and helpless mother, who, in the opinion of your committee, is clearly entitled to a pension adequate to her comfortable support during the, at most, very few years she may reasonably be expected to survive.

Your committee therefore recommend the passage of the bill.

Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois. One fact might be stated, as it does not appear in this report. It states this old lady, eighty-one years of age, is supported by her two daughters. The truth is, one of these daughters is also an invalid, and therefore if this pension is granted it will help to support two invalid ladies, one of whom is over eighty years of age and has been confined to her room for over twelve years, bedridden most of the time.

There is another fact which ought not to be forgotten. Major Lanigan was entitled to invalid pension and would have received it if he had not been restrained by a noble feeling not to do so so long as he could support himself. He could also have received arrears of pensions much more in amount than the Treasury will be called upon to pay in the way of pension to this old lady.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on laying the bill aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

Mr. BRAGG. I ask for a division.

Mr. LAWLER. Allow a brief statement to be made. This bill only grants pension to an old lady eighty-two years of age.

Mr. BRAGG. The Chair put the question to the House, but has not stated how the vote stands.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 62, noes 20.

Mr. BRAGG. No quorum.

The Chair appointed as tellers Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois, and Mr. BRAGG.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 55, noes 27.

The CHAIRMAN. Has the point of no quorum been withdrawn?

Mr. MATSON. The point of no quorum has not been withdrawn I understand.

Mr. MORRILL. I ask unanimous consent that this bill may be laid aside informally, retaining its place upon the Calendar.

Mr. LAWLER. Mr. Chairman, I merely rise to ask this question: What is the object in doing that? We would rather use some effort to induce gentlemen to compromise their objection to the bill, which certainly ought to pass.

Mr. MORRILL. This will simply delay all other pension business to-night, unless some arrangement of the kind can be made. I yield, however, to the gentleman from Illinois, who desires to make a request.

Mr. NEECE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that this bill be reported to the House with the understanding that it go over and have a vote in the House on it.

Mr. BRAGG. I object.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kansas that it be laid aside informally, retaining its place on the Calendar?

Mr. BRAGG. I have no objection to that.

Mr. TIMOTHY J. CAMPBELL. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to say a few words in reference to this bill. [Cries of "Go on!"]

I want to say simply in relation to this case that I have the honor to represent a part and parcel of the city of New York, and I happen to know the person, this aged lady, for whom this pension is intended. I had occasion to visit Chicago in 1884, at the time of the Democratic convention, and visited the house of this old lady.

I saw for myself that she is aged and feeble, actually bedridden, eighty-one, nearly eighty-two years of age, and that she has a crippled daughter, who is herself almost helpless. The result of her unfortunate circumstances is that they have great difficulty in maintaining themselves. This old lady had a son, a most elegant young gentleman and one of the most promising young men who lived in Chicago, who went into the war to defend the country and to keep it intact. He received wounds during his service in the Army that ultimately caused his death, thereby leaving his aged mother in her helpless, feeble condition, not only to care for herself, but in part for her crippled daughter.

I would say further, gentlemen, you all remember the gallant Colonel Mulligan, who lost his life in defending our flag. You must remember him well. His name is in the history of this country. This Colonel Mulligan, who was killed on the field of battle, died in the arms of this gallant young man, who when he left the war left it as Major Lanigan. He won for himself honor and distinction in his country's service. Now this is simply doing an act of charity to a most worthy lady who has claims upon us; and charity, you know, covers a multitude of sins. With charity to all and malice toward none I hope this Congress will grant this little relief, which is only an act of justice after all to this old lady, so as to care for her in her helplessness in the few remaining days she has to live.

I hope nobody will demur to the passage of this bill. Further, I desire to say that if Major Lanigan had demanded what he was entitled to from the General Government on account of the wounds he received and the service rendered during the war he would have been entitled to at least four or five thousand dollars. All who know of his services will bear witness to their importance during the war of the rebellion. He never accepted a cent, not a farthing, from the Government, and all we ask you to do now is to take care of his poor old crippled mother. This is a piece of generosity, a piece of Christian charity on the part of the House, and I am sure there will be no objection to passing the bill if the facts are understood.

Mr. PETTIBONE. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. TIMOTHY J. CAMPBELL. Yes, sir.

Mr. PETTIBONE. Do you tell the House that Major Lanigan, if he had applied for a pension, was himself entitled to a pension?

Mr. BRAGG. Do you want to make a speech on this subject?

Mr. PETTIBONE. No; I want to know the facts of the case.

Mr. TIMOTHY J. CAMPBELL. He was entitled to a pension. The Commissioner of Pensions, General Black, knows the facts. But he never got a penny.

I sincerely hope my friend from Wisconsin will not insist upon his objection in this case. My friend came from New York himself, and I hope he will do this act of kindness now to this poor old lady. I appeal to my friend General BRAGG to withdraw his objection. I do not see how he can insist upon it in such a case. It would be unworthy of the flag he followed so gallantly to refuse this pension.

Mr. BRAGG. I do not know that it would be quite possible to do it except I bear in mind that in my own State there are widows whose grandfathers and great grandfathers were in the war of the Revolution, whose fathers and grandfathers were in the war of 1812, and whose fathers, husbands, brothers, and sons were in the war of 1861, and with all of that glorious record Congress says that they are entitled to $12 a month.

Mr. TIMOTHY J. CAMPBELL. I am not demurring to anything you ask for your constituents. [Laughter and applause.] If you will bring forward any of your people that you want to grant pensions to, or want to aid, I promise you now that I will not be a party to interfere. On the contrary, I will help to get a pension for your constituents or any person you may represent. I ask gentlemen of this House, I ask my friend of old from New York, in view of the fact that this is the only speech I have made, and perhaps the last speech I will ever make in this House, for I am no speech-maker, to permit this bill to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

The CHAIRMAN. Is the point of no quorum insisted on?

Mr. BRAGG. When I object to a bill I do not object to it for fun or for the purpose of whiling away time. In such a case I always think I have a good ground for objection; and in this case I have no earthly doubt that the objection is a proper one. We can not afford to commence establishing precedents of granting pensions of $50 a month to old ladies who may have been dependent on sons who lost their lives or had their health injured during the war. We have had too much of that special legislation. If anything is to be done in that direction, let it be done by general law. Do not let us at one leap go from the highest notch of pension which the officer himself could have drawn—$15 a month—a lieutenant's pension, to give his mother $50 a month, which is higher than any pension known to pension law.

Mr. LAWLER. I wish to ask the gentleman from Wisconsin this question.

The CHAIRMAN. All this is proceeding by unanimous consent.

Mr. LAWLER. I wish to say to the gentleman from Wisconsin that I know this family well, and I know the circumstances in which they are situated. Besides the aged mother, not only is one daughter crippled, but both daughters are really dependent. [Cries of "Regular order!"] I ask unanimous consent to be heard for a few moments. I do not want to take up time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. LAWLER] asks unanimous consent to make a statement. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. LAWLER. I do not wish to occupy more than a minute or two. Friends of the family have been trying to get one of these deserving daughters something to do, but have not succeeded as yet in accomplishing it. We can show by affidavits that this old lady is not likely to live for any considerable length of time. If this pension should be granted, when this old lady passes away that will be the end of the bounty of the Government in this case. I will say to the gentleman from Wisconsin that we have come up here every Friday night to vote pensions, and we have passed the bills because we believed they were meritorious cases. And I will now say to the gentleman, if he will not consent to a pension of $50, I ask him to agree to give something for the support of the aged mother of this gallant officer, whose sisters also are dependent.

Mr. BRAGG. The gentleman from Illinois has to a large extent based this case on the statement that this old lady is not likely to live for any length of time. I will say this to him: I am willing to pay her myself $10. Will the gentleman from Illinois and the balance of the Illinois delegation say the same thing and make up a purse for her?

Mr. LAWLER. I will say to the gentleman from Wisconsin that he can not give this lady $10 any sooner than I will. But I do not think it is a worthy proposition when we know that this man was a gallant soldier, and that if he had not entered the war he could have made a competence for his mother and sisters. And I will tell the gentleman further that if money is to be given in that way to that family we need not go out of the city of Chicago. When the members of that family want charity they can get it there. It will not be necessary to go to the State of Wisconsin.

This insulting proposition to this dying mother comes with a poor grace from the gentleman from Wisconsin. I say to him Wisconsin never will pay a dollar toward her support or toward her burial. Major Lanigan left friends in Chicago who will take care of his mother and of her crippled daughter when she passes away.

We have made every honorable proposition to the gentleman from Wisconsin to induce him to withdraw his objection. We are willing to put this pension at $25. Major Lanigan was entitled by right to receive $5,000 from the Government, but he had too much pride to ask a dollar. He worked in the state treasurer's office till he was brought to the grave. It is now asked that the Government contribute to the support of this old lady while she lives, which may be three months, or six months, but probably not longer. I will say to the gentleman from Wisconsin that I am willing to compromise on $20 a month.

Mr. BRAGG. When this is urged on the score of charity, I will say I have no compromise to make. And when you talk of having a claim of $5,000 against the Government that this officer might have got you might just as well say $25,000, for that involves but one word more. And when you talk of the commission in the regular Army which was rejected, that is another thing that floats through the air; that we hear and do not see. This sort of argument never obtains with me. I made the objection in good faith because I am opposed to the establishment of the precedent, and I shall insist upon it.

Mr. WADE. I call for the regular order.

Mr. THOMPSON. I ask unanimous consent to make a statement.

The CHAIRMAN. The regular order is demanded.

Mr. PRICE. I desire to be permitted to make a brief statement. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

Mr. PRICE. What is the regular order?

The CHAIRMAN. The regular order is the request for unanimous consent made by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. MORRILL] that this bill be laid aside informally, retaining its place on the Calendar. Is there objection?

Mr. RANDALL. I object.

Mr. MATSON. I rise to make to make a privileged motion. I move that the committee do now rise.

The question being taken, there were—ayes 66, noes 14.

So the motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and Mr. MCMILLIN having resumed the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. DOCKERY reported that the Committee of the Whole House having had under consideration the Private Calendar under the special order had directed him to report to the House sundry bills with various recommendations.

THOMAS WALSH.

The bill (H. R. 8481) granting a pension to Thomas Walsh, reported favorably from the Committee of the Whole, was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

CYRA L. WESTON.

The bill (H. R. 8310) granting a pension to Cyra L. Weston, reported from the Committee of the Whole with an amendment, was taken up.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and was accordingly read the third time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is, Shall this bill pass?

Mr. WALLACE. Mr. Speaker, looking over the report in this case I think this is another case that ought to be passed by. I do not think this is a proper bill for us to pass. It is not one in which the testimony establishes the alleged facts. There is no evidence that this man was at any time dependent upon his son.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. WALLACE] ask unanimous consent that the bill be passed over informally?

Mr. HAYNES. Mr. Speaker, before that is done I desire to say that if the gentleman had listened to the report he would have found that a special examiner of the Pension Office (Mr. Safford, I believe), a very careful and competent examiner, went to the home of this claimant and examined witnesses face to face and made his report upon the very point which the gentleman raises, the question of dependence, and reported that the claim was a meritorious one. In fact, the only bar against the claim in the Pension Office was this matter of the enlistment in the confederate army.

The question was taken on the passage of the bill, and the Speaker pro tempore declared that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. WALLACE. I call for a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 63, noes 2.

Mr. WALLACE. No quorum has voted.

Mr. DOCKERY. If the gentleman insists upon his point of no quorum, I ask unanimous consent that this bill be laid aside informally, retaining its present status.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DOCKERY] asks unanimous consent that this bill be laid aside, not losing its status in the House. Is there objection?

Mr. HENDERSON, of Illinois. I object, Mr. Speaker. I am tired of coming here night after night and seeing one or two men obstruct the action of this House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HENDERSON] objects to the request of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DOCKERY].

Mr. CUTCHEON. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. CUTCHEON. Has this bill been read a third time?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The bill has been read a third time, and the question now is upon its passage.

Mr. CUTCHEON. I move the previous question on the passage of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The House is dividing upon the passage of the bill.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. I ask unanimous consent that the previous question be ordered on the passage of this bill. That will insure a vote upon it when there is a quorum to-morrow, and, that being done, we can proceed to the consideration of other business.

Several MEMBERS. That is right.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE] asks unanimous consent that the previous question be ordered upon the passage of the bill, and then that it be passed over informally.

Mr. MATSON. I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. MATSON] objects. The question is on the passage of the bill, and the point being made that no quorum has voted——

Mr. MORRILL. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at 9 o'clock and 40 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

The message also announced that the House further insisted on its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 2, 17, 88, 179, and 180 to the bill (H. R. 8974) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887, and for other purposes, further insisted on by the Senate, and asked a further conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. HOLMAN, Mr. CABELL, and Mr. CANNON the managers on the part of the House.

LEGISLATIVE, ETC., APPROPRIATION BILL.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection the Chair calls attention to the importance of action on this matter, being a request for a committee of conference on the legislative appropriation bill. The conference asked for by the House will be agreed to if there be no objection.

Mr. INGALLS. I think the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations had better be consulted about that. He advised me yesterday—although perhaps that was not public—that——

Mr. BECK. The chairman will be in in a moment. Here he comes.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask that the legislative bill be laid before the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The action of the House has already been reported.

Mr. ALLISON. I move that the Senate agree to the further conference asked for by the House of Representatives.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent the President pro tempore was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate, and Mr. ALLISON, Mr. DAWES, and Mr. COCKRELL were appointed.

MARY E. CASEY.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I move that the Senate insist on its amendment to the bill (H. R. 5003) for the relief of Mary E. Casey, just returned from the House, and ask for a committee of conference.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Nebraska moves that the Senate insist on its amendment to the bill referred to by him, and ask for a committee of conference with the House of Representatives.

The motion was agreed to; and by unanimous consent the President pro tempore was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate, and Mr. PLUMB, Mr. VAN WYCK, and Mr. BERRY were appointed.

BUTTER AND OLEOMARGARINE.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from New York.

Mr. BECK. I desire to inquire——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion is not debatable.

Mr. BECK. The Calendar is the regular order, is it not?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is, but the motion is to proceed to the consideration of a particular bill. It is not in order to debate it.

Mr. BECK. I want the bill read for information.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is of opinion that the bill can not be read as a matter of right. It will be read if there be no objection.

Mr. HOAR. I object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts objects to the present reading of the bill. When taken up it will be read, as a matter of course.

Mr. BECK. I desire to have the bill read, to see what is proposed to be taken up.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is the duty of the Chair to submit that question to the Senate.

Mr. BECK. The question whether the bill shall be read or not?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Yes, upon a motion to take up the bill.

Mr. HOAR. I will not interpose an objection. I thought it would require a double reading of the bill if we took it up, but perhaps the reading now will answer if it shall be taken up. I withdraw the objection.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The objection is withdrawn, and the bill will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the motion to proceed to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. BECK and Mr. MILLER called for the yeas and nays, and they were ordered.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

So the motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole, and open to amendment.

Mr. BECK. I move that the bill be referred to the Committee on Finance.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Kentucky moves that the bill be referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. BECK. I believe that motion is debatable.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is debatable.

Mr. BECK. Mr. President, I called for the reading of the bill before it was taken up for the purpose of developing the fact that it was beyond all question a tax bill, and as such, under all the rules of the Senate, that it ought to be considered by the Committee on Finance of this body. Indeed, when the bill came from the House and the question was made then as to whether it ought or not to go to that committee the yeas and nays were called and it was sent to the Committee on Agriculture by a vote of 22 yeas against 21 nays, mainly, however, upon the ground that it had been considered in the House by the Committee on Agriculture, and as the Committee on Agriculture of the Senate had been looking into it and taking a good deal of testimony it ought to have a chance to consider it, the Senator from New York [Mr. MILLER] saying, among other things, as a reason why they should have it sent to that committee:

> By the common consent of the Senate thus far a vast number of petitions upon this subject, amounting to many thousands, have been referred to the Agricultural Committee at this session. Several bills have been introduced in the Senate regarding the manufacture and sale of imitation butter, which have been referred to that committee. The Committee on Agriculture has already considered the matter at several meetings. It has given two or three public hearings on this question, very important hearings, and it proposes, of course, if the bill shall be referred to it to give other public hearings, to the opponents as well as to the friends of the measure.
> What will be the condition of the bill when it shall reappear from that committee, if referred there, I can not tell—whether there will be anything of a tax in it or not. I know nothing whatever about the views of the individual members of that committee. I have not thought it wise or proper that I should in any way interrogate the members of the committee as to their views upon it.

The fact that it was a tax bill as it came from the House was presented by myself, by the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH], and others; there was a general acquiescence in the suggestion that if the bill came back to the Senate from the Committee on Agriculture as a tax bill in any proper sense then would be the right time to refer it to the Committee on Finance. In the mean time, as I said, the Senate by a majority of determined that the Committee on Agriculture should examine it and see what they could make out of it; and if it did not come back as a tax bill (although the House bill was admitted to be one) it might be proper to consider it without referring it to the Finance Committee.

Now, we find the House bill brought back to the Senate by that committee without crossing a "t" or dotting an "i," without any report in regard to it, unless a miscellaneous document containing "testimony taken before the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry of the United States Senate in regard to the manufacture and sale of imitation dairy products" can be called a report. I obtained it from the document-room a few moments ago. There is no report of a committee—indeed, it is obvious that the committee could not make one without confessing that it is a tax bill and nothing else—there is no information given as to the needs of a bill like this for the purpose of raising revenue, and the committee did not dare to assert that any such need existed. The bill imposes special taxes of $600 on the manufacturers of oleomargarine, $480 on wholesale dealers, $48 on retail dealers, and provides a tax of 15 cents a pound in addition to the tariff tax on imports, in the form of internal-revenue taxes on all oleomargarine imported.

Mr. COKE. Five cents a pound.

Mr. BECK. No, they go beyond domestic taxation. Elsewhere in the bill they impose a tax of 5 cents a pound, to be paid by the manufacturer on its manufacture in this country, but in regard to imports they impose the following:

SEC. 10. That all oleomargarine imported from foreign countries shall, in addition to any import duty imposed on the same, pay an internal-revenue tax of 15 cents per pound, such tax to be represented by coupon stamps as in the case of oleomargarine manufactured in the United States.

Therefore, it not only deals with internal taxation but changes the tariff laws in regard to this article. The magnitude of its production in this country is set forth in a report which I hold in my hand by the advocates of the measure, in which it is said:

From the best and most reliable information obtainable your committee believe that about 200,000,000 pounds of spurious and imitation compounds and mixtures are now being manufactured annually, which not only take the place of so much butter, but stop the consumption of much more by the demoralization of the trade.

Two hundred million pounds manufactured in this country at a tax of 5 cents a pound would produce $10,000,000 of revenue. How much more would be produced by the additional tax imposed upon the oleomargarine imported under the tariff laws the committee do not see fit to tell us, and I have not the means of knowing. It would either prohibit imports or at 15 cents a pound add largely to the revenues.

Do we need more revenue? Let us see.

The last report from the Treasury Department, which I have lying before me, dated the 1st day of July, shows that the surplus revenue for the year ending June 30 was over $96,000,000. Here is a proposition to increase taxation for the purpose of raising more revenue, or that does raise more revenue certainly, to the extent of $10,000,000, and if the imports amount to anything considerable, perhaps $15,000,000 more, when we have already, as is shown by the report for the last fiscal year, $96,000,000 surplus lying idle, and do not know what to do with it. We can not buy any of our outstanding bonds which mature in 1891 and 1907 without paying an enormous premium, as I have shown before. All are paid which can be except $135,000,000, and more than money enough is lying in the Treasury to pay them with a large surplus left as a reserve. We can not pay any more until 1891, no matter what surplus we have idle and locked up from the people who own it. It will be a condition of things that this country will resent and this Congress will not be proud of to see $100,000,000 of surplus money within a year or so (for there will be more than that owing to the growth of the country, with no reduction of taxation) paid into the Treasury and our officials paying from $20,000,000 to $25,000,000 of premium to the men who hold our bonds not due until 1891 and 1907 in order to get money into circulation, and that robbery of the tax-payer must be repeated year by year, while we are piling up taxation and refusing to give relief from it.

The Committee on Agriculture may well be afraid to make a report. Yet we all know that we are by this bill imposing at least $10,000,000 and perhaps $15,000,000 more taxes, and that is done without any report as to the need of it, without any suggestion that there is a dollar required, indeed when it is plainly apparent that every additional dollar of taxation that we impose is only adding that much more not only to the burden of the tax-payer but to the embarrassment of the Treasury.

Surely in that condition of things it is fair that the Finance Committee of this body, which has to deal with internal and tariff taxation, which knows or is presumed to know from its past investigations whether or not the country will not be seriously embarrassed by adding more taxes, should be required, or, at least, allowed to report the facts. It is plainly apparent to all intelligent men that taxes ought to be promptly reduced from $50,000,000 to $75,000,000 in the interest of all the business people of this country as well as of all the payers of taxes. Yet we are called upon to proceed in a bill like this without a report as to the condition of our finances from the Committee on Finance, to pass a measure which on its face shows that, leaving all other questions out for the present and not discussing the merits of it beyond the single point of it being a revenue bill. I regard such a proposition as little less than an insult to the intelligence of the Senate and a direct reflection on the Committee on Finance. I insist that the Senate owes it to itself, owes it to the decent and orderly forms of legislation, owes it to the country that a report should be made on this measure and its effect by the Committee on Finance, and that it ought to be referred to that committee for the purpose of showing whether or not this tax is needed, or whether any additional revenue will not be a serious embarrassment to the administration of the Government and to the finances of the country.

If that is refused, the vote of the majority can have but one meaning, and that is, that there is a determination to push this bill through against all precedent, against all rules, to obtain some purpose which I doubt whether Senators will be sustained before their constituents or before the country in pushing through. I will, as I said, avoid speaking on its merits on this motion. It certainly reaches into all the questions relating to internal revenue and tariff taxation. If we are not in this form proposing to embarrass the Government by adding still further to its surplus idle money, by providing for from ten or fifteen millions more revenue, then it behooves us, if we are wise men, to amend it by putting salt, coal, aniline dyes, and dozens of other things on the free-list, so as to reduce our revenues and keep them within bounds. We ought to adjust all the inequalities of tariff taxation. If need be, although I have opposed that always, because the money all goes into the Treasury, let the taxes be removed from tobacco in all its forms. Everything relating to taxation is open in this bill.

I need not state what is well known to every gentleman here, that both political parties, if politics are to enter into the consideration of this question, have pledged themselves to a reduction of taxes and a readjustment of the existing tariff laws for the purpose of giving relief to the country. If the bill goes to the Finance Committee I hope that committee, if they consider that it ought to pass, will so readjust existing taxes as to reduce them at least fifty millions even if this tax is imposed; but to add ten or fifteen millions more and leave everything as it is now and violate all the pledges that both parties gave as to relief from taxation does not seem to me to be a fitting thing to do.

Therefore I move that the bill be referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. President, I do not care to discuss this question of reference at all. That was very thoroughly discussed in this body when the bill came from the House of Representatives. Of course the friends of the bill understand very well that this motion, if it should carry; can have but one possible result, and that is to carry the bill over the session; in other words, to bury it in the Committee on Finance, where there is not time at this stage of the session to consider and report it back. I simply desire a vote on this motion.

Mr. MAXEY. Mr. President, when the question of oleomargarine first came before Congress the friends of this measure placed it on the ground largely that oleomargarine was an unwholesome food, and proposed to legislate in regard to it upon that theory. That theory, however, was completely abandoned, and there is not one word of that in this bill. On the contrary, this bill recognizes oleomargarine as a wholesome food, a legitimate subject of manufacture and of sale. It does not attempt to destroy it as an unwholesome food, to prohibit the manufacture of it as such, but it simply regulates the manufacture of it by imposing a tax upon the manufacture and tax upon the sale. It is, therefore, not a bill to prevent the sale of unwholesome food, but it is a bill to tax an article of food. Upon that there can be no sort of question.

The third section imposes a tax of $600 on the manufacturer, $480 on wholesale dealers, and $48 on retail dealers. Section 8 imposes a tax of 5 cents a pound on every pound sold, and section 10 imposes a tax of 15 cents a pound on every pound imported.

The whole of this bill and its entire framework from the beginning to the end is a tax-bill. It is not a bill with which the Committee on Agriculture has anything whatever to do, because it does not pretend on its face to be a bill which affects the agricultural industries of the country; it does not pretend to be a bill which is designed to prohibit the sale of unwholesome food in the District of Columbia or in the Territories within the jurisdiction of the Congress of the United States; but it is purely and wholly and simply a tax-bill and nothing else. If oleomargarine is unwholesome, and known to be so, then the passage of this bill would be a criminal prostitution of the power of Congress, for in such case Congress would license for money the manufacture and sale of food injurious to health; the fact that the tax power is exercised and the manufacture and sale are licensed conclusively proves that Congress does not hold oleomargarine to be unwholesome.

No one disputes or doubts that Congress has the power "to lay and collect taxes, duties, imposts, and excises, to pay the debts and provide for the common defense and general welfare of the United States." But when you come to exercise that power, sound wisdom, sound statesmanship, demands absolutely that you should determine whether or not the needs of the Government demand the taxation. If the needs of the Government do not demand the taxation, then I deny that Congress has the right to extort from the people a part of their hard earnings in the form of taxation when there is no need for that taxation for the support of the Government.

Is there any need for it? There is the question. The Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECK] has stated—and he has the figures before him and the statement is undoubtedly true—that the excess of revenue over the needs of the Government is to-day $96,000,000 a year. If then, there be an excess of revenue above the needs of the Government, is there any right in conscience, in equity, in justice, to demand of the people to still further fill up the coffers of the Treasury when there is no need for it for the purposes and the purposes only contemplated by the Constitution?

It is then a tax bill. The Committee on Agriculture, intelligent as that committee may be, is not intrusted by this body with the investigation of questions of revenue. Those questions are questions which have always been regarded by the Senate as proper to be investigated and reported upon by the Committee on Finance. That committee is in direct communication with the Secretary of the Treasury; that committee looks into amounts of expenditures proposed by Congress; that committee looks into the amounts of revenues which may be raised under the various laws which raise revenue; that committee estimates the expenditures as compared with the income, and in that way ascertains whether or not it is necessary to increase or reduce taxation.

Upon that investigation, upon that examination by the appropriate committee, it is shown that there are $96,000,000 in excess of the needs of the Government raised by the various revenue laws now in force.

If, then, there are $96,000,000 a year collected more than is needed for the expenditures of the Government, I ask in the name of all that is reasonable, why should that amount be increased by taxation upon an article confessedly a wholesome article of food; because if this article be unwholesome, if it be a product that injures the health of the people, then to the extent of the power of Congress, which in this case is limited to the District of Columbia and the Territories, it should not be licensed, but suppressed. But it is not contended that it is unwholesome; it is admitted that it is wholesome, because the sale of it is legitimized by this very bill.

Mr. BECK. Allow me to say that the theory of the bill is that it is unwholesome if made cheap without a tax, and that it is wholesome if it is made at a high price with a tax. That is the bill.

Mr. MAXEY. I call attention to the framework of this bill. There is not one word on the face of the bill to show that the article of oleomargarine is unwholesome. It proposes to tax it, or as the Senator from Kentucky very well observes, it is a bad thing to permit it to be manufactured unless you tax it, and it is a good thing to be manufactured if you pay the Government for the privilege of manufacturing it.

I know very little about this oleomargarine as a food from general knowledge. I may have eaten it, for aught I know; I suppose all of us have, and have never been hurt by it so far as heard from. But I do know that it is believed by experts of scientific skill fully competent to judge, to be a sound and wholesome product for food, that it is a cheap food for the people, and the demand for this tax has never come from the people. It has come from rival industries and from nowhere else, and it is simply another of those efforts to use the power of this Government unlawfully to build up one industry to the destruction of another. That is the foundation of this whole thing. If this article proposed to be taxed is unwholesome, prohibit its manufacture to the full extent of your power. If it be a wholesome article of food, then there is no more reason for taxing it than for taxing butter, or taxing cheese, or taxing meat, or anything else which constitutes a part of the food of the people.

If the proposition which I have laid down be true—there can be no question of its truth—that this is a tax bill and nothing else, then it ought to go to the Committee on Finance and that committee ought to determine whether or not there is a need for further taxation in this country, and in the next place, if there be a need for further taxation in this country, is this the proper article to lay that tax upon.

These are grave and important questions, which should be investigated by the committee, of which the presiding officer is an honored member, and their report should come to this body.

This is the view I take of it, and for that reason I shall vote for the reference of the bill to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. BECK. Mr. President——

Mr. HARRIS. I ask the Senator to let me present at this time an amendment, in order that it may be on the table, and if the bill be not disposed of to-day that the amendment may be printed. I propose to offer it at the proper time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection the proposed amendment will be received and printed.

Mr. PLATT. I should like to hear the proposed amendment of the Senator from Tennessee read for information.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to strike out all after section 2 of the bill and insert:

SEC. 3. That it shall be unlawful to sell or offer for sale within the limits of the District of Columbia or any of the Territories of the United States, oleomargarine as defined in section 2 of this act, unless the package containing the same be clearly and distinctly marked or branded with the word "oleomargarine," and in addition the purchaser informed of the true character of the article so offered for sale. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction shall be fined not more than —— dollars or imprisoned not more than six months, or both, in the discretion of the court, and one-half of the fine so imposed shall go to the infomer.

Mr. BECK. Mr. President, I am very hoarse this morning, an unusual thing with me, but I desire to have read as a part of my remarks a report which I propose to submit to the Committee on Finance if the bill goes there, which contains my views of what they ought to report back. Perhaps I can not say where it came from. I ask the Secretary to be kind enough to read it for me.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Kentucky asks that a paper be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

The questions submitted by these bills to this committee are of great importance, and involve the fundamental principles of the Constitution.

For our purpose the evil consequences to the regular producer of butter or any other article by the permission of a product by the spurious competitor, and even the results to health of the people may be conceded. The contention is not as to the existence of the disease, but what is the remedy, and by what authority is it to be applied?

Your committee do not think that the evil complained of can find its remedy from what Congress can do, except as hereafter stated. The legislation, if proper, must be sought from the States.

No grant of power to Congress in express terms or by fair inference from express grant can be found which would authorize any law by Congress to prevent the production of anything by a person in a State of the Union. Congress may have some power over production in the District of Columbia, or where its power of exclusive legislation extends, or in the Territories. But the power to forbid the production of butter, or wheat, or tobacco in a State will scarcely be asserted by any one.

Questions which concern the production of the soil or otherwise, the health and well-being of the people of the State, belong to that large class which, for want of a better name, has been termed the police power.

The powers of Congress refer to the foreign relations of the State, to their relations inter se, and do not pass within the confines of that interior life which constitutes the being and the civilization of a commonwealth. These are subjects for State legislation. A stranger to these local interests and internal concerns, under our system, must not intermeddle with them.

The evil to result from the exercise of the power as to oleomargarine is not seen by one who looks only to the extermination of the unwholesome product, but dairymen would readily perceive it if the power were directed against the production of butter. The question, then, of power is the primary one.

The concession will be made by most constitutional lawyers that Congress can not directly forbid the production of this or any other article in a State. But there are two modes in which it is supposed that Congress may operate on such a product; these methods are indirect.

First, it is said that Congress may act upon it through the power to regulate commerce; and, second, that as it may tax any article, it may tax oleomargarine, and so heavily as to put a stop to its production. Let us examine these in their order:

First. The power to regulate commerce is one of the most valuable and important of all those granted to Congress. It had two prominent objects: affirmatively, to give to the Federal Legislature the control of foreign and interstate commerce; and negatively, to take it from the States. The use of it by the States, under the confederation, put restrictions on trade and intercourse, and created inequalities between the States, which it was believed the Federal Government would not do if the power were vested in Congress.

It is an interesting phase of this discussion, whether the purpose to deny to the States this important power was coupled with a purpose to give to Congress the power to do all that is intended to be denied to the States. For example, it is clear that a State may not prohibit the transit or admission of the ordinary products of another State through or into its territory. But does it follow that Congress may do so? May not the absence of right in the State to do so rest upon another clause of the Constitution which gives equivalent privileges and immunities in every State to citizens of every other with its own citizens?

Your committee are not aware that it has ever been asserted for the power to regulate commerce that it involved a power to prohibit the free transportation of the products of each State through and into every other; and it could hardly have been within the minds of the framers of the Constitution to give to Congress the power to do so, when history shows that the purpose of giving the power to Congress and taking it from the States was to prevent the very result which this construction of the clause would involve and bring about. Be this as it may, no such power under this clause has been heretofore claimed, and has, in regard to the interstate slave trade, been denied by the dicta of eminent judges. (Groves vs. Slaughter, 15 Peters, 449.)

It may be within the meaning of this clause to require such needful regulations as to articles transported from State to State as will conserve the safety and well-being of the transportation, but the right to say what articles shall and what shall not be the subject of commerce is not included in the regulation of the commerce in such articles. The transportation of the article is the commerce in that article; the regulation of that transportion does not touch the right to transport the article under the regulation. Freedom as to the articles to be transported is reserved to the citizen; its transportation, as to mode, &c., is subject to the regulation of Congress.

And this is the more clear because the judicial decisions have never impinged upon the power of each State to control the right of its citizens as to food, clothing, &c., under what is called its police powers, and the right of Congress to enact anything like sumptuary laws for the States is nowhere granted, was expressly refused by the convention (3 Mad. Papers, 1369, 1370) and has never been seriously claimed in this first century of our constitutional history.

Your committee, therefore, do not think that Congress can, as a regulation of commerce, forbid or restrain the free transportation of any article from one State into another. It can regulate its transportation for its safety and for the safety of other articles or persons transported in the same or annexed vehicles provided for their carriage.

The question remains whether, under a regulation of commerce, a duty or tax may be laid upon it. Clearly not, when carried from place to place within a State, for that is not interstate commerce in the article. But how when carried from one State to another?

Regulations of commerce and revenue are wholly distinct in constitutional language. The first clause of Article I, section 8, gives the revenue power to Congress. The third clause of the same gives the regulation of commerce to Congress. In Article I, section 9, clause 6, the phrase "regulation of commerce or revenue" is used, thus emphasizing the distinction. In the convention, at one time, the revenue power was left to be exercised by a majority vote in Congress, the regulation of commerce by a two-thirds vote.

These facts, and the preconstitutional and revolutionary assertion of this distinction, leave no reason to doubt that it was never intended that Congress should lay any tax or duty on the transport of an article from one State to another. Nothing in the debates of the Federal convention, nor in those of the States ratifying the Constitution, nor in the Federalist, gives any shadow of claim to this power, and such a construction of the clause has never been asserted in any act of Congress or in any serious proposition to that effect.

Your committee therefore conclude that under the power to regulate commerce no power to forbid, restrain, or tax any product of industry is conferred on Congress.

Second. It remains to inquire whether oleomargarine or any other product may be subjected to an internal-revenue tax.

If the power to lay taxes (Const. U. S., Art. I, secs. 8 and 9) involves the power in Congress to select any article for excise or other tax, as seems to be now settled by the practice of the Government (and no doubt properly so settled), then the right to tax oleomargarine is undoubted.

But your committee are constrained to add that this is a revenue power. The right "to lay" is conjoined with that "to collect taxes," and the right to lay and collect is conjoined with the purpose "to pay the debts and provide for the common defense and general welfare." The power is conferred in order to the duty imposed on Congress. It is a trust power, and becomes a right only when used for the purpose in view. The tax is the means to the end, and is only legitimate and rightful when needful for the end.

To use the tax when needless for revenue, merely to strike down a product or an industry, is to abuse a constitutional trust; and while the power may be conferred, the right to use it in such case can not be asserted. All power under our system is trust power; to use it for the trust makes it a rightful power; to use it diverso intuitu, is wrongful perversion and abuse of power, and is contrary to the Constitution. In other words, as Congress can not forbid the production of an article in a State by direct legislation, it can not use a power conferred for another purpose to destroy and prevent such production. To do by indirect means what it could not do by direct legislation would be an unworthy evasion of constitutional limitations, which can not be sanctioned by an enlightened construction of the Constitution.

It is true that in such case the judicial power may not be able to declare such taxation void, because the judge dare not look into the intents of the legislator's breast, but the legislator who so abuses his trust and wrongfully misuses power can not avoid responsibility to his own conscience, bound as it is to support the Constitution; for by personal introspection he will find his motive not to be a tax for revenue to the Government, but a tax as a means of destruction to the product subjected to it; that is, tax used as an instrument of destruction and not as a means of revenue.

Your committee therefore think that Congress may lay the tax, if it be needed for revenue, but does it against right if only to restrain and destroy the use and sale of the article in question.

Your committee will now proceed to consider these various bills in detail.

Bill H. R. 4809 is broad in its terms and makes it unlawful and a misdemeanor for any person or corporation to make or sell any adulterations or imitations of food anywhere; and punishes it by fine and imprisonment. If this were passed all the industries engaged in food production in every State would be subject to the absolute power of Congress. This claims the direct power for Congress to permit or prevent production, to allow or to destroy it, and to regulate all sales and transfers of any such product in a State. Unless your committee have greatly erred in the views presented this bill is clearly unconstitutional.

Bill H. R. 4172 limits the power to the District of Columbia, forts, &c., and to the Territories, and while not forbidding production or sale, requires notice of the nature of the article to be labeled upon it. This bill does not conflict with the Constitution, as exclusive legislative power is vested in Congress over these places, except the Territories, and the power to govern these last is fully recognized as in Congress. Your committee, however, do not recommend its passage. The policy of this legislation is more proper for other committees, and is hardly within the jurisdiction of this committee except upon the inquiry as to power to pass it.

The same general remarks apply to H. R. 4171. The question of power is settled as to places by the considerations of H. R. 4172. But the bill is indefinite in the description of the offenses, and dangerous in the powers conferred on the so-called sanitary board, and the effect given to their reports. The bill should be carefully restrained in its operations, the offenses accurately defined, and the reports of the said board be allowed no such effect against the property, liberty, or other rights of the citizen. The policy of this bill is not proper for the consideration of this committee, and should be referred to some other.

Bill H. R. 1054 is liable to the objection that it, under the apparent purposes to regulate interstate commerce, forbids the commerce between the States in certain articles. It strikes at the articles, and does not regulate commerce in them. It is not a regulation of commerce, but a destruction of all commerce in certain condemned articles.

Its other provisions for enforcing the law and defining the offenses are not satisfactory, but these are more proper for the consideration of some other committee of the House.

Your committee therefore report back bills H. R. 4809, 4171, 4172, and 1054, with a recommendation that they do lie upon the table.

Mr. BECK. Mr. President, I think that report, which was drawn by a very able man, shows that this subject is at least entitled to careful consideration, and that it should not be thrust in upon us here without a report or statement of any sort answering the argument I have had read. I hardly think the Committee on Agriculture can answer them. When they provide that every person who knowingly purchases any oleomargarine that has not been branded or stamped shall be fined $50, or who buys from any manufacturer who has not paid the special tax shall pay $100 fine, and that his goods shall be forfeited, they are straining Congressional authority to its limit. We admit the product to be wholesome by allowing it to be imported and produced at home. It is a very serious question whether a man living in the city of Boston or the city of New York has not a right to buy anything that we allow to be imported or manufactured that he likes. States and municipalities are still recognized, I believe, and people living in the same town may yet deal with each other and buy and sell anything we have declared wholesome without the purchaser having to look to see whether the seller had paid his tax or had put a proper brand on the article. It is absurd by indirection to seek to prevent a man from buying oleomargarine if he likes it better than butter for his breakfast table; that is simply protection run mad. It may result in exposing the folly of the system.

I do not care to discuss this question any further now. I am hardly able to make myself heard, and therefore I content myself with calling for the yeas and nays on my motion to refer the bill to the Committee on Finance for consideration. The report I have had read will furnish them food for reflection.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I desire to say that I shall vote for this reference to the Committee on Finance, because I believe the bill is of such a character that it ought to go to that committee. I do not intend, however, by that vote to indicate the opinion I have on the merits of the bill. I have never seen the bill until this morning. Therefore I do not desire now by voting for the reference to have it understood what my views are on the bill.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I shall vote against the proposed reference. I voted for the reference of this bill to the Committee on Finance when the bill reached the Senate, thinking that the proper committee. The Senate after deliberation and discussion decided to send it to another committee of this body for the purpose of its being acted upon and reported, and I am glad that the committee acted promptly and reported the bill as they have. It has now been on our tables without any motion to refer for almost three weeks; and to refer it now to the Committee on Finance is to say that we will not pass it at this session. I shall, therefore, vote against any such reference.

The matter has been decided by the Senate; the subject has been examined by the committee, and we know all about it now that we ever shall know.

Mr. BECK. The bill has been reported back, it is true, but it is very well understood that individual Senators have no right or no power to call up matters for reference when they want to do so. I had an important bill in regard to railroad attorneys which the Senator from Vermont promised when we sent it to his committee to bring back in eight days, and he held it for twenty-two, and then brought in a burlesque substitute, and I have not been able yet to get a chance to make a motion in regard to that. So it is not a very easy matter to bring up bills and ask their consideration or a change of reference.

I have made this motion at the earliest possible moment when I could see any possibility for a hearing. Matters were arranged, as I understood, by some caucus arrangement on the other side, so that we were until half past 12 to have a morning hour and then the river and harbor bill should take all the time outside of that until it is too late now to complain that gentlemen change their votes on the question of reference because there have been improper delays in regard to the matter.

Mr. BUTLER. I should like to inquire of the Senator from New York if he proposes to get a vote on this bill to-day?

Mr. MILLER. Of course I am not able to say as to what the Senate will do. I certainly hope to be able to get a vote on this bill to-day.

Mr. BUTLER. I hope not. There is no occasion for railroading the bill through the Senate without discussion, as I understand seems to be the purpose of the Republican caucus as far as I can find out.

Mr. MILLER. There is no intention to rush the bill through without discussion. I shall discuss it myself, and of course I expect to accord the same privilege to every other Senator who wants to discuss it; but I hope to keep the bill continuously before the Senate as long as they want to discuss it, and at the end of the discussion to get a vote. I have no expectation of railroading the measure.

Mr. BUTLER. It has been intimated about that it was the purpose of the majority of the Senate to get the bill through nolens volens. I wanted to know about that.

Mr. MILLER. I intend to speak on the bill myself, and do not intend to cut off others.

Mr. BUTLER. I desire to submit some observations on it before we get through, and I should like some understanding about it.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. I desire to state that yesterday I paired with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. EUSTIS] and agreed to announce it on the question of taking up this oleomargarine bill. I happened to be detained in the Departments a short time this morning, and was not here myself when the vote on taking up the bill was reached. I desire to state that if I had been here I should have voted to take up the bill and the Senator from Louisiana would have voted against that motion if he were present.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CHACE (when the name of Mr. ALDRICH was called). My colleague [Mr. ALDRICH] is paired with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. CAMDEN].

Mr. BUTLER (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. CAMERON]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. CALL (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SABIN]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. CAMDEN (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH].

Mr. CHACE (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Georgia [Mr. COLQUITT].

Mr. WALTHALL (when Mr. GEORGE'S name was called). My colleague [Mr. GEORGE] is paired with the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. PIKE].

Mr. VAN WYCK (when Mr. MANDERSON'S name was called). On this vote my colleague [Mr. MANDERSON] is paired with the Senator from Ohio [Mr. PAYNE].

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. BROWN (after having voted in the affirmative). I am paired with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN]. As I do not see him in the Chamber I withdraw my vote.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I am paired with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL], but I find from the RECORD that he voted for the reference of this bill to the Committee on Finance, of which he is chairman. I therefore vote for the reference.

Mr. EDMUNDS. My colleague [Mr. MORRILL] is paired generally with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. SAULSBURY]. I think it due to say that I believe if my colleague were here he would vote under the circumstances against this reference, but I do not know it.

Mr. INGALLS. I have been requested to announce the pair of my colleague [Mr. PLUMB] with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. GIBSON] who usually sits nearest me.

Mr. SPOONER. My colleague [Mr. SAWYER] is paired with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. HAMPTON]. Were he here, my colleague would vote "nay."

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. Did I understand the Senator from Kansas to announce a pair with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. EUSTIS]?

Mr. INGALLS. A messenger just came to me from the room of the Committee on Appropriations requesting me to make the announcement that my colleague had paired with the senior Senator from Louisiana.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. Does the Senator mean Mr. GIBSON?

Mr. INGALLS. Yes, sir.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. I am paired with the junior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. EUSTIS]. If he were here, I should vote "nay" and he would vote "yea."

Mr. MCMILLAN. My colleague [Mr. SABIN] is detained from the Chamber by sickness, and would vote "nay" if he were here. He is paired, as has been stated.

The result was announced—yeas 15, nays 29; as follows:

So the Senate refused to refer the bill to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. President, the bill under consideration is House bill 8328, having for its object, as the title indicates, to define butter and to impose a tax upon and regulate the manufacture, sale, importation, and exportation of oleomargarine. I think no bill has been before this body for many years which has excited so much public interest as this. It has been the topic of conversation and of discussion both in newspapers and in public meetings from Maine to Minnesota. The great body of the American people have been interested in the question, and they have taken the trouble to make their views known to Congress. During the present session we have received here petitions signed by at least fifty thousand American citizens praying for legislation similar to that contained in this bill. Some five or six thousand in all, I think, have petitioned against its passage. The number of petitions going to the other branch of this legislative body have been much larger in number than those which have been received here. Every Senator has found his daily mail filled with petitions and with letters from leading citizens from all portions of this country praying for the speedy passage of this bill.

The interests involved are very great. On the one hand they comprise all our people, for all our people are consumers of butter. On the other hand the dairy interest in this country reaches into nearly every farmer's home from one end of the land to the other. The interests involved are sufficient to command the most serious attention of this body.

Doubtless this is a new species of legislation, or largely so, in this country, and under our system; but the exigencies of the case seem so great that this body can not afford to ignore them.

This bill assumes at the beginning that a very great wrong is being done in that a food product, which is consumed by all our people, is being counterfeited or imitated and passed off upon the people for the genuine article, thereby defrauding the consumer and injuring the producer of the genuine article.

This matter has been going on for a number of years until now this great industry of the dairy is threatened with destruction and it comes up seeking relief and remedy, and in order that that relief may be given this bill has been framed. It is in form a bill proposing to tax the manufacture and sale of this imitation article known as oleomargarine.

I resort to no subterfuges in this case, Mr. President. My object in bringing forward this bill and supporting it is, not to secure a large increase to the revenue of our Government; but I have sought to invoke the taxing power of the Government in order that under it the Government might take absolute control of this manufacture, might properly regulate it, and so regulate and control it that it should be carried on in a legitimate way and that the product should be sold to the consumer in all cases for what it is, and it is for that purpose that the friends of this measure have invoked the taxing power of the Government.

I do not propose to discuss the constitutionality of this bill, nor do I believe that any lawyer here will seriously question its constitutionality, for the power of the Government to tax any and all products or manufactures of this country has been recognized from the beginning of the Government down to the present time; and under that taxing power the Government has always regulated and controlled the article taxed as it saw fit. It has done this especially in regard to our tariff upon foreign imports. While tariffs on foreign imports are nominally laid for the purpose of raising revenue, yet from the beginning of the Government, from the first tariff act down to the present time, there has been aside from the question of revenue a question of protection to American manufacturers and producers. The first tariff act ever passed, which was passed, I believe, on the second day of the First Congress, in its preamble stated that that law was enacted for the purposes of raising revenue and of protecting American manufactures.

Mr. President, if we may thus exercise the taxing power under a tariff bill, I have no doubt of our right to exercise it under an internal-revenue bill, and we may exercise it in such a way as we see fit, so as even absolutely to destroy and inhibit the article thus taxed. That power was used during the early days of the war when the Federal Government, desiring to firmly establish the national banks and to give into their hands the issuing of the currency of the country, enacted a law taxing the circulation of State banks 10 per cent. It was never claimed for a moment that that was a tax for revenue. That was a tax for extermination and it had the effect. It drove out of circulation all the currency of the various State banks and has kept it out of circulation up to the present time, and forever hereafter prevents its circulation unless the law shall be repealed.

Mr. President, this question has agitated the people of my own State and of many other States for a number of years. More than four years ago a number of the leading dairymen of my State came to me to consult with me in regard to legislation upon this subject both by the State and by the Federal Government. I then advised them that in my judgment no legislation would ever be effectual for their protection unless it was undertaken by the Federal Government, and I advised them then that under the Internal Revenue Department, exercising the power of the Government to tax this article, its manufacture, and its sale, it could be so regulated as to render frauds almost if not quite impossible, and that proper protection could be given to the dairy interests of the State.

Last winter, when the National Dairymen's Association met in the city of New York and I was invited to be present, I replied by letter, stating that I could not be there, but I advised the appointment of a committee upon legislation and the drafting of a bill which should put the manufacture and sale of oleomargarine under the Internal Revenue Department by placing a tax upon it. As the result of that convention and of its deliberations a committee was appointed which draughted this bill, and it was presented in both Houses of Congress.

"Oleomargarine" is a term which is undoubtedly well understood by all of our people. It applies generally to all imitations of what is known as dairy or milk butter. Originally "oleomargarine" applied only to such imitations as were made from the fat of beef-cattle. I will not detain the Senate by going into any description of that process; but since its first manufacture in this country great changes have come about, and instead of oleomargarine to-day as it appears upon our markets being made entirely from the fat of beef-cattle or out of oleo oil as it is termed, the testimony taken before the committee shows that oleo oil is one of the lesser ingredients now used in the manufacture of imitation or bogus butter. It is now stated upon authority which is not questioned that not more than 15 to 20 per cent. of oleo oil is used in the manufacture of this product. The balance is either refined lard or some other fat mixed with vegetable oils and with some milk, and in some cases with pure dairy or milk butter.

It will be seen further on that the change in the manufacture of this article and the using of a large number of fats and oils has entirely changed its character, and that to-day no person can be sure of the constituent elements of this article unless it is carefully analyzed by a chemist. Therefore it is that even if the original article was wholesome, as is claimed by its supporters, it by no means follows that the article put upon the market to-day which varies in its constituent elements as the manufacturers differ as it comes from the different establishments scattered throughout the land, is wholesome for food purposes.

FOUR PRINCIPAL REASONS FOR SUPPORTING THIS BILL.

Mr. President, I base my support of this bill chiefly upon the four following reasons:

First, it is necessary in order to protect the whole people from fraud and imposition in having a counterfeit article sold to them for the genuine.

Second, it is necessary to protect the public health, for if it be admitted that oleo when made according to the process known as the Mége process is wholesome, yet I hold that the best of it, made as it is made to-day, is not as wholesome as butter and that it may be the means of communicating disease to the human system.

Third, it is necessary to protect the chief farming interests of this country, which is the dairy, from unjust and fraudulent competition and consequent loss, if not absolute ruin.

Fourth, this legislation is necessary because the States have not been able thus far to either suppress or properly control the great evil of which I have spoken, and as sufficient remedy can be found nowhere in my judgment save under the Federal Government.

FIRST, TO PREVENT FRAUD UPON THE WHOLE PEOPLE.

First I say it is necessary to prevent fraud upon the whole people. It is one of the highest duties of all governments to protect their subjects against fraud. All our statutes, the statutes of all civilized nations, are full of laws for the express purpose of preventing fraud in commerce and trade, and the law holds that all contracts fraudulently made or tainted with fraud are invalid. This article of imitation butter is fraudulent in its commercial bearings from beginning to end. Although it may be manufactured in accordance with the prescribed methods, and although it may be sold to the dealer upon its own merits and under its own name, yet the statement which I now make can be verified to the fullest extent, and that is that not less than nine-tenths of all the imitation butter made in this country is sold to the consumer as butter, bought as butter, and used by the consumer believing it to be butter.

This article is not made and put upon the market as a substitute for butter. If it were that would be legitimate and proper, for we are constantly substituting one article for another; in all kinds of manufactures we are doing that; but this article is so manufactured as to imitate butter, and it is stated by the manufacturers that the imitation is so close that only experts can detect the difference, and that frequently it requires a chemical analysis to determine whether the article is bogus or genuine.

Mr. President, this article, as produced by the manufacturer, in its natural state would deceive no one. The oil as produced from the fat either of beef cattle or of swine or of sheep is perfectly white, odorless, and tasteless, and no human being who had ever used pure natural butter would be deceived by it. It would simply pass for refined lard or some similar material. In that condition it has in it all the qualities substantially that it has when it has been converted into a bogus and imitation butter. Originally under the process of Mége after this oil had been produced in its white, tasteless, and odorless condition, it was simply churned with a certain amount of milk, a very small amount indeed, and colored yellow to imitate butter, and then put upon the market and sold as butter. It is this latter part of the process which is confessedly a fraud, for in the investigation before the committee the scientific experts brought before the committee by the advocates of oleomargarine did not hesitate to say that this last process was resorted to for the express purpose of making it appear like butter and making it taste like butter, giving it a flavor of butter by the milk or cream which was used in the churning process.

SOLD NOT AS A SUBSTITUTE, BUT AS BUTTER.

So we see, Mr. President, that the pretense that this is merely a substitute for butter is not correct. It is not put upon the market as a substitute for butter; it is put upon the market as butter itself.

This imitation or fraudulent transaction follows it in every step of its progress from the time the fat has been converted into the oleo oil until it reaches the table of the consumer. After the manufacturer of this article has mixed with it milk or cream or a little natural butter and his coloring matter, in order to make the deception perfect, he goes still further in the deception; he proceeds then to pack it in tubs or firkins of precisely the same shape and size as have been used and are constantly being used by the farmers and dairymen of this country to pack their butter in.

It is in proof that the manufacturers of this article send all the way to Vermont to have made for them firkins or tubs from a fine white spruce which grows there and which is used by the dairymen of that portion of the country for the packing of their natural butter. Why is this done? Simply in order that they may make the deception more complete. But they carry it still further than that. When it has once been put into these butter firkins or tubs they then proceed in almost all cases to brand it with a deceptive brand in order that they may deceive the consumer, and in many cases the letter-heads and bill-heads of these manufacturing firms are also deceptive. I propose to call the attention of the Senate to the testimony upon this question of fraud, for it is upon that point quite as much as upon any other that I rest my support of this bill. Let us see how this is put upon the market.

The manufacturers of this article in coming before the committee state that they always sold it to the wholesale dealer or the retail dealer for what it was; that he knew what he was getting. It seems from the testimony on the hearing that that statement is substantially true; that the manufacturer does in nearly all cases, if not in all, sell this to the retail dealer for what it is, and the retail dealer knows precisely what he is getting. But it also appeared from the testimony that the manufacturer within his own manufacturing establishment, before the article left it, before it was shipped, did proceed in nearly all cases to put upon the firkins or tubs in which it was packed deceptive brands, which were intended to deceive the people or whoever might see it.

It was admitted freely by Mr. Webster, the representative, and one of the firm of Armour & Co., of Chicago, the largest manufacturers of this article in this country, and I propose to call the attention of the Senate to that branch of the question. Before reading Mr. Webster's testimony or admissions, I call the attention of the Senate to a circular or letter-head which I have before me. I will not give the name of the firm, because I do not desire here to do injury to any one, but this is a genuine circular furnished to me from the trade to which it had been sent. After giving the name of the firm, it reads thus:

[Wholesale dealers in butter.]

SOUTH WATER STREET, CHICAGO, January 4, 1886.

DEAR SIR: We this day reduce prices as follows:
Extra fancy creamery, 25 cents; bail boxes, $2.20.
Extra creamery, 20 cents; bail boxes, $1.75.
Creamery, 18 cents; bail boxes $1.60.
Extra dairy, 15 cents; bail boxes, $1.35.
Dairy, 13 cents; bail boxes, $1.20.
No. 5, 12 cents; bail boxes, $1.05.
Rolls and prints 1 cent extra.

Not satisfied with taking the tub and firkin, which have been used from time immemorial by the honest farmers of this country, they went still further and they invaded the province of the little petty dairy, where the housewife made her butter in such small quantities that she could not pack it into a tub or firkin, but made into little rolls or prints and send them daily to the village store to be sold. That was always a fine quality, and was always sought after, and these people follow it to that extent:

All delivered at depot in Chicago.
We pack in all sizes of ash and spruce tubs, also New York half-firkin tubs and firkins, also in 18 and 20 pound cans, four cans in a case.
Yours, truly.

So that if it were wanted in New York it would be put up in precisely the same kind of a tub as the consumers of butter in the city of New York are in the habit of seeing tubs which are used in the great butter county of Orange and the surrounding counties which in the New York market has been a synonym of purity and extra quality for a century. Ready the manufacturers are to put it in any shape or style you want it, in order that the retail dealer when he gets it may be able to sell it readily to his customers.

Awaiting your orders, we remain,
Yours, truly,

———.

Mr. MCMILLAN. Is that an oleomargarine circular?

Mr. MILLER. That is an oleomargarine circular from a firm which manufactures during the height of the season 60,000 pounds of oleomargarine daily in the city of Chicago; but there is not a line or a letter or a word upon that circular to indicate that it is oleomargarine, or butterine, or anything else. They start out with the direct proposition that they are wholesale dealers in butter.

ANY BRAND AT THE REQUEST OF THE DEALER.

I stated that nearly all, if not all, the manufacturers of this article did undoubtedly sell it to the retail dealer for what it really was, and sold it probably at a fair or reasonable price. Now, I wish to call attention to the testimony of Mr. Webster, of the firm of Armour & Co., upon the question of branding:

The CHAIRMAN. Does your house ship its products to this District; I mean oleomargarine or butterine?

Mr. WEBSTER. We do.

The CHAIRMAN. How are the tubs that come here branded?

Mr. WEBSTER. I do not know, but I think they are branded as we usually brand them. Sometimes we put on merely a specific name, but our products usually are branded like that. [Exhibiting a printed paper to the committee.]

The CHAIRMAN (reading the paper). "Armour & Co.; pure dairy butterine." "Armour & Co.; finest creamery butterine."

Senator VAN WYCK. Why are the words "dairy" and "creamery" put on that bill?

Mr. WEBSTER. Merely to distinguish the grades. Creamery butterine is the highest grade.

Senator VAN WYCK. Why do you not say "first quality" or "second quality?"

Senator SAWYER. Mr. Webster stated, before you came in, that they used 25 per cent. of butter besides the milk, which ran it up to 35 per cent., and in some other grades less.

Senator BLAIR. What are some of those names which occur to you which you put on at the request of customers—those brands?

Mr. WEBSTER. I am not very familiar with that. My business is at the office, 5 miles from the packing-house, but "Oakfield" is one.

Senator BLAIR. That represents oleomargarine?

Mr. WEBSTER. Yes, sir. That is the brand, I believe, that some of our customers ask us to put on.

Senator VAN WYCK. Is there anything on that label indicating that it is oleomargarine or butterine?

Mr. WEBSTER. No, sir; nothing specially.

Senator BLAIR. You sell in quantity to those who sell to the consumers?

Mr. WEBSTER. Yes, sir.

Senator BLAIR. Why should not they desire the thing they have to sell to be branded according to the fact?

Mr. WEBSTER. I can not answer that; that is their own matter.

Senator BLAIR. Do you not understand that is a matter of deception on their part?

Mr. WEBSTER. Not altogether. A man may have a sort of private brand. Many people have private brands that they sell their products under; not this product specially, but many things which I should think it would be legitimate to mark with a brand.

Senator BLAIR. But there is nothing on this package to indicate what it is. You say "Oakfield." We will suppose it is the name of a place or the name of a person; but there is nothing to indicate whether it is butter, butterine, oleomargarine, lard, or what not.

Mr. WEBSTER. They may have a brand that they put on after that.

Senator BLAIR. They may have.

Mr. WEBSTER. Well, I do not pretend to follow it to its remotest limit.

The CHAIRMAN. Would you, at the request of a customer, brand it "Oakfield Creamery," or "Oakfield Dairy," without using the word "butter?" Would you put that on if they asked you to?

Mr. WEBSTER. I think we would.

The CHAIRMAN. Simply "Oakfield Creamery," without the word "butter" attached to it; simply "Oakfield Creamery" or "Oakfield Dairy," if a customer desired that brand put upon it?

Mr. WEBSTER. I think we would. It is merely a distinguishing term as to quality.

The CHAIRMAN. Do not all the manufacturers in branding it leave out the words "oleomargarine" and "butterine," and simply brand it "dairy" or "creamery?"

Mr. WEBSTER. Possibly so. Sometimes they put on a single name without specifying whether it is dairy or creamery.

The CHAIRMAN. What do you mean by that?

Mr. WEBSTER. Sometimes they will put on the name with the word "oleomargarine" under it.

The CHAIRMAN. Does your house ever brand it without using the words "butterine" or "oleomargarine?"

Mr. WEBSTER. Yes; but not to any great extent. We do that on an order, because customers ask it.

The CHAIRMAN. You brand it just as your customers ask to have it branded, if they have any desire about it?

Mr. WEBSTER. Well, we use a consistent judgment about that. If our customers should ask us to brand it "creamery butter" we should decline to do it.

The CHAIRMAN. But if they ask you to put any special brand or name upon it, you do that?

Mr. WEBSTER. Yes, sir.

Here is an admission that the largest manufacturer of this article in the country, although usually branding his goods "oleomargarine" or "butterine," will, at the request of the dealer who desires to so put the goods before his customers, brand them as "Oakfield Creamery," or "Oakfield Dairy," or any other fancy title that may be given. Every one who is at all familiar with the produce trade of this country and with the manufacture of butter knows that the various creameries that manufacture the genuine article simply put a brand of that kind upon it. The name may be "Oakfield" that they place upon the tub of butter, the brand "Oakfield Creamery," if it is a creamery. They never put the word "butter" upon it, for that never has been thought to be necessary. The words "creamery" and "dairy," by common consent and by common use, are applied to the genuine article of butter only.

So we see in this case that the fraud begins in the manufacturing when instead of making a substitute they make an imitation article. They carry it still further in the packing in the tubs or firkins, as the case may be. Then when they come to the branding of it they put upon it a brand which is distinctly intended to deceive the people and the consumers.

I might go on here and read lengthly quotations from the testimony taken before the committee showing how this fraud is carried on, how the people are imposed upon, but that testimony is before the Senate, and I scarcely think it necessary that I should go into it at any great length at this time. If any question shall be made during this discussion, or if it shall be claimed that this is not carried on fraudulently and imposed upon the people, I shall then undertake to go into that question very fully and show up what the testimony is.

NINE-TENTHS SOLD AS BUTTER, AT THE PRICE OF BUTTER.

Now, we have traced this article from the manufacturer to the retail dealer, and at this point I repeat the statement made a moment ago that nine-tenths of it is sold as butter and not as oleomargarine.

The opponents of the bill brought only one or two persons before the committee who undertook to say that they had positive knowledge that it was ever sold for what it really was. The great weight of testimony from beginning to end in the investigation made here, and in the investigations which have been made by the State of New York, goes to prove most conclusively that it is, nearly all of it, sold to the consumer through deception; and it is observed that but a very small part of that now manufactured and sold could be sold if it were sold upon its own merits as what it really is.

When it reaches the retail dealer and goes upon his shelves it goes alongside of the genuine butter, and the ordinary consumer, the ordinary purchaser, has no guarantee whatever except the honesty and fair-dealing of the man of whom he purchases as to the quality of the goods he may receive. All the prosecutions which have been made in New York and elsewhere to prevent this fraudulent transaction have only brought out more clearly the fact that the retail dealer actuated by his desire of gain does in almost every instance sell the bogus article for the genuine, and at the price of the genuine article. If it be admitted, as I do not admit, that it is a perfectly wholesome food, yet the fraud upon the consumer is very great, if it be viewed from a financial standpoint.

Let us see what the people pay for it under the present system. It appears that it costs to manufacture it at the present time somewhere from 6 to 9 cents a pound, depending upon the quality and depending upon the perfectness of the imitation, or the amount of milk or cream or butter which is put into the article; but as it is being sold freely at wholesale for 10 cents a pound, it is fair to assume that the manufacturer is able to make it probably at about 7 cents a pound. If the consumer were to receive this article as an article of food, and were to pay for it what it costs plus a fair profit, there might be an argument made in favor of its consumption by those whose means are limited; but the testimony goes to show that in nearly all cases it is sold substantially at the same price as butter, usually ranging a little under the price of the best or fancy grades of butter. For instance, if fine creamery butter were selling at 30 cents a pound, a retail dealer would alongside of the tub of fine creamery butter have his oleomargarine, branded as "Oakfield creamery," but claiming that it was of inferior quality sell it for 25 cents a pound, thereby making a profit of 15 cents a pound upon it.

If in the competition of business creamery butter is driven down to 20 cents a pound, alongside of the firkin of creamery butter is the tub of oleomargarine, which is sold as butter, not as oleomargarine, for 17 or 18 cents a pound, upon the ground that it is butter, but not quite so good a quality as the creamery butter. Again, in this case the consumer pays more than twice its actual cost.

What does this amount to in money? The House committee in their report have estimated that 200,000,000 pounds of this bogus or imitation butter is made annually in this country. In my examination I found it very difficult to obtain any proper data. Manufacturers themselves claim to know nothing about the business save their own, and could not undertake to say how much there was made in the country, and of course the boards of trade and commerce could not give any correct figures, as the great bulk of it is handled as butter and not as oleomargarine.

But taking the figures of the House committee for convenience, if it is sold to the retail dealer at the average price of 10 cents per pound it would bring $20,000,000; but sold to the consumer as butter, as it has been for the past year, at an average say of 20 cents a pound—though I believe the average is a little above that—the fraud upon the consumers of the country has been $20,000,000, and it would be the same proportion whether the amount I have given is correct or not. If it were only 100,000,000 pounds per annum the fraud upon the people—that is, the selling of it for what it is not and thereby obtaining a higher price—would be $10,000,000.

DEMORALIZATION OF TRADE.

If we want to prevent this fraud and to protect the consumers of this country we must see to it that this article is sold for what it is, and then the necessities of trade will compel it to be sold for a fair price; that is, its cost of manufacture plus a fair profit to the dealer.

Mr. President, I shall not detain the Senate with reflections upon the moral aspect of this question; I will merely suggest it. The retail dealers of food products are the most numerous of all dealers engaged in trade. No community can go on without them. They are to be found in every village and city in large numbers. This is a direct temptation to all of them to engage in a profitable branch of business, but a fraudulent branch of business—a business which can not be carried on with a large profit except as they are able to deceive their customers. The vast amount of this stuff which has been sold during the past few years, and the undoubted and unquestioned fact remaining that it has been sold for butter and not for what it is, prove conclusively the baleful effects that it has had upon the retail dealers of food products in this country. If they can be induced to resort to deception in this article, will they not do it in all other food products where they can do so to their profit?

There can be but one answer to that proposition. The Government owes it to all the people to exert all its power to prevent adulterations and fraud in food products which can not but seriously affect the health of all our people.

OLEOMARGARINE NOT A WHOLESOME FOOD PRODUCT.

Secondly, I said that I favored this bill because it would be a protection to the public health, and I hold that oleomargarine as now made is not a wholesome food product. I realize fully that this is a disputed question. I realize fully that some of the first scientific men of this country and of Europe have pronounced oleomargarine to be a wholesome food product. Of course their judgment was based upon the particular samples they were called upon to investigate. Those samples were always furnished them by the manufacturers; and it stands to reason that they were the best that they could make. Originally when this product was first produced it was produced only under the process of Mége, which I have heretofore referred to.

But this matter has now assumed an entirely different aspect. It is made out of the fats of various animals, and of various vegetable oils, and various compounds, and, as I have said before, there is no certainty regarding any particular sample which may be brought you unless you have it chemically analyzed. But believing as I do that the weight of evidence to-day is in favor of my proposition, that it is not a wholesome food, or, to put it perhaps more mildly, that it is not as wholesome as pure butter, and that it may be the means of conveying dangerous diseases to the human system, I propose to call attention for a few moments to some of the late investigations regarding this subject.

The State of New York, which is more largely interested in this question, of course, than any other State in the Union, and which has passed a large number of laws to suppress it, and has appropriated a large amount of money to carry out those laws and to prevent the fraud, has been carrying on during the last winter through its dairy commissioner a very thorough investigation of the question as to the wholesomeness or unwholesomeness of this product. I have received the advance sheets of Dr. Clark, who has been employed by the dairy commissioner to make this investigation, and I propose briefly to refer to his report at this time. He gives a synopsis of all the various patented processes for producing artificial butter which have been issued by the United States Government. They show that a large number of substances which every one will admit are deleterious to health are used in these various processes. I understand that the manufacturers of oleomargarine claim that these patents are not used to any extent; that they are merely waste paper; but I think I can show by evidence which ought to be satisfactory that at least one of these patents which had deleterious acids in the manufacture is used to a very large extent.

INVESTIGATIONS BY DR. CLARK BY AUTHORITY OF NEW YORK STATE.

But before coming to that, I will briefly allude to the investigation made by Dr. Clark on behalf of the dairy commissioner of the State of New York. He has made a very thorough investigation into the comparative digestibility of the various animal fats as compared with each other and as compared with butter, and from those examinations and experiments he arrives at these general conclusions:

We now come to the all-important aspect of the subject—is artificial butter a wholesome article of food? We answer it in the negative on the following grounds:

First. On account of its indigestibility.

Second. On account of its insolubility when made from animal fats.

Third. On account of its liability to carry germs of disease into the human system.

Fourth. On account of the probability of its containing, when made under certain patents, unhealthy ingredients.

Here is the result of his experiments very carefully made in regard to the digestibility of oleomargarine and of the various animal fats as compared with butter. Along with this report are photographic plates showing the condition of the various animal fats taken at the different stages of the process of digestion as carried on by this chemist. Without troubling the Senate to go over the whole of these experiments, let me read the conclusion:

Fig. 6, Plate I, and Fig. 3, Plate II, presents the same at the end of twelve hours, which shows that the "oleo" is but a trifle, if at all, further emulsionized than the butter was at the end of the four hours.

That is, the digestibility of oleomargarine as compared to butter is as 12 to 4. This ratio, or about this ratio, is given by a number of leading chemists of established reputation, some placing it a little higher and others a little less, some stating that the comparison between the digestibility of butter and of oleo is as 3 to 5, and others placing it even higher than that.

I need say very little more on that particular question as to digestibility. It requires no scientific teaching or knowledge to enable us to understand that a food which is of very difficult digestion is not particularly healthy. We do not need any scientific instruction to tell the common people of this country that tallow and lard are not as easily digested in the human stomach as butter. Every housewife in the land knows that; every mother understands it, and neither children nor people in delicate health are permitted to eat either of those fats, lard or tallow, in their food, because they are so indigestible as to be very unhealthy.

AMERICANS A RACE OF DYSPEPTICS.

We are told by medical men that dyspepsia is the universal disease of Americans, and they tell us that it is largely attributable to the eating of too much fat, of the tallow and of the lard which goes with our meat, and which is used in the cooking or the preparing of our food. Some have gone so far as to tell us that we are a nation of pie-eaters, and therefore a nation of dyspeptics, and that the lard which is used in the pastry to give it a light and pleasant taste renders it, at the same time, indigestible and unhealthy. Some physiologists have gone so far as to undertake to trace a connection between the food eaten by a people and their mental capacity and their mental characteristics. Some of these physiologists have suggested that the somewhat short and crusty characteristics of the New Englander are due to the amount of lard that he takes in his pie-crust. I do not know how that may be, but during the last few days in the discussion of the river and harbor bill two sons of New England have certainly given us a very good illustration of short and crusty characteristics. If it shall be pie-crust that has done it by its lard, I do not know what would be the condition of the people if they were given over to the unlimited consumption of oleomargarine, which is to-day composed of at least 75 per cent. of lard.

Then, if we look at our friends upon the other side we may find that they have been affected in a like way. Some physiologists have drawn a connection with the "late unpleasantness" in this country and the chief article of food in the South. We all know that the chief meat diet of the South for many years has been fat bacon. The result has been just what the doctors told us it would be, the production of a lean and wiry race of people. Whether that had anything to do with the late rebellion, I do not know; I can not tell. Physiologists who are following out these questions carefully suggest that it might be. But, Mr. President, you will remember that Cæsar feared Cassius because he wore "a lean and hungry look;" and well he had a reason to fear him, because it was through his conspiracy that Cæsar lost his life. I am glad to see that our friends who have returned to us and who have come to our habits of living are losing that "lean and hungry look" which we all recognized twenty years and odd ago. You could have told a confederate soldier by his visage. If he were dressed in a Union uniform he could not disguise it.

The manufacturers of oleomargarine tell us that the South is the chief consumer of oleomargarine in this country to-day. Who shall say what effect that may have upon this country in the next half century if it shall go on unchecked? But I simply make these suggestions pleasantly, and in order that the friends of oleomargarine will see just how far it may lead.

CONDEMNED BY THE FRENCH ACADEMY OF MEDICINE.

So much for the indigestibility of this article. I could read you much more in relation to that, but here is a more important matter relating to it given by Dr. Clark. When this article was first produced by Mége, the Frenchman, and was made in Paris, the council of health in 1872 made a report in favor of its healthfulness. That was when it first came out and was made according to the original process. But since then the French Academy of Medicine has carried on a thorough investigation, and has reported that it is not as digestible as butter, and therefore not as healthy, and the use of it in the hospitals in Paris has been forbidden. It was never allowed to be sold in the public markets of Paris except under its name, so that whoever bought and used it might do so knowingly and willfully; but as guarding the health of the patients in the hospitals its use has been entirely forbidden.

I do not think that any of the casual investigations which have been made by chemists in this country, no matter how high their reputation or standing may be, will undertake to overturn this decision arrived at by the French Academy of Medicine. There is no higher authority upon questions of that kind in the world, and if they, after it had first been approved by the council of health, of the city of Paris, have now condemned it, let no one say in this discussion that it is universally admitted to be a healthy and wholesome food.

This article is not only less digestible that butter, but in and of itself, it is insoluble at the ordinary temperature of the human system. Here is an experiment made by Dr. Clark in this same report, and I will read a portion of it, in regard to that question:

The artificial butters made from animal fats, although the oleine and palmitine are separated as much as possible by pressure, will not liquefy at the stomach temperature, as is demonstrated by the following experiments: We placed in an oven kept at a temperature of from one hundred to one hundred and four degrees Fahrenheit four beakers containing respectively pure butter, oleomargarine butter, oleomargarine oil (commercial), and lard oil, about 20 drams of each and which were all of the temperature of about 60° Fahrenheit when taken. At the expiration of thirty-five minutes and the temperature at 100° Fahrenheit the butter presented a clear, limpid appearance, but the others remained solid, being but very little affected; and at the end of five hours, the temperature being from one hundred and one to one hundred and four degrees Fahrenheit, they were in a semi-solid condition. The oleomargarine oil being most softened, the oleo butter next, and the lard the least softened.

These insoluble fats then must interfere with digestion in two ways: first, by not being acted upon themselves by the gastric juice; and second, by being thoroughly mixed with the other foods in the mouth they form an impervious covering to them, thereby preventing the gastric juice from coming in direct contact with them.

Randolph says that "a further reason that the fats, especially when cooked with other foods, are frequently found to be unwholsome, is that in the process of cooking they so surround and saturate the tissues of the substance with which they are combined that it is rendered nearly inaccessible to the action of the saliva and gastric juice, and at times digestion is in so far delayed that the fried substance does not become entirely freed from this more or less impervious coating of fat until subjected to the action of the pancreatic juice."

The temperature of the human stomach being 100° ordinarily, or a little less, it is shown that these fats are entirely insoluble in the human stomach, and that that adds greatly to the difficulty of digestion. The stearine contained in all oleomargarine as now made is insoluble at a temperature of less than 114° Fahrenheit. Of course that temperature is never attained in the human stomach and can not be if the person lives. The result is that the stearine contained in this product, according to this statement and according to others which I might read, is never really digested at all, but passes from the human system in substantially the same condition as it is taken in.

It is true that in the manufacture of oleomargarine they undertake to remove a considerable portion of the stearine from the tallow; but it is freely admitted by the witnesses that it was never completely done, and we are told that now, when they are using such a large percentage of neutral oil or lard, they undertake to take out only a very small portion of the stearine found in the beef fat, because stearine is the article or element which gives firmness and hardness to the compound, which enables it, as we say, to stand alone and endure heat and transportation.

One of the principal reasons urged in favor of oleomargarine was that it bore transportation better than butter, that it lasted better than butter, and therefore it was a good product. The qualities giving it better powers of resisting transportation and maintaining its firmness and its consistency and its lasting qualities are just the qualities which make it unwholesome and unfit for human food. I need not spend any time in arguing in regard to the unwholesomeness or indigestibility of stearine; every one will admit it.

CARRYING GERMS OF DISEASE INTO THE HUMAN SYSTEM.

Now, Mr. President, one of the reasons given why this article is not a fit food for man was the liability of its carrying germs of disease into the human system. It has been denied by some chemists that there was any such danger and asserted that all the parasites found in the animal were found only in the tissues and not in the fat. It has been positively stated by some chemists that no parasites or worms or trichinæ or bacteria or tuberculosæ had ever been found in the fats of animals. I deny that statement. I think I can show from testimony as good as any that has ever been had upon this subject that there is the liability of it and that there is great danger of it. I read further from this report:

The liability of conveying disease germs into the human system through artificial butter is, in our opinion, greater than is supposed by those not familiar with the subject. In the first place investigations are showing that many more diseases than was formerly supposed are communicable from animal to man. The following are some of those known to be such: Consumption, anthrax, trichinosis, tape-worm, glanders, foot and mouth disease, cow-pox, hydrophobia, &c. Many more as epidemic pleuro-pneumonia, small-pox of sheep, splenic apoplexy, braxy of sheep, typhus, &c., have, when the flesh of animals suffering from them was eaten, produced serious sickness in human beings.

He goes on:

The manner in which trichinæ can get into artificial butter can easily be seen from the following: When the animal takes a cyst containing a trichina into its stomach the cyst is dissolved by the gastric juice which sets the trichina free, when it passes out of the stomach into the intestine where it develops in from a week to ten days, and the female deposits her embryos—from 60 to 2,000 for each female trichina. The young trichinæ then make their way through the connective tissue to the muscles. Trichinæ are found in hogs, cattle, and sheep. Now, if those animals are killed during the migratory stage the caul fat would doubtless contain the parasite. Doctor Billings says he has frequently found encysted trichinæ in the adipose tissue between muscular tissue of very fat hogs, but not in the fat lying upon the muscles. He states, however—

This is the statement of Professor Taylor, of the Department of Agriculture—

He states, however, that Professor Taylor, of the Department of Agriculture at Washington, has seen in the journal of the Microscopical Association that they have been found in fat. Every one is aware of the dangerous character of this disease.

I have here a statement by Professor Salmon, of the Department of Agriculture, who has been for years engaged in the investigation of the diseases of animals. I propose to quote from him briefly upon this question:

That the fat of animals slaughtered for food may contain objectionable parasites is a fact which admits of no doubt whatever. In eating meats or fats which are raised to a high temperature, either in cooking or in rendering, we are generally protected from the parasites; but when we take into our stomachs the tissues of animals which have not been raised to a sufficient temperature to destroy these inferior organisms we confront a serious danger, which it would be folly to conceal. And this danger is the greater in our country because we have no systematic and skilled inspection of animals and carcasses intended for food.

Let me remark here that in Paris and all over Europe the government undertakes to inspect every animal that is killed for human food. It is done by skilled experts, and if the animal is found to be diseased in the least it is condemned and is forbidden to be used for human food. But in this country, unfortunately, we have not yet come to a condition of affairs which enables our Government to undertake any such useful function as that. Professor Salmon produced before the committee specimens of parasites which he had himself taken from the fat of hogs. He says:

The sclerostoma pinguicola is a round worm from 1 to 2 inches long, which, as its name indicates, lives in the fat. It is a very common parasite of hogs in this section and south of here, but I am unable to speak of its prevalence in the States farther north. It bores channels through the fat about the kidneys, and lives and multiplies there in considerable numbers. It is a very difficult matter to remove all of these worms from the fat even when we carefully dissect and follow up the channels in which they live. Fortunately this worm is not known to inhabit the human body or to cause any injurious effects with the consumer.

So he goes on describing a number of other parasites which are found in the fat of animals. I simply refer to this because some of the scientific gentlemen before the committee said that parasites had never been found in the fat of animals.

THE FINDING OF TRICHINÆ IN LARD.

In regard to trichinæ he says:

It is generally supposed that the trichinæ is exclusively a muscle parasite, but this is probably largely due to the fact that it is more difficult to discover them in the lard. Chatin, who wrote a volume on trichinæ a few years ago, asserts that they may be found in the fat of parts not connected with the muscles. I have made the following translation from a passage in his work:

And this is an authority:

"a. Fragments of lard taken from a piece of American salted meat were, after hardening, examined in thin sections under a magnification of 120 diameters. Several preparations showed no trace of the parasite, but with a few the trichinæ appeared clearly characterized."

Here is positive testimony from a skillful scientific man in Paris stating that he himself by the use of the microscope has discovered trichinæ in lard. One fact eslablished overturns any theory, no matter how well it may be backed by scientific opinion. Since science first was followed down to the present time it has been remodeling and changing its theories, changing them because scientific men were constantly discovering facts which would not coincide with their previously established theories, and when any such facts were established the theory had to give way and not the fact; the fact remained and the theory went out, and a new theory was built up. So in regard to the statement that parasites have never been found, and can not be found, in the fat of animals; that is sent to the rear by the simple fact that they have been found. Let me read further from Professor Salmon:

I see no reason to doubt these statements, judging from the life history of the parasite. We all know that the adult worm gives birth to the embryos in the alimentary canal of the host, and that then the embryos bore through the intestinal walls and other tissues until they find a place where they are satisfied to coil themselves up and become encysted. The psoas muscles are among those most infested, and to reach these the embryos must pass through the leaf lard. It is not surprising that some of them conclude to stop there and make it their permanent dwelling-place.

When we consider that on an average about 2 per cent. of the hogs killed in this country are trichinous, making for the twelve or fifteen million hogs annually packed in our large cities 250,000 to 300,000 inspected animals, we can not shut our eyes to the fact that there is danger in consuming the expressed fat from hogs which have not been inspected. It is true we might not get very many of the parasites in this way, but as every adult female worm produces about 1,500 young, a very few of them would be as large a dose as most of us would care to take.

Professor Salmon continues describing these parasites and the danger of their coming into the human system through the use of these products, because it is a well known fact that the oleo oils, or the neutral lard, are never heated to such a degree of heat as to destroy these parasites. They are prepared at the lowest temperature possible for their liquefaction in order that they may avoid any offensive odor coming from the tissue; and neither trichinæ, nor bacteria, nor any of these other dangerous parasites are destroyed by the temperature used in the process of manufacturing oleomargarine or butterine.

Mr. President, of late years science has given much attention to bacteria and tuberculosa, and it is now generally believed that very dangerous diseases can be communicated from one person to another and from the animal, when the food is consumed, to the human system by bacteria or tuberculosa; and when it is known that large numbers of diseased animals are brought every year into the great slaughtering yards of the West and are there put to some useful purpose, no one knows what, may we not properly fear that the fat of some of these diseased animals finds it way to the oleomargarine factories?

THE FAT OF A KILLED HOG NOT DISTINGUISHABLE BY CHEMISTS FROM THAT OF A HOG DYING FROM DISEASE.

I know it is claimed by some that the fat of diseased animals can not be used for the manufacture of oleomargarine, but Dr. Chandler, a most eminent chemist of New York city, admitted in his examination before the committee that, if the fat was taken from a hog dying of cholera and from another killed at the same instant by the butcher, neither he nor any other chemist could distinguish the fat of the diseased hog from the fat of the healthy hog. Dr. Chandler admitted that freely and frankly. He said it could not be done.

Under our system, where there is no Government inspection or Government control, where all animals are permitted to be transported and brought to the slaughtering yards and there disposed of in some way, what guarantee have we that unprincipled men, in their greed to get rich and make profits, will not take this fat, which no chemist by any known process can distinguish from the fat of a healthy animal, and put it into a business where the profits are 2, 3, or 500 per cent., as I have shown they are in this oleomargarine business? Mr. President, can we afford to trust a matter of this importance to the discretion or honesty of the ordinary man? I think not.

Speaking of tuberculosis, Professor Salmon says:

Now, tuberculosis is a very common disease of cattle—and the bovine form is believed to be identical with that which affects man—it is a disease which also affects the hog. The tubercles often form in these animals upon the serous membranes and in the glands of the abdominal cavity in situations where they would necessarily contaminate those portions of the fat which are used in the manufacture of oleomargarine. We do not know what proportion of our beef-cattle are tuberculous, but in Europe, where careful statistics have been recorded for a series of years, and with large numbers of cattle, it is found that among the animals which come to the slaughter-houses for beef there are all the way from two to thirty in every thousand. In this country we have no such inspection, and it is very seldom that an animal affected with tuberculosis is ever condemned. It is not difficult to imagine what follows when the contaminated fat of a steer or a hog affected with this disease is transformed into oleomargarine or butterine, or any of these compounds. It may be mixed with a thousand or with thousands of pounds of other fat and contaminate it. I am unable to say how much fat is mixed together for this purpose, but I presume it varies with the capacity of the factory. If we say a thousand pounds, then it may go to a thousand families, and be eaten by five thousand persons.

There follow many questions by the committee and answers by Professor Salmon, all in this same direction, and he thoroughly maintains his proposition that parasites have been found in the fat of animals, and that there is therefore great danger of their being communicated to the human system. But I will not weary the Senate further in that direction. I simply have desired to show that it is possible that these parasites would find their way into the human system through these bogus goods if great care was not observed in their manufacture.

I stated also that it was unhealthy because many dangerous materials were used in its manufacture by some of the manufacturers. The principal manufacturers, such as Armour & Co., of Chicago, and some others, undoubtedly follow the original process, and as to the use of dangerous chemicals and acids it can not be charged, so far as I have any knowledge, that they use them at all.

Some of the scientific gentlemen who appeared before the committee undertook to ridicule the large number of patents which have been issued for the use of various acids for deodorizing the fat used for this purpose, by stating that fats could not be deodorized and never had been. It was a most remarkable statement, one which astonished me, and, I think, will astonish the entire Senate, because the deodorizing of fats is a well-established and well-known manufacturing process in this country. There can be no question whatever about it. Professor Morton, after first denying that it could be done, said that if it was done the process was so expensive that it could not be used, but it is used in deodorizing the fats from the animals which die in all our great cities, as is well known. I do not undertake to say that the fat thus produced is used in manufacturing oleomargarine at all. I have no knowledge on that question.

DEODORIZING OF THE FAT OF THE OFFAL OF NEW YORK CITY ON BARREN ISLAND.

But Professor Salmon told me only a few days ago that in a recent visit to Barren Island, near New York, where all the offal of New York city is rendered by a rendering company, he had seen fat produced from animals which had died in the city, which was perfectly white in color and was almost absolutely odorless and tasteless. If they can afford to treat fats in that way for using them in the manufacture of soaps and for lubricating purposes, I have no doubt that they can afford to do it in making a product which will sell at the price of creamery butter.

But let me call the attention of the Senate to one of these numerous patents.

There are several hundred of them. I laid the matter before the committee at the time of the investigation. This is a patent granted to N. I. Nathan, of the firm of N. I. Nathan & Co., a firm manufacturing oleomargarine or butterine, and it advertises to the world that it manufactures its product after a patent granted to N. I. Nathan and so advertises it upon its bill-heads, upon its business cards, and upon its letters. Let me read a letter from this firm, which was received in this city some time in the winter:

NEW YORK, March 30, 1886.

SIRS: We have taken the liberty of forwarding to you per P. R. R. one 10-pound tub of our creamery brand of butterine, which we claim is the finest in the market, for which we do not charge you anything. We guarantee uniformity in quality at all times, and our present price for the same is 10 cents per pound net, F. O. B., New York, in the following packages, namely: Half firkins, 10, 20, 30, 40, and 56 pounds Welsh tubs—

I want here to call the attention of the Senate to a subject to which I alluded some time ago, and that was the fraud in putting up oleomargarine in packages which heretofore had only been used by manufacturers of butter.

IMITATING THE WELSH TUBS OF CENTRAL NEW YORK.

The Welsh people are known to be par excellence the best buttermakers; and they are located largely in Oneida County and adjoining counties in New York State, and they have from time immemorial used a particular form of tub in which to pack their butter, which has got to be known in the market as the Welsh tub. Not satisfied with stealing the ordinary firkin and ordinary butter tub, in order to deceive the people they have picked out this special thing, the Welsh tub, and they have put up their butterine in that in order that people might think they were buying butter made by a genuine old Welsh lady in the interior of New York—

Fifty-six-pounds Welsh tubs; 1-pound rolls, thirty, forty, or fifty in a tub; 60-pound tubs, catch-weight rolls; 1-pound round prints, forty in a case; 1-pound square prints, 52 pounds in a case.

If the quality and price are satisfactory, we would be pleased to receive your valuable orders.

Very respectfully, yours,

N. I. NATHAN & CO.

I stated at that time to the committee:

The CHAIRMAN. I also hold in my hand a business card which reads as follows: "N. I. Nathan & Co., manufacturers of butterine, under patent granted to N. I. Nathan."

I have also here a copy of a patent granted by the United States to N. I. Nathan, of New York, for a process of making artificial butter.

NITRIC ACID NAMED IN THE PATENT OF A LARGE MANUFACTURER.

After describing the process the patent proceeds thus:

The lard which has passed through the sieve is then subjected to the action of cold water, to which has been previously added and thoroughly stirred a quantity of borax and nitric acid, about in the proportion hereinafter specified. By treating the lard in this solution, composed of water, borax, and nitric acid, the effect is to further cleanse the lard and make it partake of or assume a clear white color, free of all odor, and almost perfectly tasteless.

Still Professor Morton told us there was no known system of deodorizing or purifying fats.

After being subjected to this treatment, the mass is removed and thoroughly rewashed in cold water, preferably in a separate and distinct vessel from that previously employed, whereby the product becomes a purified or deodorized leaf-lard, its characteristic being that it is of a beautiful color, a clear white, perfectly odorless, remarkably solid, and free from the disagreeable taste usually present with lard. Arriving at this stage of the process, a certain minute quantity of nitric acid is added—

This is the third addition of nitric acid—to the water, and incorporated with a certain quantity of the purified or deodorized lard to further strengthen the solution, and this mode of treatment and addition of nitric acid are continued as mass after mass of the purified or deodorized lard is prepared, the operation being continued until the product assumes a clear white color, void of odor and taste. The product thus obtained is mixed with oleomargarine, which is then a commercial article and readily obtained in the market, and when all is thoroughly mixed, the mass is subjected to heat, &c.

It will be seen that the last solution of nitric acid which is added to it is never washed out. It is first treated with nitric acid and borax to deodorize it and purify it, and then the process is continued by a further addition of nitric acid, and in that condition it is finished.

This firm manufacture several million pounds of butterine per annum. They advertise over their own name that it is manufactured under this patent granted to N. I. Nathan. If it is not manufactured under that, it is still a fraud, because they advertise that it is thus manufactured. Dr. Clark refers to this patent and to the danger of a small portion of nitric acid being left in the material and thus gradually and insidiously breaking down the human stomach.

UNDOUBTED FINDING OF NITRIC ACID IN OLEOMARGARINE.

Dr. Taylor, of the Agricultural Bureau, told me three days ago that a friend of his, a chemist of high standing, had been making a large number of analyses of various samples of oleomargarine or butterine, and that in one sample he had discovered an appreciable amount of free nitric acid. This one fact overturns the theory of Professor Morton or of Dr. Chandler that none of these deleterious substances can be or have been used in the manufacture of these various products. I think the actual discovery of nitric acid in one sample of oleomargarine is worth all the theories of all the scientific men in the country upon the proposition that it can not be found there.

Mr. President, I will not detain the Senate longer upon the question of the healthfulness or unhealthfulness of this product or the danger of its containing germs of disease. Scientific men tell us that this product is a real butter; that in its chemical analysis it comes so closely to natural butter that the small difference found can be of no avail; and that therefore it must be as healthy as ordinary butter. They admit, however, that pure butter contains all the way from 5 to 10 per cent. of certain elements such as butyrine and caprylin and a number of others, elements which give the flavor, the peculiar flavor, to pure butter, that are not found at all in oleo oil or neutral lard, that there is not in them naturally the least trace of these most important essential oils which give to butter its characteristic and which render it so desirable as an article of food, and it is for the purpose of adding to this neutral matter, this oleo oil, some butyrine, some flavoring in order that they may make it more desirable, in order that they may make it more like genuine butter, that they do put in some genuine cream or milk or genuine butter, in order that they may the better deceive the people with their products.

SUBSTANCES ALIKE CHEMICALLY TOTALLY UNLIKE PHYSIOLOGICALLY.

It does not follow because two substances are substantially alike chemically that they are therefore alike in their action upon the human system; and if these two products, butter and oleomargarine, were more nearly alike than they are, it would then not follow that the one manufactured article was therefore as pure and wholesome as the other natural article. The microscope is able to detect and determine every kind of fat. It will detect the globules of pure butter in any compound. It will detect the globules of tallow or of cotton-seed oil or of any other oil that may be put under it. And we find that all these various fats present most striking differences under the microscope; that while the chemist may say they are chemically alike, the microscope tells us that in their form and condition they are radically different.

Mr. President, I wish I had illustrations here of these various globules of fat in order that I might show to the Senate what radical differences there are in their structure. I simply allude to the matter to show that the mere fact that two substances are substantially alike chemically does not prove that they are alike in their effects upon the human system. We all know that cellulose, which is the principal constituent element of all plants, is the same in all the plants, is the same in the tree and in the grass, but I do not think that because they are chemically alike any sensible man would think that he might as well feed his horse with the cellulose obtained from sawdust as the cellulose obtained from blue grass or fine clover. If he did the horse would go to the bone-yard or the oleomargarine factory very soon.

It is a well-known fact that, chemically, mineral and bone phosphates are precisely the same. No chemist has ever been able to detect a particle of difference between the mineral phosphates and the bone phosphates; but it is a well-known commercial fact that the bone phosphates are more than twice as valuable as fertilizers as are the mineral phosphates, but chemistry has never yet been able to tell us why. I have no doubt an equal difference between butter and oleomargarine exists as exists between mineral phosphates and bone phosphates; that is, that one is twice as valuable as an article of food as the other; that as a matter of nutriment for the human system butter is vastly more valuable than oleomargarine. It is also known that dried blood, which is used largely in fertilizing and is one of the richest fertilizers, is chemically precisely the same as leather scraps; but if you fertilize one field with dried blood you will get an enormous crop, and if you fertilize another with leather scraps you can not raise anything on it at all; but the chemist tells us they are precisely alike.

So, Mr. President, no argument can be made from the statement of the chemist that these two substances are substantially alike chemically except as to 5 or 10 per cent. of butyrine and the other elements which are found. I have shown you that the microscope teaches us that they are materially different as they are presented under the microscope, and it holds to reason, and the experiments which have been made and to which I have referred prove, I think, most conclusively, that it is neither as wholesome nor as nutritious a food as is butter, and, therefore, if it is to be used as a human food it should be used so that every person using it may know what it is. If a person wants to eat an unwholesome food and an indigestible food, let him do so, if he is a man full-grown and of sound mind, but make it impossible that he should eat it without knowing it, without his being absolutely sure of it, for how are we ever to protect the health of our children, how are we to care for the sick, how are we to protect those in the hospitals if they are liable to have given them every day as an article of diet a food product which the Academy of Medicine in Paris has forbidden to be used in the public hospitals and which the best authorities there say is not as digestible and as wholesome as butter? If it goes on unchecked, if this fraud is permitted to continue, it must result in a large number of our intelligent people giving up the consumption of butter entirely unless they can be absolutely certain of its place of production.

PROTECT THE DAIRY INTERESTS!

But, Mr. President, my third and principal reason for supporting this bill is found in the fact that it is intended to give protection to the great farming interest of this country, the dairy interest.

I said at the beginning of my remarks that I had no subterfuges upon this question, that I did not support the bill because it levied a tax and because it might bring some revenue into the Treasury of the United States. In this matter I invoked the taxing power of the Government in order that I might do some great good to a very large portion of all our people. I believe that to be a sound ground; at all events I have taken it, and I propose to stand upon it.

Mr. President, let me call the attention of the Senate for a few moments to the importance of the dairy interest of this country. In order that I might be accurate in my figures I have asked the statistician of the Agricultural Department to give me so far as he could the figures relating to this matter down to the present date, and he has done so. I present the result of his labors:

NUMBER OF MILCH COWS.

The following is the census exhibit of cows on the farm at four decennial periods.

Census.	Cows.	Gallons of milk.	Average.
1880	12,443,120	2,893,698,520	232.6
1870	8,935,332	1,840,186,160	205.9
1860	8,585,735	1,499,985,364	174.7
1850	6,385,094	1,063,161,127	166.5

The number on farms, as estimated by the statistician of the Department of Agriculture, in January, 1886, is 14,238,388. Including those in towns and villages the grand total of milch cows must be 16,000,000. Thus the increase has been about 15 per cent. in the last six years.

The increase has been largest in the West. New York and Iowa occupy the highest places in numbers, as follows:

	1880.	1886.
New York	1,437,855	1,510,300
Iowa	854,187	1,230,695

This is an increase of 44 per cent. in Iowa and a little more than 5 per cent. in New York, which reports 31,000 milch cows less than in January, 1885. Minnesota has made an increase of 40 per cent. from 275,545, to 386,366. Kansas has made an increase of 157,000, and Missouri of 47,000. In point of percentage the increase of Nebraska is most noticeable, 91 per cent., from 161,187 to 309,106.

VALUE OF MILCH COWS.

The value of milch cows on farms in recent years is thus stated in the records of the Department of Agriculture:

Years.	Value per head.	Total value.
1884	$31 37	$423,486,649
1885	29 70	413,903,093
1886	27 40	389,985,523

Including all milch cows not on farms the present value at the decreased rate reported this year would be $438,000,000.

There is a decrease of 3.97 per head in two years, equal to $63,520,000 on the entire number. Some of this decrease is due to a general shrinkage of values, but much of it is evidently the result of the unequal and fraudulent competition of oleomargarine. The decline in the value of horses has been less than 5 per cent., while this decreased value of milch cows is nearly 13 per cent.

MILK PRODUCTS.

Including the entire products of milch cows, in city and country, from an aggregate volume of 5,600,000,000 gallons of milk, at 350 gallons average, the following record is made:

Butter, at 3 gallons per pound	lbs...	1,000,000,000
Cheese, at 1 gallon per pound	lbs...	370,000,000
Milk used as food	gals...	2,170,000,000

The consumption of butter exceeds 17 pounds per capita in this country. It averages only 5 pounds in Europe, though it is 13 in Great Britain.

I wish my friend from Kentucky were present—I do not refer to the Senator from Kentucky now here [Mr. BLACKBURN] but to the senior Senator [Mr. BECK]—that I might refer him to this statement to show how much better the people in this country live, including the laboring people, than they do in Europe. But we will let that pass.

The consumption of butter has been increasing in former years with the greater ability of the masses to consume, until the recent invention of butter substitutes of various names and heterogeneous ingredients, which are taking the place of genuine butter, reducing its value, limiting its consumption, and throwing suspicion on every grade of butter products.

I have here a table giving the average production of milk to cows in the various portions of the United States.

Average milk product in butter and cheese and milk sold, exclusive of milk consumed on the farm.

Sections.	1870.	1880.
	Gallons.	Gallons.
New England	300.5	353.9
New York, New Jersey, and Pennsylvania	325.2	367.1
Delaware, Maryland, and Virginia	137.1	177.2
South Atlantic States	53.6	76.5
Gulf States	54.7	93.0
Ohio basin	208.0	257.1
Lake States	259.5	274.4
Trans-Mississippi States	159.1	175.6
Pacific-coast States	160.0	228.4
Rocky Mountain district	63.3	108.9

The average for the entire country is believed to be about 350 gallons, including the home consumption. The dairy States have much higher averages. New York averages about 475, and other dairy States nearly as much.

I have here a table of the exports of butter and cheese by decades, from 1821 down to 1880, showing the great value of the dairy interests in the matter of international trade, furnishing to us an article which is largely exported and thereby doing very much to keep the balance of trade in our favor:

*Inclusive. †1855 to 1860, inclusive.

I asked the statistician of the Agricultural Department to give me, as near as he could, figures regarding the number of people actually and directly interested in the manufacture of butter as far as possible. Of course this applies only to those actually engaged in its manufacture, and not to the whole number of people employed upon the farms throughout that portion of the country which is given up to dairying. He says:

UNITED STATES DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE,
Washington, D. C., June 17, 1886.

DEAR SIR: Yours relative to numbers interested in dairying is received.

Nearly all the farmers in the United States are in some degree interested in milk production, though perhaps half of them are very little interested in butter and cheese production.

Those who are immediately connected with the manufacture in factories were as follows in 1880:

In New York	3,368
In Ohio	819
In Iowa	795
In Illinois	698
In Wisconsin	561
In California	391
Elsewhere	1,271
Total	7,903

These represented probably twenty-four thousand people, as nearly all are males above sixteen years. But the number supplying milk to these factories and those interested in farm dairies, large and small, are very large.

There are now about four million five hundred thousand farms in the United States, one-fifth of which, or nine hundred thousand, are doubtless engaged in the manufacture of butter and cheese beyond their own immediate supply, and therefore are interested in the commercial aspects of dairying. With females and dependents, the number especially interested in this manufacture would reach three million people.

Very respectfully,

J. R. DODGE, Statistician.

Hon. WARNER MILLER,
United States Senate.

Of course we know that all the people in every community are interested directly in whatever may be the principal industry of that section. It is difficult to arrive at a full comprehension of the total value of the butter interests of this country. From the census of 1880 I have been able to give substantially the amount of milk produced, the number of pounds of butter produced and the number of pounds of cheese, but at what prices these have been sold or consumed it is very difficult to say, but I find that the House Committee on Agriculture in their report having considered this matter found—

That there are in the United States over 15,000,000 cows, producing annually over 1,000,000,000 pounds of butter, and 300,000,000 pounds of cheese, and that the product is worth $250,000,000. That about an equal amount of milk is consumed as milk, so that the product of the dairy interest of the United States is worth $500,000,000 annually.

That far exceeds in value any other farm product, whether it be wheat or cotton or tobacco, or any other of the great products of our country. Nothing approaches it, and no single industry or line of manufacturing approaches it in importance.

I have given the number of cows and their value at different periods. Let us look for a moment at the amount of land and its value used in this industry.

DAIRY INVESTMENTS.

The value of milch cows, even at present reduced rate, has been shown to be $438,000,000. The investment in lands is a still larger consideration. It may be difficult to give it exactly, but at the value of land in 1880, allowing five acres per cow, the acreage required for the milch cows on farms alone is 71,176,940 acres, and the valuation $1,353,785,399. Including the cows within the limits of towns and villages, pastured both on town and neighboring farm, and the value of lands required for all, at the same rate, would be $1,521,600,000.

If any one should insist that four acres per cow is enough it would reduce the land investment to $1,217,280,000.

The investment in factories, milk-houses, utensils, horses and wagons, and other property adds materially to these large figures, so that with the most moderate allowance for land the dairy capital can not be reduced much below $2,000,000,000. The figures for the United States and for the principal dairy States are given as follows:

	New York.	Ohio.	Iowa.	United States.
1880:
Acres in farms	23,780,754	24,529,226	24,752,700	536,081,835
Value of farms	$1,056,176,741	$1,127,497,353	$567,430,227	$10,197,096,776
1886:
Acres devoted to dairying*	7,551,500	3,878,620	6,153,475	71,176,940
Value of dairying area	$335,362,115	$178,300,161	$141,037,647	$1,353,785,399

*Five acres per cow.

Mr. President, what is known as the dairy belt begins upon the Atlantic coast in Maine and extends through the whole breadth of the country to Minnesota, and then passing over the Rocky Mountains we find it with a strong lodgment in California, Oregon, and Washington Territory. It reaches as far south as the Potomac and Ohio Rivers, and even in certain portions of this line it bends south into Virginia and West Virginia and into Kentucky and Tennessee, and to-day even into some portions of the uplands of Mississippi. The population of this vast region which I have just described is considerably more than thirty millions, more than one-half of all our people, and in that region, particularly north of the Potomac and Ohio Rivers, it is the chief industry. It has been gradually stretching out to the west until to-day it has invaded the wheat-fields of Minnesota, and the statistics which I have read here show that the increase within a few years in Minnesota has been 40 per cent.

This growth, this extending westward, has been necessary for the preservation of the fertility of our lands. If we go back to the early settling of the country and before the West was opened, we find that wheat was grown in all the Eastern States, that it moved westward from New York through the Mohawk Valley, then into the Genesee Valley, then into Ohio, then into Indiana and Illinois, until finally it only stops at the Rocky Mountains. As the lands of the East became less able to produce wheat profitably, the farmer gave it up to the West and turned his attention to cattle raising and to dairying; and thus it is that to-day in all New England, in New York, in New Jersey, and in Pennsylvania there is almost no wheat-growing at all. But I have read statistics here showing the importance of the dairy interest to all those States. The wheat belt is already passing further west into Dakota, into California and into Oregon and Washington Territory; and it will be a few years, and a few years only in my judgment, when even those fertile regions will produce less and less wheat, when they will be obliged to diversify their industries by the introduction of the dairy interest.

VALUE OF COWS DECREASED FROM $10 TO $20 PER HEAD.

Now, Mr. President, this immense interest is threatened with great loss, if not destruction. Already the value of our herds in all these regions has decreased largely. The value of our lands has also decreased largely. I could read from the statements and the testimony before the committee to show that in the Eastern States, particularly in New York and Pennsylvania and in the States which are given up almost entirely to dairying, the land on the average has depreciated at least $20 per acre in the last few years, and that the value of the cows upon the farms has decreased from $10 to $20 per head. In my own State the report shows that the value of the cows upon the farms has decreased at least $20 per head within the last few years.

If the computation should be made, the loss to the country by this depreciation of our lands and of our herds would, in my judgment, appeal to every Senator upon this floor to give his aid and his support to a measure which will do something to check this depreciation and loss. It is not claimed that all this depreciation in the value of our lands and of our herds is due to the introduction of oleomargarine. We understand very well that the dullness of the times, the loss which has come to all the business of the country, has had very much to do with it; but those who have given it a careful consideration and inspection believe that at least one-half of this depreciation of which I have spoken is due to the introduction of oleomargarine or to its being sold as butter. I hold in my hand a letter of Hon. Harris Lewis, president of the New York State Dairymen's Association, bearing upon this point, which I will read.

FRANKFORT, N. Y., June 26, 1886.

MY DEAR SENATOR: The anxiety in regard to our oleomargarine-butter bill is becoming more and more a matter of interest in all the dairy sections of the State. When any class of our people find their capital gradually slipping away, without any fault on their part, and with the same care, industry, and economy as before practiced, they are very apt to believe something wrong. The average price of dairy cows has fallen, from about $55 to $60, to $40 or under, and no man can tell what our real estate is worth, divided up into dairy farms. One thing we do know, that but few dairy farms in this county will pay all the expense of cultivation and leave anything for the owner.

Now, I do not insist that all the loss sustained by dairymen has grown out of the imitation butter business, but when we find so many million pounds going into consumption all around us, which takes the place of natural butter, we can judge of its gross effects.

Again, the imitation butter is almost everywhere on sale, and a large class of citizens prefer not to eat butter than to eat it from home without knowing its pedigree.

Many of the dairymen would like to have the imitation butter taxed out of sight as the only way to deal with it, but many of us think a high tax unnecessary, and that the Senate in its wisdom will place the manufacture and sale of all imitation butter under the kind care of the Internal Revenue Department, where all men are supposed to do right and to be honest. Any method that will secure open, fair, equal competition by which this imitation butter will sell for what it is, and nothing else, will, in my opinion, satisfy the people.

Yours very truly,

HARRIS LEWIS,
President of the New York State Dairymen's Association.

DEAR SIR: When I left this my intent was to write something more, but something preventing I closed it up without signing. Pardon my stupidity.

HARRIS LEWIS.

I also have a letter here from the secretary of the New York Dairymen's Association corroborating this statement of the president, in which, speaking of the great value of the dairy interest to the State of New York and its loss, he says:

ILION, N. Y., June 26, 1886.

DEAR SIR: I have with much interest watched the proceedings in Congress on the oleomargarine bill.

The people and dairymen of the State of New York are much interested and solicitous in regard to legislation on the bill now in the Senate.

There is more than $350,000,000 value in lands, cows, and implements employed in the dairy in the State. The production of butter is much the larger portion to which this value is employed. Take in consideration all the items of expense, it costs more than 20 cents to produce a pound of butter. Imitation butter can be made for less than one-half the cost of genuine butter. Nearly all the imitation butter sold by the retail trade is sold for butter, not for what it is. In consequence of the fraud in the trade the imitation takes the place of the genuine article and supplants just so much of the genuine; therefore dairymen are obliged to compete with that which costs less than one-half of genuine butter.

If you can compel the sale of imitation butter for what it is you will accomplish what the people and dairymen desire and ask.

Dairymen do not fear competition with imitation butter when the imitation is sold for what it is. What we ask is, compel dealers to sell it for what it is.

That in dairy districts, as butter has depreciated in value, lands and cows have depreciated about in the same proportion. Within the past five years land and cows have depreciated about 20 per cent. in value in this State, being about in proportion of the depreciation of money value of butter.

Very respectfully, yours,

JOSIAH SHULL.

Hon. WARNER MILLER,
Washington, D. C.

A RETURN TO GRAIN GROWING AND FAT CATTLE MAY BE NECESSITATED.

Mr. President, in what condition would the farmers find themselves in the vast territory of which I have spoken if having given up grain-growing, having giving up growing cattle, and having given their whole attention to the dairying interest, they now find that no longer remunerative? If some assistance is not given them there is but one course left open to them, and that is to return to the old system of mixed farming, to the growing of their own wheat and their own corn and the growing of fat cattle for their own home markets. The result must be to deprive the West of a very large part of its market for grain and fat cattle, which certainly will be a very great loss to all the West, for to-day the farmers in the dairy districts of the East do not produce any considerable portion of the grain which they consume upon their farms, but import it from the West, thus giving up all their lands to pasturage and to meadows, finding it heretofore cheaper and better for them to bring these products from the West.

Mr. President, we all know that changing from one system of farming to another is necessarily a slow process. It has taken fifty years for the farmers of the East to change from grain growing to dairying. It was a process which went on gradually and slowly; and while at times it may have resulted in some loss and some hardship, yet the process was so slow and gradual that no great harm came to the people. That process has been completed. The East no longer produces any considerable portion of the grain that it consumes, neither does it produce any considerable proportion of the meat which it consumes. It buys these from the West.

By this process of manufacturing an imitation product, by which one man in a factory can turn out more imitation and bogus butter than all the farmers in the State of New York can make of the genuine article, the farmer finds himself confronted with threatened and instantaneous destruction in his business. If the introduction of this new article of food had been carried on legitimately and properly, if it had been sold on its own merits and for what it is, if it had proved to be a wholesome and proper food, it would have made its way slowly into consumption and it would have enabled the farmers of the dairying districts to gradually change their system of farming if they had found it necessary to do so. But too suddenly this evil comes upon them and they are all stricken down.

The best estimates that I have been able to obtain, given to me by the officers of the New York State Dairy Association, show that it costs in the State of New York to make fine creamery butter, taking our lands at their present value, not less than 20 cents per pound. It is selling in New York city at 15 cents per pound, forced there by the illegitimate competition of a bogus article.

Of course the system can not long be continued. Some relief must be found; and though the opponents of this bill argue that we have no right to legislate in the interest of one industry as against another industry in this country, yet I do not hesitate to take the ground here and now that it is the duty of this Government when any considerable number of its people are threatened by some unexpected evil to interpose its powerful arm and protect them. I hold that the protection of this interest and this industry is for the benefit of the whole people—not of the farmers alone. They are the great consumers of this country; they are the market, as I may say, for the manufacturing interests of this country; it is for them that the laboring men of the factories work in the production of textile fabrics and agricultural machinery and all the things which are consumed and used upon the farms. If this market is broken down, then you break down the whole country with it; and shall it be permitted that a dozen or two dozen and a half of men shall undertake to manufacture a product which is confessedly bogus in the system in which it is made and sold, and put their interests against ten million people in this country and destroy them?

THE FEW DOZEN RICH AGAINST THE MANY MILLION STRUGGLING.

It appears in this testimony that there are in this country to-day only thirty manufacturers of oleomargarine turning out this vast amount of stuff as shown by these statistics. They have it in their power to bankrupt and destroy this great farming industry of which I have spoken. They are doing it to-day as rapidly as they can. They are able to sell their product for 10 cents per pound or less. They sell it for whatever the market may be, of course their product going in and helping to break down the market, and consequently reducing it in order that they may force their goods into market.

Shall it be said that the Government has no right to interfere for the protection of this great interest, even temporarily? I think not, Mr. President. I think no Senator will care to take that ground and assert that we have no right here representing the people, chosen and sent here by them to look to their interests, to say that the interests of this vast section of the country are not to be cared for by the legislation which is proposed in this bill.

If it shall go on unchecked, it will convert the honest yeomanry and farmers of this country into tenant farmers whose condition will be little better, if any, than that of the tenantry of Ireland. Already throughout New York and all this dairy country wherever a farmer with 100 or 150 acres of land, tilling it with his own hands, has a mortgage upon that farm and can not out of this industry secure sufficient to support his family, pay his labor, and pay the interest on his mortgage, the result is that hundreds and thousands of these farms are to-day in the hands of the sheriff, being sold for mortgages upon which the payment of the interest has not been kept up.

What is to be the result? Of course these farms fall into the hands of the rich men. Men who have money and are able to invest it do not hesitate to take up these lands for the mortgages, and then the farmer who has toiled through thirty or forty or fifty years of his life from early morning until late at night at honest toil, loses his home, his fireside, his shelter, and becomes a tenant farmer at will.

Mr. President, in my judgment the safety of our institutions rests upon the large number of independent individual landholders in this country. If under our system of government it shall so happen that these small landholders shall be compelled to give up their farms, so that they shall fall into the hands of capitalists, then our country will be nearly ready, in my judgment, to change its form of government and become an aristocracy or a monarchy.

This legislation is necessary to prevent any great monopoly from fastening its hands upon this country. This whole business, I have stated, was in the hands of not more than thirty men. A few days ago you saw in the papers that a combination of five or six men engaged in the slaughtering of animals in the West was about organizing a syndicate or pool to control the slaughtering of animals in this country. Five or six men substantially control it to-day, and if they see fit to organize themselves into a combination, like the Standard Oil Company, they can control absolutely the meat product of this country; and when they have done that, they can give us cheap oleomargarine or they can give us dear oleomargarine, just as they please. We shall find ourselves bound hand and foot by monopolies.

Mr. President, every consideration which should influence a legislator here, in my judgment, demands of him that he should look carefully and well to the interests of the mass of the people, to the producers of these products which are necessary for all of our people.

STATE LAWS ENTIRELY INEFFECTUAL.

Sir, I gave as another reason for my support of this bill that State laws were ineffectual; that up to the present time none of the States had been able to pass such laws as had at all checked this evil or controlled it. I think twenty or more States have passed laws either absolutely forbidding the manufacture of bogus or imitation butter, or controlling it and compelling it to be sold for what it is; but the testimony taken before this committee and before a number of other investigations goes to show most conclusively that none of the States have been able to effectually enforce these laws.

The State of New York has passed, I think, some thirteen separate enactments. It has appropriated and expended up to this time $146,000 to secure the suppression of what the State of New York believes to be a great evil, the selling of this article for butter when it is not. But the testimony of the dairy commissioner and his assistant, and of all the produce dealers of the State of New York, is still to the effect that a great majority of it is sold in New York under a false name for butter. The same testimony comes from Pennsylvania, from New Jersey, and from nearly every State.

There was an attempt before the committee to show that in the State of Massachusetts the Massachusetts law was thoroughly executed and that it was there sold for what it was; but how was the proof? In the city of Boston they have a milk inspector appointed by the city government to inspect milk and milk products and butter, and to see that they are honestly sold and that they are not adulterated, and to prosecute offenders. That officer came down here in the pay of the opponents of this bill, brought on here by the oleomargarine manufacturers of the city of Boston, and he admitted before the committee that he came here at their request and at their pay. He undertook to say that in the city of Boston he believed the law was pretty well carried out, and told the committee how he had done it. He told the committee how many notices he had issued, some three or four hundred in all; that wherever he found a person selling it without notifying the consumer as to what it was, instead of prosecuting him under the law he gave him notice that he must not do so again, and then he took it for granted that the law was carried out. But his jurisdiction extended only over the city of Boston, and he admitted that the goods were shipped from there to all the villages and towns of Massachusetts, and he also admitted that the bulk of the goods came into Boston without being branded at all, or else branded as "creamery" or "dairy" without either the word "oleomargarine" or "butterine" upon them. The chief officers and members of the Produce Exchange of Boston came before the committee, men who came here in the interest of pure trade and commerce, and they told the committee that the law was not enforced in Boston or anywhere in Massachusetts to any considerable extent, and they challenged the milk inspector of Boston and his appearance here in the pay of the oleomargarine people.

Mr. President, if the dairy commissioner of New York, who has charge of this business in our State, had ventured to come here in the interest of oleomargarine he would not have ventured to return, I think, to the State of New York. At all events his commission would have been taken away from him by the governor of the State by telegraph. He would not have been permitted to use his office in such a way as that.

But that was substantially the only attempt that was made before the committee to show that this material was anywhere sold for what it was, except that Mr. Webster, of Armour & Co., stated that in their manufacturing establishment they there sold it to people who came in at retail for what it was and sold it for a price a little above what they charged to the retail dealer, and that a certain number of people did go there and buy it at that very low price. The dealers who came before the committee and the manufacturers who manufacture it, almost without exception—with only one exception—admitted that they did not use it at all upon their own tables, that they only used it for cooking purposes as they would lard.

THE GOVERNMENT MUST ASSUME CONTROL.

Mr. President, I will not go into the testimony in regard to the ineffectual workings of the various State laws. It stands to reason that they can not be effectual and that they can not succeed when we consider the present condition of commerce in this country. These goods are manufactured in various States; they are shipped over all our lines of railroads and steamboats; they go without let or hinderance from one State to another; and when this stuff is being brought into New York and Chicago by the hundreds of car-loads unmarked or else branded so as to imitate butter it is absolutely impossible that the dairy commissioner with all his experts and assistants should be able to detect any considerable portion of it; and the assistant dairy commissioner states in his showing that if they were to undertake to reach all the retail dealers in the city of New York alone in this matter and to watch over all this as it came into the city upon railroads and steamboats it would require not less than a thousand inspectors to do it.

There is but one way in which it can be done securely, and that is by requiring the article to be manufactured in an establishment under the Federal Government's supervision, and that none of it shall be allowed to go out of that manufactory until it is thoroughly branded and until it has affixed to it the internal-revenue stamp, and carrying with it all the penalties which attach to infringements of the internal-revenue laws. When that shall be done, then this material will be known wherever it goes; it can not be unloaded at a depot; it can not be taken off a train; it can not be exposed in the markets anywhere without any one who buys it being warned in advance that he is buying a bogus article.

Mr. President, I think I have said enough in regard to the policy of the State laws to show the necessity of the Federal Government taking control of this matter. None of our State governments have any bureau or system similar to the Internal Revenue Bureau. The Federal Government has had this bureau in operation now for a quarter of a century. It is thoroughly established. It has its agents in every part of the country. It is a perfected system of licenses and of inspections which are well known to all of our people and are thoroughly feared by all evil-doers. This can be put under the control of that department, and not very seriously embarrass it with its work, and through it the people can know to a certainty what they are buying. It seems to me that one consideration is sufficent to induce the Government to undertake this work.

THE TAX A NECESSITY.

A tax is found in this bill that in my judgment is not too high. It should be sufficient to recompense the Government for all expenditures connected with this provision; and even if it should go further and afford some incidental protection to the farmers of this country, I think no one would be harmed. If the tax had been left at its original figure as the bill was introduced, at 10 cents a pound, I should have supported it heartily at that figure, but having been reduced by the other House to 5 cents, I have not undertaken and have not thought it wise in the committee to either increase it or diminish it.

I am anxious that this bill shall pass at this late stage of the session precisely as it came to us from the House, for if amended here we all know that there may be danger of its failing between the two bodies.

This bill is not to take effect until ninety days after its passage. If it shall pass and become a law it will not go into effect until nearly the 1st of November, and if it shall be found to work hardship in any direction, if it shall be found to be inadequate in any of its provisions, Congress will be in session in December and can again take up the matter and correct it. But, believing that this tax is not too high for the purposes of the bill as I have expressed them, I hope that the Senate will leave the tax as it now is, at 5 cents a pound.

I desire briefly to call attention to some of the objections which have been made to this measure, and then I shall leave it.

The manufacturers and those interested in this industry have undertaken to array three distinct classes of people against this measure. First, they have attempted to arouse the cattle-men, so-called, those men who upon the great plains of the West grow cattle, not for dairy purposes but for food purposes, and they have told the cattle-men and the committee that if this law passed it would reduce the value of all beef-cattle in this country at least $3 a head.

WHY THE CATTLEMEN OF THE WEST SHOULD FAVOR THIS BILL.

I shall be able to show that it will do nothing of the kind, that it will not reduce the value of beef-cattle at all, in my judgment, and even if that proposition were true I should still appeal with confidence to the cattle-men of the West to come to the aid of the dairymen of the East and protect them in their rights and in their property and in their industry. Let us see about this proposition of reducing the value of beef-cattle at least $3 per head. Mr. Webster, of Armour & Co., who gave the opinion to the committee that it would reduce the value of beef-cattle $3 per head, stated that the amount of fat taken from a beef animal which could be used for oleomargarine was upon the average 55 pounds, or less than one-half the total amount of fat; that its value over ordinary tallow was from 5 to 8 cents per pound. Taking it at 7 cents per pound, he made the increase in value about $3 per animal. Mr. Webster also stated that at least two-thirds of all the oleo oil produced in this country was exported, and therefore it would not be affected by this bill at all. That takes out by this calculation two-thirds of it, or $2 out of the three at the start. But does any one here who knows anything about the cattle industry of the West and about the value of beef-cattle at the present time, and who has looked over the prices for the past ten years, undertake to say that the manufacture of oleomargarine has in any appreciable degree increased the market price of beef-cattle? You can find nothing of the kind in the reports of the country. On the contrary, there has been a large reduction in their value instead of an increase.

But the manufacture of oleomargarine or the using of 55 pounds, or nearly one-half, of the fat found in a beef animal and converting it into oleomargarine oil, which is worth more than ordinary tallow, has really decreased the value of all the tallow in this country more than $3 per head of all the cattle that are killed. Before oleo oil was produced in this country, when tallow was made from the entire fat of the animal, it held the markets of the world, it was the finest tallow produced anywhere, and we exported it in immense quantities to Europe, and it commanded a price of from 7 to 9 cents per pound. Why was that? Because the best portions of the fat went into the tallow, and the stearine, which makes the tallow hard, makes it valuable for illuminating purposes, for the manufacture of candles, was left in it; but by the manufacture of oleo oil the best of the fat is consumed or used in that process, and of course the remainder makes only an inferior quality of tallow, which to-day instead of commanding the markets of the world, is scarcely exported at all.

We have been driven out of the markets of Europe by tallow from Russia and that portion of Europe, and to-day our common tallow is worth only 3, 3½, or 4 cents a pound, when before this process began it was worth 6, 7, 8, and 9 cents per pound. If you will make the computation you will find that the value of beef-cattle has been absolutely diminished by this process rather than increased. There is nothing whatever in this argument. The cattle-men of the West are as much interested in this industry as the dairymen are in the dairy sections.

I have already stated that the dairymen throughout New York State are no longer producing beef-cattle. They can produce beef-cattle if they are compelled to do it. They have the finest grass in the world, the best pastures, and if it shall be no longer possible for them to produce butter and cheese, what will they do with their one million five hundred thousand cows; what will they do with their twenty or thirty million acres of land which are to-day being used for pasture and the support of the dairy cow? They must again return to the growing of beef-cattle, and in three years from now if the New York farmer is compelled to give up dairying he can produce every year and put into the market half a million of fine beef-cattle, and being near the great cities and the great markets of the East, although he may not find it as profitable as he has found dairying heretofore, yet he has no choice. The land is there and he is there, and he must get out of it the most he can.

Why, sir, to-day, all down though Central New York and through the dairy regions where I live, our farmers do not produce their own meat. Every day a refrigerator-car with Chicago dressed beef passes through the great valley of the Mohawk and stops at every village, and into a refrigerator it puts 10 or 15 tons of Western beef, and the dairy farmers of that section, instead of growing their own beef, come down to the village markets and buy Chicago dressed beef. They have done this because they have turned their attention entirely to one thing, the production of butter and cheese. Take from them that industry, and they must turn to the other, and the lands in New York, which have not grown wheat for nearly fifty years, and which have been growing in fertility because of the cattle which have been kept upon them, must return to wheat-growing also.

THE WHEAT-GROWERS OF THE WEST INTERESTED.

Not one out of ten of the farmers of New York to-day grows his own wheat for his own table, but the lands are again fertile and the farmers can again return to growing wheat and they must do it. But, as I say, changes in the management of affairs and in the process of farming are necessarily slow. They have been holding on now for five years contending against this accursed thing which is destroying them, hoping against hope that their own State laws might protect them, until finding their inability to protect themselves there they have at last appealed to Congress.

This attempt to stir up the cattle interest of the West by the false pretense that this action will reduce the value of their herds is just as bogus and false a pretense as is the stuff they produce. No, Mr. President; the cattle-men of the West are quite as much interested in this thing as are the dairymen in New York or Minnesota. Let this industry be stricken down and we shall be able to produce, and will be compelled to produce, a very large part of all the meat which is required for the Eastern markets.

COTTON-SEED OIL MEN FALSLEY ARRAYED AGAINST THE MEASURE.

Secondly, the attempt has been made to stir up the growers of cotton in the South upon the flimsy pretext that cotton-seed oil was largely used in this process and that if it were disturbed it would break down the price of cotton.

Mr. President, that is so absurd a proposition that it seems scarcely necessary to mention it. It is answered, and completely answered, by a circular-letter which was issued by Armour & Co., of Chicago, at the beginning of this contest, in which they described their process of manufacture, its cleanliness, &c., and stated the ingredients that were used, and in that letter they state that they use chiefly the fat of beef-cattle, and lard, and that occasionally at certain seasons of the year, which, of course, is in the winter, some manufacturers use a very small percentage of salad oil made from cotton-seed, to soften the product; but no one came before the committee nor could we find any manufacturer of oleomargarine who admitted he was using cotton-seed oil regularly. Since they have come to use lard largely in this product they have abandoned the use of cotton-seed oil, if they ever used it to any great extent, and the use of all other oils.

Cotton-seed oil has its own place. It is undoubtedly a very valuable product. It makes a very valuable salad oil, and it has been used, I am told, and exported abroad and there mixed with olive oil and returned to us as olive oil. I have no doubt, if properly clarified and put up, within a few years' time the principal salad oil of this country will be made from the cotton seed, and it will be sold for what it is; there will be no necessity of resorting to fraudulent labels or any pretenses that it is something that it is not.

No, Mr. President; any attempt to stir up the South on this question is utterly futile. I have here a letter from a gentleman in the South exposing this whole attempt to stir up the people of the South on this question, denouncing it in the strongest terms, going on to say that little or none of the cotton-seed oil is used in this manufacture.

It is undoubtedly true that to-day less than 1 per cent. of the oleomargarine in this country contains any cotton-seed oil whatever.

POSITION OF THE LABORER.

The advocates of oleomargarine have also attempted to stir up one class of our people against another. They have circulated throughout the country petitions asking laboring men as such to petition Congress against the passage of this measure. They have met with very little success, I am glad to say, for the laboring men of this country are too intelligent to be deceived by any such arguments as have been presented to them. The advocates of oleomargarine have told us that this is a good, cheap food for poor people and laboring people. I do not propose to insult any of my constituents or any free American citizens by telling them that any kind of food is good enough for them unless I think it is good enough for myself; nor do I believe that the laboring people of this country desire to have any cheap kind of food set apart and designated as good enough for them, and that it is a cheap and proper substitute for a better article. The laboring men of this country know this fundamental truth, that they can not expect to and that they have no right to buy the labor of any other man for less than its true value. They do not desire to have their butter for less than it costs the labor on the farm to produce it, no more than they desire to have their own labor in the factories sold to the farmer for less than it costs. They understand full well that if the farmers of this country are compelled to sell their products for less than it costs them to produce them, in return those farmers can not afford to buy the manufactured articles which these laboring men turn out from the manufacturing establishments unless they buy them at equally reduced prices.

No men in the country understand that proposition better than the laboring men. Thus far these appeals have not been very successful in securing the co-operation of the laboring men of this country. If these parties had desired to furnish a cheap food, why have they not sold it for what it was and for a reasonable price?

SWINDLING THE LABORING MAN.

One retail dealer came before the committee and told the committee that he thought this was a very valuable food product, one which would be largely consumed in the manufacturing towns in New England and that it was a proper food for mechanics, and he thought they ought not to be denied the privilege of having it. I asked him how much he charged the laboring men for it. He said 17 cents a pound. I asked him how much he paid for it at wholesale, and he said about 10 cents. I said, "You think it is a good food for the laboring man and he ought to have it," and he said, "Yes." I said, "My dear friend, why do you not sell it to him for 11 or 12 cents a pound, making a fair profit to yourself, if you think he ought to have it at a cheap price?" To that he had no answer except to say that that was not profit enough.

Mr. President, it is a "good enough" food for poor people, and it is good enough food for a laboring man; but when it is sold to him it must be sold at the highest price! Pass this bill, and if the laboring man wants to consume this food he will get it as he gets it now, but he will know what it is, and he will get it for from 25 to 50 per cent. less than he gets it now, even if you put a tax of 5 cents a pound on it. There can be no question about that. To-day this article is sold anywhere from 100 to 200 per cent. above its cost, and it is so sold because the people who buy it are deceived. Put the stamp upon it and compel every man to sell it for what it is, and thus all the people will get the benefit of the low price if they desire to use it.

AN APPEAL TO ALL THE AGRICULTURAL INTERESTS NORTH AND SOUTH.

Mr. President, I do not hesitate to appeal here to all the agricultural interests of the country. Our Government is a government of compromises. It covers a vast territory, in one portion of which one principal article may be produced, and in another portion another article is produced, and in another another, and so the country is divided up. Now it will not do for one interest to demand that its opponents shall be sacrificed for itself; there must be mutual concessions and compromises. The farmers of the dairy districts of this country have stood for protection to home industry, they have stood for protection to the manufacturers of this country and to the mechanics and laborers who work in manufacturing establishments. They have a right to ask of them in return that their great industry when threatened with destruction shall receive their support.

The farmers of the dairy districts have consented, and I have voted to maintain a large duty upon sugar, which is produced in the southern portion of our country. They have done this because they believed it for the best interests of the whole country. By it all the sugar consumed in the country is advanced from 2 to 3 cents a pound over what it would be if there was no duty upon sugar. But the farmers of the North, knowing that the people occupying the sugar-producing country of the South can produce nothing else but sugar to any profit, have said, we are one common country, we will stand together, we will allow ourselves to be taxed for your protection.

And so, Mr. President, the men in the dairy districts of which I have been speaking have stood for a tax upon rice, which is produced in another portion of our country, and although the great bulk of the rice is consumed at the North and in the manufacturing districts largely, still all our people have consented to its protection. In short, had it not been for the votes of the North in this body and in the other legislative body for years it would have been stricken down.

So to-day, Mr. President, you may go over the whole country and look at all its various industries and interests; they may clash at points, but still heretofore there have been concession and compromise, and so to-day the farmers living in this vast region which I have described from the Atlantic Ocean to the Rocky Mountains and north of the Potomac and Ohio come here appealing confidently to the justice of the men who live in the sugar region, and the men who live in the rice region, and the men who are herding their vast flocks upon the common domain in the West, and ask of them that they will concede something of their interest for the protection of this great industry of which I have spoken.

Mr. President, we know that the political majority in the country—and by that I do not refer to political parties, but the majority of the votes—may be found in sections of country which are not particularly interested in the dairy industry; but we do not hesitate to appeal to all the people to give us this legislation which shall prevent the destruction and ruin which is now going on in the dairy districts. I have faith to believe that we shall not appeal in vain.

A CLASS OF CITIZENS HAVING A RIGHT TO BE HEARD.

If I have wearied the Senate with my long speech, if I have spoken earnestly, it is because I am pleading for a class of our citizens who have a right to be heard. It is a class to which I belong, in which I was born, and with which my lot was cast in early manhood. There is nothing connected with farm life as known to the North which I have not experienced and do not know; and when I look about me at my home and see strong men now at fifty or sixty years of age, who have worked all their lives to accumulate a little property of 150 acres of land which they have labored early and late to improve, building their houses, their barns, and their fences, and still with a mortgage of a thousand or two thousand dollars upon the farm—when I see the sheriff taking possession of these farms, turning out these men and their families in the decline of their life because thirty manufacturers of oleomargarine can to-day make as much of an article they call butter as the whole of them, and furnish it and produce it for less than half what it costs the honest farmer, you must pardon my earnestness, you must pardon the length of my speech.

I hope I have not appealed in vain to this body. I hope, however weak and imperfect has been my presentation of this question, that the Senate of the United States upon this almost the first measure which the farmers of this country have asked this body to act upon will act upon it promptly, will act upon it wisely, will act upon it liberally, and that finally it will pass this bill precisely as it came from the House in order that we may be sure that it shall finally become a law before the two Houses of Congress shall adjourn.

Mr. COKE. Mr. President, the pending bill imposes a license tax of $600 a year on all manufacturers of oleomargarine, $400 on all wholesale dealers in oleomargarine, and $48 dollars on all retail dealers in that article. It also imposes a tax of 5 cents per pound on all oleomargarine manufactured, and hedges about its manufacture and sale with the most onerous and repressive restrictions and obstructions, involving heavy bonds and extreme penalties, the whole bill bristling with evidences of legislative hostility to the manufacture or sale of oleomargarine. I propose to state briefly and without elaboration the reasons for the vote I shall cast against the bill. If the manufacture or use of oleomargarine is detrimental to the public health, or for any reason of public policy should be prohibited or discouraged, it belongs exclusively to the police powers of the several States to deal with the subject, and Congress has neither power nor jurisdiction over it. The general proposition that the regulation of the trades, business, and occupations of the people, so far as the public are affected by them, is under the exclusive control and jurisdiction of the several States is so fully sustained in the texts of elementary law writers, the decisions of the courts, and in the political history and jurisprudence of the country that it would seem almost unnecessary to quote authorities in support of it. I will read from Cooley's Constitutional Limitations a full, clear, and accurate statement of the general principles of law on this subject.

On page 572 the learned author says:

The police of a State, in a comprehensive sense, embraces its system of internal regulation, by which it is sought not only to preserve the public order and to prevent offenses against the State, but also to establish for the intercourse of citizen with citizen those rules of good manners and good neighborhood which are calculated to prevent a conflict of rights, and to insure to each the uninterrupted enjoyment of his own, so far as is reasonably consistent with like enjoyment of rights by others.

* * * * * * *

We think it is a settled principle—

Says Chief-Justice Shaw—

growing out of the nature of well-ordered civil society that every holder of property, however absolute and unqualified may be his title, holds it under the implied liability that his use of it shall not be injurious to the equal enjoyment of others having an equal right to the enjoyment of their property, nor injurious to the rights of the community. All property in this Commonwealth is * * * held subject to those general regulations which are necessary to the common good and general welfare.

Rights of property, like all other social and conventional rights, are subject to such reasonable limitations in their enjoyment as shall prevent them from being injurious, and to such reasonable restraints and regulations established by law as the Legislature, under the governing and controlling power vested in them by the Constitution, may think necessary and expedient. This is very different from the right of eminent domain, the right of a government to take and appropriate private property whenever the public exigency requires it, which can be done only on condition of providing a reasonable compensation therefor.

The power we allude to is rather the police power; the power vested in the Legislature by the Constitution to make, ordain, and establish all manner of wholesome and reasonable laws, statutes, and ordinances, either with penalties or without, not repugnant to the Constitution, as they shall judge to be for the good and welfare of the Commonwealth and of the subjects of the same. It is much easier to perceive and realize the existence and sources of this power than to mark its boundaries or prescribe limits to its exercise.

This police power of the State—

Says another eminent judge—extends to the protection of the lives, limbs, health, comfort, and quiet of all persons, and the protection of all property within the State. According to the maxim, Sic utere tuo ut alienum non lædas, which being of universal application, it must, of course, be within the range of legislative action to define the mode and manner in which every one may so use his own as not to injure others.

And again:

By this general police power of the State persons and property are subjected to all kinds of restraints and burdens in order to secure the general comfort, health, and prosperity of the State; of the perfect right in the Legislature to do which no question ever was, or, upon acknowledged general principles, ever can be made, so far as natural persons are concerned.

In the American constitutional system, the power to establish the ordinary regulations of police has been left with the individual States and can not be assumed by the National Government. Neither can the National Government through any of its departments or officers assume any supervision of the police regulations of the States, so long as they do not invade the sphere of national sovereignty and obstruct or impede the exercise of any authority which the Constitution has confided to the nation.

This statement of the meaning and scope of the police powers of the States is abundantly fortified by a large number of authorities both English and American, and especially by numerous and leading decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States. Among the latter is the United States vs. De Witt, 9 Wall., 41, in which a section of the internal-revenue act of 1867, which undertook to make it a misdemeanor to mix for sale naphtha and illuminating oils, or to sell oil of petroleum inflammable at a less temperature than 110° Fahrenheit, was held a mere police regulation, and as such void within the States.

The License cases (5 How., 504) and the Passenger cases (7 How., 283) affirm the same general principles. Congress can not legalize a business within a State which is forbidden by the State. (License-tax cases, 5 Wall., 471.) In Patterson vs. Kentucky, 97 United States Rep., 501, it was held that the State could prohibit in her borders the sale of an article patented as an invention under the laws of the United States, and this in virtue of the police powers of the State. Chief-Justice Marshall, in the great case of Gibbon vs. Ogden, reported in 9 Wheaton, in the extract I now read, covered the whole ground, as follows:

But the inspection laws are said to be regulations of commerce, and are certainly recognized in the Constitution as being passed in the exercise of a power remaining with the States.

That inspection laws may have a remote and considerable influence on commerce will not be denied; but that a power to regulate commerce is the source from which the right to pass them is derived can not be admitted. The object of inspection laws is to improve the quality of articles produced by the labor of a country; to fit them for exportation or, it may be, for domestic use.

They act upon the subject before it becomes an article of foreign commerce, or of commerce among the States, and prepare it for that purpose. They form a portion of that immense mass of legislation which embraces everything within the territory of a State not surrendered to the General Government, and which can be most advantageously exercised by the States themselves. Inspection laws, quarantine laws, health laws of every description, as well as laws for regulating the internal commerce of a State and those which respect turnpike roads, ferries, &c., are component parts of this mass. No direct general power over these objects is granted to Congress, and, consequently, they remain subject to State legislation. (Pages 202, 203.)

These and various other decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States, which I will not designate because I believe it unnecessary, establish, as undeniably as authority can do it, the proposition that while in the Territories and in the District of Columbia Congress possesses general legislative powers, in the States that Congress possesses no power over any business or trade, and can not forbid or punish any act done in pursuance of any calling or vocation. This whole subject, it is conclusively held, is within the police powers of the States and outside of the jurisdiction of Congress.

It is obvious that the pending bill, in its structure, is not predicated upon the idea that Congress possesses the power to suppress or interfere with the manufacture of oleomargarine in the States. It does not on its face trespass upon the police powers of the States, nor interfere in any way with their rights. The bill is a tax bill, pure and simple. Judged by itself, the purpose of the bill is to collect and pay money into the Treasury. Ought this bill to pass if this be its object, and it can have no other constitutionally?

Do we need more money to carry on the Government, and must we invent new methods and subjects of taxation in order to raise it? I answer that question by referring to the surplus now piled in the Treasury, which ought to be in circulation among the people because not needed for the purposes of the Government. We have lying absolutely idle in the Treasury $224,000,000, and only $144,000,000 of bonds which are subject to call and can be paid prior to 1891, and we collected last year $96,000,000 more than we could use, and will collect the same the next year and the year after, and indefinitely on, unless we reduce the present rate of taxation, which up to this time has been successfully resisted.

Why hoard up more of the people's money in the Treasury? The only legitimate object of taxation is to raise revenue, and the only honest purpose of raising revenue is to support and pay the expenses of the Government. We have now more revenue than is needed for that purpose. No recommendation of additional taxation has been made by the executive department of the Government; on the contrary, a reduction of the tariff has been recommended and urged. Judge Cooley says, on page 57 of the book I was just reading from, that—

Constitutionally a tax can have no other basis than the raising of revenue for public purposes, and whatever governmental exaction has not this basis is tyrannical and unlawful.

If this bill was what it purports to be, a bill to raise revenue to support the Government and nothing else, for the reasons I have given it would not receive five minutes' consideration nor half a dozen votes in either House of Congress.

While this is a tax bill on its face and in its structure, it is perfectly clear from the enormous rate of the tax it imposes and the declarations of its advocates in and out of Congress that the raising of revenue is not its object, because the tax is largely prohibitory and will seriously cripple if it does not destroy the industry of manufacturing oleomargarine, and this is the confessed object and purpose of the bill. This bill is demanded by the dairy farmers in order to break down the oleomargarine manufacture because that article competes in the market with butter and brings down the price of it. Here we all know this to be true.

I have on my desk, and there is on every Senator's desk, a volume of two hundred and seventy-four pages of testimony taken before the Senate Committee on Agriculture during this session in reference to this bill, and on every page of it is found avowals by friends of the bill that it is intended to protect and keep up the price of butter. On its face the bill is constitutional, because the power to tax resides confessedly in Congress, but the power was vested in Congress to enable the Government to raise the revenue it needs, and the use of that power for the other and different purpose of crippling or destroying one of the industries of the country for the benefit of another industry is an evasion of and fraud upon the Constitution.

In respect to the taxing power as to other great powers, Congress has been well said to be only a trustee, and the exercise of that power for purposes other than those for which it was granted is a violation of a trust and of the instrument creating it. It is a proposition which all will admit and not one will deny, that Congress has no power to prohibit or interfere with by direct legislation the manufacture of oleomargarine in the States. Yet the advocates of this bill are endeavoring to accomplish this very purpose by means of a wrongful and fraudulent use of the taxing power which was vested in Congress for a wholly different purpose, to wit, that of raising money to carry on the Government.

Revenue is neither expected nor desired under this bill if it passes. The friends of the bill, both in and out of Congress, admit the object of the bill to be to destroy the manufacture of oleomargarine, not because unwholesome, because the bill licenses it, and thereby admits it to be wholesome and fit to be sold, but in the interest of and for the benefit and protection of the butter industry. To accomplish this purpose, the power of the National Government is invoked to destroy by indirect means an established industry in the States, which is confessedly beyond its reach and outside of the scope of its jurisdiction by direct legislation.

This fraud upon the Constitution and the admitted rights of the States, is sought to be perpetrated for the protection and building up of one industry by the destruction of another. This is a new application of the principle of protection. We are familiar with a protective tariff, which levies a high duty on foreign imports in order to give a monopoly of the home market to domestic manufacturers, for the people of this country have been robbed for more than a half century under such a tariff for the benefit of a comparatively few manufacturers. But this tariff does produce a large revenue, and its repressive features are directed against foreign competition.

The pending bill for the protection of the dairy interests, by the destruction of the manufacture of oleomargarine, turns the principle of protection against the great body of the American people, in behalf of a very small proportion of butter-makers. The advocates of the pending bill invoke high taxation not for the purpose of raising revenue, nor for the purpose of protecting American labor against foreign competition, but for the purpose of striking down and destroying a legitimate American industry, and the American capital and labor employed in it; and worse than that, for the purpose of preventing the manufacture of a healthy, nutritious, and cheap food product, needed and desired by millions of the American people, who are not able to buy the higher-priced butter, and all done to enrich the people engaged in the dairy business.

The high-tariff protectionist erroneously but honestly believes that he is protecting and defending all American labor and capital against foreign invasion. The high-butter protectionist is making war on both American labor and American capital, on both the manufacturers and consumers of oleomargarine.

Between the two forms of protection, both of which are odious to me, I infinitely prefer that of the protective tariff, because that is directed against foreigners, while the other is aimed at my own countrymen. I challenge successful contradiction when I assert that he who supports and advocates this bill can not without stultifying himself object either on the score of constitutionality or expediency to a high protective tariff. If protection to one domestic industry at the expense of another domestic industry is constitutional and expedient, a fortiori the protection of all American industries against all foreign industries is both constitutional and expedient. The tariff protectionist levies the tax on foreign goods regardless of revenue, to prevent their importation except in limited quantities. The butter protectionist under the pending bill has arranged the tax and the license fee to largely prevent and destroy the manufacture of oleomargarine, at the same time destroying all hope or prospect of raising the revenue from it which the bill on its face fraudulently promises to collect. I repeat that the sole difference between the two methods of protection is that one is leveled against foreigners and the other against American interests, and that the latter is more obnoxious than the former.

No precedent so vicious has ever been placed on our statute-book as this will be if enacted into law. It is class legislation of the most pronounced and flagrant character. Instead of leaving the various industrial interests of the country to self-adjustment under the laws of trade, of supply and demand, and the operations of individual enterprise, it will array them against each other in the halls of Congress, the partisans of each striving to gain by legal enactment what under the laws of commerce they are unable to reach or to hold, just as the dairy people are now striving by this bill to hold a market which under open competition they admit they are rapidly losing, and this loss of the market is the ground upon which they demand the passage of this bill. It does not require the gift of prophecy to foresee the struggles to occur between rival interests and opposing partisans if this course of legislation is to be entered upon.

How long will it be before Congress is called on to destroy by taxation cane sugar for the protection of beet sugar, or corn for the protection of wheat, or the raising of hogs for the protection of cattle-growers, or the raising of mules for the protection of horses, and to discriminate by prohibitory taxation between the different manufactures of this country, as we are called on by this bill to do between oleomargarine and butter? Congress can as well destroy or cripple any one or all of these industries as it can the manufacture of oleomargarine. Adverse interests will always be knocking at the doors of Congress and demanding this character of legislation, if it is once commenced. The precedent once established will be prolific of demands for its repetition.

With the possibility of this bill becoming a law a discussion of other forms of discrimination between domestic industries has already commenced. I read from the well-known New York journal The Nation a communication which is suggestive of the fierce antagonisms to be generated among our thousands of rival industries by this sort of legislation, as follows:

NATURAL GAS.

To the editor of the Nation:

SIR: In this time of discussing taxation and protecting industries, there is one commodity that seems to be a natural subject of special taxation—natural gas. The scope and promise of this new factor in industry is such as portends no little disturbance to our iron and other industries, and there seems no good reason why the nation should not share in the benefit of this great boon, although its discovery and source be in a special district of the country.

Natural gas, as its name indicates, is not a product of skill, is not even a surface product such as is conveyed in Government titles to land. It comes from "the bowels of the earth," and one who regards its present vast influence and conjectures its future must concede that it will throw our industries out of balance. If ever there was a suitable and equitable subject for special taxation, is not here one? The menace to the dairy sinks into insignificance in comparison with the danger to our manufacturing industries from this new and miraculous fuel. It is not too much to claim, on the score of cost alone, to say nothing of other advantages, that the cheapening of many manufactures in Pittsburgh amounts to 10 per cent. How is fair competition to be maintained without a tax?

PROTECTION.

PITTSBURGH, June 22, 1886.

No discovery, no invention, no innovation such as has marked every step of our wonderful progress as a nation could have survived the application of the principle underlying this bill, for every one of them would have been crushed out for the protection of the then existing order of things, as it is now proposed to crush out the manufacture of a desirable and healthy food product which the daily increasing density of our population demands for the comfort and sustenance of the people and especially of the great mass of them who are not rich.

Oleomargarine is proved by the testimony of the most learned physicians, scientists, and experts in this country, taken before the Senate committee, and printed and on our desks, to be a pure, wholesome, healthful, and nutritious food product, as palatable as butter and partaking very much of its nature, but made with much less labor and cost, and consequently much cheaper than butter.

The reports show that 200,000,000 pounds of this article are manufactured annually in this country. It is said by some of the witnesses that the cost of making it is some 7 or 8 cents per pound, and all the evidence shows that it is exceedingly difficult to detect the difference between it and genuine butter which is sold in the markets at from 25 to 40 cents per pound. If oleomargerine is clean, is wholesome, is nutritious, is palatable, and can be sold and a good profit made at less than half the cost of genuine butter, and if human testimony can be believed all these things are true of it, why, I ask, shall the sixty millions of people in this country be prohibited by law from choosing between it and butter?

Has it come to this, that the diet of the people is to be regulated by law, to the end that butter-makers shall have a monopoly of the market? Sumptuary legislation, which for more than two hundred years has been discarded in the monarchical countries of Europe, is sought to be established in this country by this bill, and our self-reliant, self-respecting, and self-governing people, who created this Government, are to have their diet regulated as if they were so many children under guardianship.

This result is proposed to be brought about not by direct, straightforward, honest legislation, because the advocates of this bill will admit that direct prohibition of the manufacture of oleomargarine by Congress would be utterly unconstitutional and void, because the subject is outside of the jurisdiction of Congress, and wholly within the jurisdiction of the several States, but by the indirect and fraudulent use of the taxing power, which was conferred on Congress solely for the purpose of raising revenue for support of the Government.

A wrongful and violent diversion of a great constitutional power from its proper and legitimate and beneficent use into that of an instrument of destruction of a great American interest is what is deliberately proposed by this bill. Not only the manufacturers and consumers of oleomargarine, but the producers of the raw material entering into the composition of that product will, if this bill become a law, be sufferers. The choicer portions of the fat of hogs and of beeves as well as some of the vegetable oils, notably cotton-seed oil, are used in the manufacture of oleomargarine. We are informed by experts that if this bill passes, every beef slaughtered in the United States will be depreciated in value from $1.50 to $3.00, and the value of every bushel of cotton-seed will be injuriously affected.

This bill is said to be in the interest of the farmers. It is in the interest of the dairy farmers, but is a direct blow at the interests of the great body of farmers of the South and West who raise the cotton, corn, and wheat, and the cattle and hogs. It is a direct blow at all the poor people of this country in that it will increase the cost of living, and the tax, if the manufacture of oleomargarine should survive, will be paid by them, not by the rich, who can afford to buy butter.

The dairy people have raised a hue and cry against oleomargarine as "bogus butter," "imitation butter," "fraudulent butter," &c. Nobody could object to a law requiring oleomargarine to be branded as such, so that all would know it to be oleomargarine, not butter. Nobody could object to a law affixing penalties to the sale of oleomargarine, representing it to be butter. This would be right and proper.

But this is a matter for State legislation. Congress has nothing to do with it. It falls under the police powers of the States to act on it. This would not satisfy the dairy people and they have not attempted it or asked it. It would not destroy competition with their product. It would not increase the price of butter in the market, and that is what they are seeking by the pending bill. They desire protection for butter against American competition, just as the manufacturer desires protection against foreign competition.

The people I have the honor in part to represent, who are mainly agricultural, sell the products of their labor in the open markets of the world, in unprotected competition with the products of pauper, peasant, serf, and heathen labor of the four quarters of the earth, while compelled by a tariff framed to protect manufacturers from similar competition to buy in a market 50 per cent. dearer than where they sell. They are unalterably opposed to a protective tariff which thus taxes them for the benefit of others, and desire trade and commerce as free and untrammeled as the necessities of the Government for revenue will permit. With these views they are necessarily opposed to the internal protection of one class at the expense of all others, as provided for in this bill. In opposing this bill, both on the score of constitutionality and expediency, I express their wishes and my own convictions.

Mr. PALMER. Mr. President, the foundation and reliance of the system of government and civilization—of which we are justly proud and for the permanency of which we are all solicitous—is profitable agriculture.

The numbering of our producers in 1880 showed a total of 17,392,099, of which number 7,670,493, or a little over 44 per cent., were engaged in farming.

In all nations the landed interest has ever been the great conservative force, and its prosperity can not have too much consideration in state councils.

When the farmer is pinched the merchant and artisan cry out, and no abiding good comes to a land where labor in the soil is unremunerative.

American agriculture, by reason of cheap, fertile lands, wholesome laws, mixed farming, comprehensive systems of transportation, and the development of home markets, has stood on the apex of historical labor.

The American farmer has been a sovereign instead of a peasant; a gentleman instead of a hind.

The profits of the soil have permitted personal comforts and educational surroundings with leisure for self-culture.

Our farmers have not only contributed largely to the support of our Government, but have appeared in the front rank of our legislators and citizen soldiers.

Protected against foreign competition by the excellence and abundance of their products and by judicious tariffs the landholder has been the master not only of the soil but of the state, and the state has been the gainer thereby.

By the census of 1880 we learn that the values in farms, farm implements, live stock, and products of 1879 were $657,419,027 greater than that found in manufactures and manufactured products of that year, railroads, and the gold and silver product of our mines.

Capital invested in manufactures	$2,790,272,606
Value of manufactured product	5,369,579,191
Production of gold and silver	74,490,620
Capital invested in railroads	5,425,722,560
Total	13,660,064,977
Value of farms, including land, fences, and buildings	10,197,096,776
Value of farming implements and machinery in use on farms	406,520,055
Value of live stock on farms	1,500,464,609
Value of farm products for 1879	2,213,402,564
	14,317,484,004

Were such an interest, including nearly one-half of the producing population and so large a proportion of the real wealth of our nation, attacked in a vital part by a foreign assailant no time would be lost before beating to arms for its defense.

MAGNITUDE OF OUR DAIRY INTEREST.

The largest single department of our mixed farming and the most essential to the permanent fertility of the soil is dairying.

The annual product of the dairies in the United States in butter, cheese and milk is estimated at $564,959,500, which amount is over four times the value of the oat crop, $150,000,000 more than the value of the wheat crop, three times the value of our cotton manufactures and more than twice the value of the combined iron and steel product. The capital invested in milch cows is greater than that invested in national-bank stock.

This enormous interest is not localized at a few trade centers. It is distributed throughout the length and breadth of our land in the most favorable birth-places and homes of our people. It provides the extra necessities and simple luxuries for the log cabin and often measures the year's profit of the more forehanded husbandman.

OLEOMARGARINE THE CHILD OF FAMINE.

Amid the horrors of the siege of Paris in 1869, when horse-flesh was made palatable by hunger and patriotism, when house pets were sold in the markets for food, when rats were devoured by the gaunt and garbage fought for by the starving, when the fertile invention of the most ingenious cooks in the world was taxed to sustain life by any and all methods, a chemist named Mége discovered a substitute for butter. It was the child of famine and despair. Nine years afterward it was patented in the United States.

The ingredients of this compound were not objectionable—to the starving—and the mixture was toothsome and not poisonous.

The specifications were: "Fats of all animals reduced by novel methods; oleomargarine mixed with milk, combined with bicarbonate of soda and pepsin from cow's udders; coloring matter added and churned."

Of all the desperate innovations and inventions to prolong life in that city of horrors, only two, I believe, have retained places in the economy of living. They are horse-flesh for the very poor and the noxious elaborations of oleomargarine for all except the very rich and the very cautious.

YANKEE IMPROVEMENTS.

The compound of Mége was not an exact counterfeit of butter, and the swift improvements (?) of American cupidity were rained upon the Patent Office to add to its selling qualities and lessen its cost to the mixer.

Among the ingredients named in eighty-four of these patents twelve are known poisons, twenty-six are of dubious desirability, while eleven may be called unobjectionable.

The desired result has been reached, and an olla-podrida prepared at a cost of from 7 to 13 cents per pound, which is wholesaled at from 9 to 15 cents per pound and retailed at the going price of butter.

In each of its three presentations, as oleomargarine, suine, and butterine, its texture and consistency are most deceptive, and its enemies join with its advocates in testifying that it is impossible to distinguish it from butter by any or all the unaided senses.

An expert describes it as chemically the same as butter; but chemically charcoal and the diamond are the same, and such conclusions only illustrate the limitations of chemistry.

By the use of arnotto it is tinted with the rich, golden, buttercup hue which has served as the trade-mark of the choicest product of the herd since that memorable and fruitful day described in Genesis xviii, where Abraham received the messengers of the Lord on the plains of Mamre:

And he took butter and milk and the calf which he had dressed and set it before them; and he stood by them under the tree, and they did eat.

GROWTH AND EFFECT OF THE OLEOMARGARINE TRADE.

From the report of the testimony taken by the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry—which contains the fullest statements of the opponents of this bill—it appears that 200,000,000 pounds of these mixtures have been manufactured in the United States during the last year, at least 90 per cent. of which was sold as butter. This necessarily displaced 180,000,000 pounds of the dairy product, the direct and immediate effect of which is shown to have been the depreciation of 25 per cent. in the value of fifteen million milch cows and a depreciation of dairy lands in a single State (New York) of $230,000,000.

Our annual export of butter has decreased in six years 18,669,276 pounds, while the export of oleomargarine has increased 17,000,000 pounds, but, more to be deprecated, appears the loss of foreign confidence incident to the mixed traffic, as evidenced in the higher prices offered for Canadian butter.

Again, successful fraud is contagious. Armour & Co. state that they supply oleo oil to creameries for purposes of adulteration with the honest product, and reputable retail dealers testify that they have been forced by fraudulent competition to join in the surreptitious sales.

Established creameries in many States have been closed and Eastern dairy farms abandoned in consequence of this unnatural contest, while I noted when preparing these memoranda that local newspapers from Cass, Branch, and Oakland Counties in my own State, under dates of July 1 and 2, report sales of farm butter on their streets at from 8 to 10 cents per pound.

Three hundred thousand milch cows are reported to have been slaughtered for beef in Chicago alone during the past year.

Until the development of this industry, American tallow held the markets of the world at 9½ cents per pound. The imitation-butter makers entered our market, selecting the best qualities for their use, and now the trade is controlled by Russia and Australia, while the American product is unsought at 3½ cents per pound.

The temptation to the retailer to handle a mixture which he buys as oleomargarine, suine, or butterine at from 9 to 15 cents per pound and sells as butter at from 25 to 35 and 40 cents per pound is rapidly increasing the volume distributed to the people.

In the Boston market alone there were 17,577 pounds received during the month of May last as against 9,663 pounds received in May, 1885.

The production of these 200,000,000 pounds of butter substitutes is not in the hands of those of limited means nor are its manufactories distributed over the country. Mr. Webster, of the firm of Armour & Co., testifies that there are only thirty firms engaged in the business and that the bulk of the oleo oil is made in Chicago and New York.

It is becoming an important annex to market controlling packing-houses whose vast capital crushes lesser competition and enables the few to fix the profits of the many.

LEGISLATIVE PROTECTION DEMANDED.

Fully comprehending the menace to the most vital of their interests, noting the abandoned farms of the East, the dismantled creameries and growing mortgages of the West, comparing the thrifty past with the clouded future, the farmers have appealed to their local Legislatures for protection; not against the beneficent gifts of science nor against cheap and wholesome food for the poor, but against a dishonest competition through counterfeiting and false pretense.

All they have asked, or now seek, is that the expressed wish of these manufacturers may be granted, namely, that butter imitations may be sold "on their merits;" and to this the penurious and the poor have a right to add that they be prepared by cleanly methods and of wholesome substances.

Twenty States have responded by the passage of laws in this direction, but the lack of machinery for their full execution has rendered them inadequate for either of the purposes sought.

The evil, in its destruction of values and in its demoralization of trade, is a national one, and it is fit that Congress should provide for its control.

The men who now ask protection have for generations, by their intelligent support, enabled the Congress to contribute through judicious tariff discriminations to the establishment and maintenance of nearly every American industry which has added to the general prosperity of the Nation.

The reading and reasoning farmer is the sturdy and trenchant advocate of American markets for American industries, and has the first right to be heard when his interests are menaced or attacked, whether by foreign foes or domestic assassins.

THE REMEDY PROPOSED.

Briefly stated, the bill before us embodies a plan for supervising and regulating the manufacture and sale of these mixtures through the machinery of the Internal Revenue Bureau, which is fully organized and to hand.

It provides for the exclusion of deleterious and poisonous substances from the manufacture and for keeping official sight of the product until it is delivered with fair notice of its character to the consumer.

That an article or business which requires the intervention of the police power of the State for the protection of the people should be obliged to pay for such supervision is in accord with the precedents of all governments and the provision for a surplus to increase the revenues is not unusual.

The committee has reported this bill just as it came from the House, with tax provisions of $600 per annum on manufacturing, $480 on wholesaling, $48 on retailing, and 5 cents per pound on the product itself.

Personally I am not strenuous as to these exact amounts, but perhaps they may be safely left for revision until the experimental stage of the proposed law shall have been passed If they prove too high for the purposes contemplated they will doubtless be reduced, and if too low they may be increased.

PROS AND CONS.

Mr. President, I approach the consideration of this measure better aided by a knowledge of the views and wishes of the people of my State, as expressed in their correspondence, than has been the case in the consideration of any bill presented to this Congress, and I presume the same is true of every representative of a State whose industries are diversified.

Our mails have come laden with the pros and cons incident to various local points of view, and I may classify mine roughly as follows:

First. From the farmers, who, personally or through their organizations, represent their grievance and peril, but only ask that cheating be stopped and that their products may have a fair chance in the market;

Second. From the manufacturers and wholesale dealers in butter substitutes, who avow their wares to be cleanly and wholesome, and stoutly maintain that they are willing they should be sold on their merits, but protest against prohibitory taxation;

Third. From lumbermen, who claim that oleomargarine is better in taste and keeping qualities for use in their camps than such butter as they have been wont to furnish;

Fourth. From mining agents and owners, who advocate oleo for their workmen;

Fifth. From consumers, a few of whom are evidently in search of the cheap and wholesome, but the great majority of whom desire to know what they are buying, and agree with Colonel Littler in preferring to "mix their grease themselves;" and Sixth. From the retail dealers who appear to "want to be let alone."

DIVERSE INTERESTS FAIRLY TREATED IN THE BILL.

As wide apart as the writers of these letters and circulars undoubtedly think themselves to be, I believe this measure substantially responds to the expressed wishes of each and every one of them, excepting, perhaps, the retail dealers.

It protects the farmer from dishonest competition.

It allows the manufacturer of a wholesome product to sell it "on its merits," and gives him the whole market by confiscating the wares of his rival who now competes to advantage by the use of deleterious ingredients.

When sold on its merits alone and not as butter it will naturally be purchased at a lower price by the lumberman and miner, and the "poor laboring man"—in whose behalf I am gratified to find so hearty an interest manifested—will be the gainer.

But should the effect of this measure be all that its opponents threaten, it would seem that the lumberman and miner should not be the first in protest or complaint.

It might be well for them to recall the steady support given by the farmers of Michigan to tariff charges essential to the prosecution of lumbering and mining. They should consider that among the incentives to that support was a desire for a home market for their produce, as well as a dread of the return of the thousands of laborers employed in camps and mines to compete with them in tilling the soil. They should stop to consider the wisdom, at this critical period in their interests, of any action tending to the substitution of an industrial antagonism for a mutually profitable partnership.

PROPER STATUS OF OLEOMARGARINE.

To me the chief good to be hoped from this proposed legislation is the securing a wholesome article which shall, at least, not injure those who, from choice or necessity, consume it and an honest sale which shall lift the burden from our dairymen.

I would that our political and social economies could be so arranged that every man and every woman who is willing to labor should receive such recompense as would command not only the necessities but the comforts and luxuries of life, including good, golden butter; but such is not the case to-day.

There are many toilers who are limited to the barest necessities. I personally know farmers who can not or will not afford to eat the butter they themselves make who, with their families, add flavoring zest to bread, potatoes, and other comparatively tasteless articles of diet by the use of pork fat, bacon drip, or molasses.

With these let oleomargarine compete. Let it solace the long-voyage sailor and frontier packer as a reminder of better things at home; let it serve the imagination of the struggling poor and remind them of better things to come through thrift and saving, but first let us see to it that it is comparatively harmless.

CHARACTER OF IMITATIONS NOW SOLD AS BUTTER.

Armour & Co. furnish a statement of the processes and ingredients of their manufactured product, which reads fairly, and is nowhere, I believe, gainsaid in the testimony presented to the committee, but among the specifications on file in the Patent Office may be found:

Nitric acid, sugar of lead, sulphate of lime, benzoic acid, butyric acid, glycerine, capsic acid, commercial sulphuric acid, tallow, butyric ether, castor oil, caul, gastric juice, curcumine, chlorate of potash, peroxide of magnesia, nitrate of soda, dry-blood albumen, saltpeter, borax, orris root, bicarbonate of soda, caparic acid, sulphite of soda, pepsin, lard, caustic potash, chalk, oil of sesame (or benne), turnip-seed oil, oil of sweet almonds, stomach of pigs, sheep, or calves, mustard-seed oil, bicarbonate of potash, boracic acid, salicylic acid, cotton-seed oil, alum, cows' udders, sal soda, farinaceous flour, carbolic acid, slippery-elm bark, olive oil, broma chloralum, oil of peanuts, sugar, caustic soda.

If this list, plainly printed and headed with "This may contain," should be attached to every butterine pat on the breakfast table, the price of board might be safely reduced.

These ingredients are not all used in any one process or by any one manufacturer; but some of them are used by each, and the evidence taken by the committee fully justifies interference by the General Government in behalf of the public health.

I do not care to enter upon the disgusting revelations of that testimony in detail.

Washington butchers state that they have sold suet to oleo-makers, bargaining for the return of the refuse, and found in said refuse when returned "pressed maggots." This is uncontradicted. It appears that the Agricultural Bureau has official knowledge of the expenditure of $30,000 last month in the purchase of dead hogs that died of hog cholera, also of the delivery of the fat from the putrid carcasses of drowned sheep to an oleomargarine factory.

The analyst of that bureau reports in writing upon eight samples of butter imitation purchased of retailers in New York, every one of which he pronounces unfit for human food.

The agents of the New York dairy commission, who provided these samples, purchased more than five hundred such during the past eighteen months, only five of which were sold under their true name. The prices paid for said samples were from 20 to 36 cents per pound.

In this connection I desire to send to the desk and have read a letter from a scientist than whom none stands higher in the confidence of all who know him.

From his chair in the Michigan Agricultural College he has sent forth critical information and warnings of practical, every-day, common-sense value to our people in excess of the total cost of that great institution. An accomplished chemist, his investigations of food adulterations, poisonous wall papers, explosive illuminating oils, contamination of wells, ventilation of dwellings, and general laws of health have been presented to the comprehension of all and, popularized by platform discussions, have conspicuously contributed to hygienic reforms.

I will ask the Clerk to read this letter from Prof. R. C. Kedzie, of Lansing, Mich.

LETTER OF PROFESSOR KEDZIE.

MICHIGAN STATE AGRICULTURAL COLLEGE,
Lansing, Mich., June 15, 1886.

SIR: Your message asking for information, documents, &c., in regard to oleomargarine is received. Instead of sending documents in regard to processes of manufacture, &c., I beg leave to submit the following considerations:

First. The most natural and digestible fat for human food is butter or fat of milk. It is true that men of strong digestive powers, ditchers, miners, lumbermen, &c., will eat and digest animal fats in the form of pork and fat beef. These are consumed as food directly and not used as a condiment or appetizer for tasteless foods. If men with the digestive powers of the ostrich can use these fats for food we need not assume that the same fats are equally suitable for appetizers for the delicate and feeble—for women, children, and invalids—the class that use bread and butter most largely in place of flesh-foods. For this class, that most especially require protection and care, the substitution of the coarser and more indigestible fats in place of butter would be a misfortune from its influence on their health.

Second. The sale of these mixed fats as butter is a fraud upon the buyer, and places the honest butter maker at a disadvantage; it is a premium on rascality.

Third. It is not enough to say that good oleomargarine is better than bad butter. If the sale and use of bogus butter would make the real butter better it would be an argument in its favor; but it tends to depress and destroy the production of butter instead of improving its quality. Encourage the making of good butter by placing it on its own merits without unfair competition with bogus butter.

Fourth. Legislation is asked to protect the dairy interest, not alone to secure a better price for butter, but for the general promotion of agriculture through its relations to stock-raising. To cripple the dairy interest will most seriously injure stock-growing. But stock-growing is the conservative element in grain growing. Without a large amount of stock on the farm to keep up fertility, grain-growing will rapidly reduce the productiveness of a country and ultimate exhaustion of the soil is only a question of time. This is the history of agriculture in brief in every land not annually renewed by a new deposit of soil, as in the overflow of the Nile. England has doubled her acreage production of grain because beyond all other lands she has been a stock-grower. It is not the butter-plate only, but the grain-bin you are called to protect.

Fifth. Much is said about the purity and sweetness of the materials used in making these butter substitutes. This may be the case in some factories and at the present time, but I know that some manufacturers are trying to deodorize the rankest rotten stuff ever called butter, and to use this in making choice creamery.

While the market is brisk and prices high for these butter substitutes the makers can afford to use pure material. But when keen competition and an overstocked market send prices down, and the margin of profits becomes too small to permit the use of the purest and most costly animal fats, what assurance have we that cholera-swine and pleuro-pneumonia steers will not contribute their fatness to these butter substitutes to be sold to the public as "choice creamery butter?"

From my intercourse with our farmers in the farmers' institutes I know the feeling about bogus butter is very strong. If the bucolic mind is slow to grasp it is equally slow to forget the questions that take hold on their calling.

Submitting these suggestions, I remain,

Yours, faithfully,

R. C. KEDZIE.

Senator PALMER.

Mr. President, the evil, in its magnitude and in its menace, is before us, and the remedy is believed to lie in this bill.

The mother of all industries is attacked in a vital part, the public health is threatened, the morals of fair trade debased, and the good name of an honest American product discredited abroad.

Behind this onslaught stands organized capital, flanked by fraud and disregard for the rights of others.

Can we hesitate as to our duty in the matter or shall we wait until this greasy counterfeit shall have grown more powerful through its successful masquerading, and a ruined industry shall have lost even its voice in the land.

Desperate cases require heroic treatment, and I trust we shall not go in quest of legal quirks or quibbles to find excuses for non-action.

The best interpretation of fundamental law is that which admits of the greatest good to the greatest number; and, for one, I shall not be dismayed if I find myself quoted as advocating—in behalf of the American farmer and the American consumer—a tax for protection with incidental revenue.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I understand the Senator from New York in charge of this measure to have given notice that if the bill was not disposed of to-day he would ask the Senate to dispose of it certainly on Monday.

Mr. MILLER. Yes; I desired to dispose of it to-day, but I suppose we can scarcely do that. So many Senators are away that I shall not ask for a vote on it to-day. If any other Senator would desire to go on this evening I should be glad to have the discussion continued, but if not, I shall ask the Senate on Monday to dispose of the bill if possible.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Then, Mr. President, with that notice, with the consent of the Senator from New York I will move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVAL.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. O. L. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had this day approved and signed the act (S. 209) for the relief of the legal representatives of John M. Robeson, deceased.

Mr. HOLMAN. I submit a report from the committee of conference on the legislative bill.

The statement accompanying the report is as follows:

R. 8974) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year 1887, submit the following written statement in explanation of the accompanying conference report.

The conference committee being unable to agree, they report accordingly, which leaves the bill in the same condition as when last acted upon by the House.

W. S. HOLMAN,
GEO. C. CABELL,
J. G. CANNON,
Managers on the part of the House.

The SPEAKER. Without objection the report will be accepted.

There was no objection.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Speaker, the House will remember that there were three Senate amendments on which there was a disagreement, one in regard to the clerks for Senators, the second in regard to the amount to be appropriated for gaugers, &c., in the Internal Revenue Bureau, and the third an appropriation of $10,000 for inquiring into the subject, and the compilation of statistics of marriage and divorce through the Bureau of Labor. While the conferees have reported a general disagreement on all of these points, the real source of trouble is over the first amendment, relating to the appropriation of some $30,000 for clerks to Senators.

Of course the subject is open for any motion gentlemen may see proper to submit. I call attention to the fact that for three successive sessions of Congress, this being the fourth, the same question has been presented, the same disagreement has occurred, allowing more or less in some instances, and it has always been the judgment of the conferees on the part of the House that this is a question peculiarly between the two Houses, and should be determined by the House itself instead of by the conferees. In the absence of any motion I move that the House still further insist upon its disagreement and ask a further conference; and upon that I ask the previous question.

Mr. DUNHAM. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question. I understand the gentleman to say that for four successive Congresses——

Mr. HOLMAN. This is the fourth.

Mr. DUNHAM. That the two Houses have disagreed on this question of clerks to Senators?

Mr. HOLMAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. DUNHAM. What has been the result?

Mr. HOLMAN. The result has been heretofore that the appropriation has been made.

Mr. DUNHAM. Then a further question. Have the Senate conferees been in the habit of insisting on the House backing down on their internal affairs?

Mr. HOLMAN. It never has been done. It is peculiarly a question between the two Houses.

Mr. DUNHAM. Whenever the House wants anything of the kind the Senate have conceded it?

Mr. HOLMAN. Oh, yes.

Mr. CANNON. I hope the gentleman will withdraw his demand for the previous question.

Mr. HOLMAN. Of course, if the gentleman wishes to be heard. I withdraw it.

Mr. CANNON. I want to say to the gentleman from Indiana and to the House, that there may be a full understanding about this matter, that the gentleman from Indiana has stated correctly what the House has heretofore done on a motion to recede. Now, I believe that I have made the motion ordinarily for two or three years past that the House do recede, and at some time or other the House has invariably receded. The Senate has insisted that as to the expenditure of money for its own affairs it must determine the subject for itself, while at the same time conceding to the House the determination of its own affairs. Now, I said to the gentleman from Indiana on yesterday that to my mind, understanding what the temper of the Senate conferees was, that if this bill was to pass the House would have to recede upon this matter.

But the gentleman did not see fit yesterday to move that the House recede, nor does it appear that he sees it proper to do so this morning.

I think it fair to say to the House, and I believe the gentleman from Indiana will bear me out in the statement, that there will be no agreement upon this bill until the House in some shape or other does recede. Of course the House conferees might go in and sign a conference report receding on this amendment and the House might adopt it. That would be one way of receding. I doubt very much whether the conferees would feel like doing that, especially when the House has the power on a motion to recede to determine this question itself. I am inclined to think that motion ought to be made by some one. Of course I want to defer to that side of the House. I mean that the sense of the House ought to be taken directly, if it is to send this thing back to a conference again, as to whether the House is going to stand by this agreement to the bitter end or whether the House is going to recede. If you are to recede at this stage of the session, the time to recede is now. If you are not going to recede, the House, I suggest, should send the conferees back, with a yea-and-nay vote back of them if you please, that the sense of the House is not that it will assent to that appropriation for clerks of Senators.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. CANNON. Yes, sir.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. In the judgment of the gentleman from Illinois would such a vote as that have any effect on the Senate?

Mr. CANNON. My judgment is that the Senate will insist as it has hitherto done to the bitter end that they will have this appropriation for these clerks.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Do you mean the Senate will insist until the bill fails, or to the extent of allowing the bill to fail?

Mr. CANNON. That is my opinion, although of course I can not know what the Senate will or will not do.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I did not suppose they would go to that extent in order to secure clerks for a few Senators.

Mr. REED, of Maine. In the last session the courage of the House gave out at 3.38 in the morning. I hope we will keep up this time until 4 o'clock.

Mr. DUNHAM. I hope we will give it up now.

Mr. CABELL. It will be a relief to the conferees on the part of the House if the House will determine what they intend to do with this item. The Senate conferees seem determined to keep it in the bill. I am satisfied if we meet again without further action by the House there will be another disagreement with regard to this item; and I hope the House will decide it one way or the other. If the House means to recede, let us do it at once. If the House does not mean to recede, let us have a vote on it and determine that.

I do not believe we ought to recede. I never deemed it a proper appropriation. But if we are to do as we have done hitherto, if after hours and days of labor on the bill we are to recede and come back where we commenced, I think it is due by the House to the conferees to let us know that fact, that we may base our action upon it. I yield to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. OATES].

Mr. OATES. The Senate has determined that the assistance of clerks is necessary to enable Senators to discharge their duties in a proper manner and with proper facilities. I am inclined, sir, to believe that was a wise decision. And I believe that if the working members at least of this House, and I will not confine it to them, but will say if the members of this House had a general provision made of an allowance for clerical work it would very much aid them in the discharge of their duties and facilitate legislation. It would give them a greater amount of time for properly considering and maturing questions which this House is to pass upon. And thus believing, I move that the House recede from its disagreement to the Senate amendment and agree to the same.

Mr. HOLMAN. I call the previous question on the motion of the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. WILSON. I ask the gentleman to yield to me for a few moments.

Mr. HOLMAN. I withhold the call for the previous question.

Mr. WILSON. I simply desire to make this suggestion: When this claim was first made by the Senate in the long session of the Forty-eighth Congress there were several yea-and-nay votes upon it in the House, and the House by a very emphatic expression of its own opinion refused until almost the closing hours of the session to concur in that amendment. I suppose every member of the House felt that the allowance of a clerk to a Senator or a member would greatly facilitate the performance of his duties and enable him to perform those duties in a manner much more satisfactory to himself and much more effective to his constituents. But it struck the House, I am sure, as an attempt upon the part of the Senate to secure an advantage to itself which the House was not willing to take the responsibility of voting to its own members.

I think in view of the experience of both sessions of the Forty-eighth Congress we must come to the conclusion that in some manner or other the motion made by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. OATES] will finally prevail, and we shall be obliged to concede to the Senate in one form or other their request for this clerical assistance. But my own idea is, and the suggestion I have risen to make is, that the responsibility for this should be thrown as far as possible on the Senate and exclusively on the Senate.

If we vote for this item in the form in which it is contained in the appropriation bill, that responsibility is equally shared by the House, and I wish to suggest to the gentlemen who are upon this committee of conference the question whether the amount which the Senate desires for this purpose can not be added to the contingent fund of the Senate, which is a fund entirely under their own control, to be used and expended according to their own ideas of propriety, and for whose expenditure they, and they alone, are responsible. In that way this House will avoid any responsibility for concurring in what seems to be a disparity in the compensation of Senators and members of the House.

Mr. STRUBLE. Mr. Speaker, I desire to make a few remarks on the question of clerks for Senators.

Mr. CABELL. I will yield the gentleman the time he desires.

Mr. STRUBLE. Mr. Speaker, one of the most lasting impressions of the Forty-eighth Congress left on my mind is the impression of the contest which many gentlemen now present will remember over a similar question which arose upon the consideration of amendments to the legislative appropriation bill in that Congress.

I remember distinctly how, led by the distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL], we skirmished and fought against the proposition to grant money to pay Senators' clerks through one or more days and into and nearly through one night, this House repeatedly refusing to concur in the Senate amendment on that subject. This course was firmly persisted in until to my surprise the gentleman from Pennsylvania, who as I then supposed would never back down upon any proposition of this sort, gave up, and we who had so faithfully followed his leadership were compelled to witness his surrender.

I do not recall this by way of reflection upon the gentleman from Pennsylvania, but rather for the purpose of calling attention to the proposition itself.

The Forty-eighth Congress conceded these clerks to the Senators, and the Forty-seventh also, says my friend from Ohio [Mr. BUTTERWORTH]. For my part, while I voted against the proposition in the Forty-eighth Congress until the surrender came, I have since come to the conclusion that not only should Senators have these clerks during the sessions of Congress, but that every member of the House should have a clerk during such sessions. [Applause.] Why, sir, those gentlemen at the other end of the Capitol have time to be in their places in the Senate, and to attend upon their committees, and still have as much time as we for the consideration of public questions.

Their salaries are the same as ours, their duties not much, if any, more laborious. If they are entitled to the assistance of clerks, as I concede they are in view of the multiplicity of their public cares and duties, so are we.

Every gentleman upon this floor knows that if he himself attends to the clerical work incident to his position as a member of this House, and the committee meetings, and the work that may be assigned him by the chairmen of the committees of which he is a member, he has no time left for the consideration of public questions other than those involved in his committee work, and that he must neglect either the public business to a considerable extent or that clerical work which is of so much importance to his individual constituents and which every faithful member feels can not be neglected with due regard to the interests of those whom he represents and who have need of and call for his personal labor.

For three winters, and until the early part of last spring, I have been without any but occasional clerical assistance. Other members have had similar experience, and know what it is to undertake to meet the demands made by their constituents upon their time.

It is simply a physical impossibility for one man to attend properly and promptly to all these matters and have adequate time to investigate the many important measures constantly before the House for discussion and action.

Many of us are compelled to cast votes upon propositions of great consequence without that examination and reflection which might be had were it not for the fact that we are so crowded with work of other kinds as to find no time to devote to the examination of these propositions.

This proposition may be disagreed to by the House, and that disagreement be repeated time and again before adjournment; but the House, in my humble opinion, will eventually, as did that of the Forty-eighth Congress, recede from its position and concur in the Senate amendment.

Sir, I am not only willing to vote for clerks to the Senators during sessions of Congress, at reasonable compensation, but I go further and say that I am willing here and now to go on record as in favor—for future Congresses—of a similar proposition as to members of the House.

Mr. RANDALL. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. STRUBLE] has not exhibited his usual fairness. He remembers only a part of what I said on the occasion which he characterizes as a surrender on my part. He well understood at that time, and I will refresh his memory now, that I stated that the issue was whether we should allow clerks to such Senators as were not chairmen of committees, or should insist on our disagreement and compel an extra session. I preferred to let them have the clerks. Now, that may have been a surrender, but certainly it was not much of a one when compared with the surrender which the gentleman from Iowa himself has just exhibited here. He says that he has voted against this demand of the Senators heretofore, but that he has now come to believe that not only those Senators but all the Members of this House should be allowed clerks.

Mr. STRUBLE. Yes, and I mean it, too.

Mr. RANDALL. I leave it to this House to determine which is the greater surrender of the two—the one made by me on the occasion to which the gentleman from Iowa has referred, which was made for the purpose of avoiding an extra session, or the one which the gentleman himself has just made upon this floor.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] demands the previous question on the motion to recede.

Mr. HISCOCK. I would like to inquire of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] if he proposes to let this bill fail unless the Senate will agree with the House on this proposition.

Mr. HOLMAN. My friend can answer that question just as well as I can, and he knows that this bill is not going to fail.

Mr. HISCOCK. Oh, no; I can not answer it. I want to know what you propose.

The previous question was ordered.

Mr. PAYSON. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays upon that proposition.

Mr. WEST. Mr. Speaker, I would like to hear the amendments read.

The amendments were read, as follows:

Amendment numbered 2: Page 1, lines 11 and 12, strike out "$285,141.92" and insert "$304,917.52."

Amendment numbered 17: Page 5, after line 12, insert "for clerks to Senators who are not chairmen of committees, at $6 per day during the session, $23,232."

Mr. CABELL. What will the vote apply to, Mr. Speaker?

The SPEAKER. There are two amendments relating to this subject; one which increases the gross amount, and another which provides that $23,232 of that amount shall be expended for clerks to Senators.

Mr. CABELL. And it is proposed to vote upon the two questions together?

The SPEAKER. Yes; they go together.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. STRUBLE. Mr. Speaker, I would like to have the proposition reported.

The SPEAKER. It has just been reported, but the Chair will again state its substance. One of the amendments proposes to increase the gross sum provided in the House bill, and the other provides that $23,232 of that increased amount shall be used for the pay of clerks for Senators.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 69, nays 143, not voting 110; as follows:

FORTIFICATIONS APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. FORNEY. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House now resolve itself into Committee of the Whole for the consideration of the fortifications appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole, Mr. BLOUNT in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in Committee of the Whole for the purpose of considering the bill (H. R. 9798) making appropriations for fortifications and other works of defense and for the armament thereof for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887, and for other purposes.

Mr. FORNEY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. FORNEY. Now, Mr. Chairman, I desire to have an understanding as to the hour at which the general debate shall close.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Mr. Chairman, as I suggested to my friend from Alabama yesterday, we upon this side of the House want two hours for debate upon this bill. So far as I am advised that will be satisfactory.

Mr. FORNEY. Then I ask unanimous consent that general debate be closed at 4 o'clock; two hours to be allowed to the other side of the House, and the remainder of the time to this side.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. FORNEY. Mr. Chairman, I do not desire to take up very much of the time of the committee in explaining this bill.

The bill now under consideration differs very little from the bill of last year or the bills of prior years. Under the bill of last year a board was organized known as the board on fortifications or other defenses. That board has made a report to Congress. The substance of it is that, in the opinion of the board, in order to complete the fortifications required for coast and lake defenses, the sum of $126,000,000 will be needed. The board have also recommended that an appropriation of twenty-one and a half million dollars should be made this year, and an appropriation of $9,000,000 annually until the work is completed. The majority of the Committee on Appropriations did not deem it practicable to enter upon this great work at this time, and they have therefore presented the bill which is now under consideration, which merely appropriates $670,000; $50,000 of which is a reappropriation to pay for a gun to be manufactured at the South Boston Iron Works. I, for one, Mr. Chairman, do not think it is necessary at this time to enter upon the extensive works recommended by the board. We are at peace with all the world. Our relations with foreign governments are amicable, and at this time it does not seem likely that we shall get into difficulty at an early day. The board state in their report that—

> The coast defenses, which in 1860 were not surpassed by those of any country for efficiency either for offense or defense, and were entirely competent to resist vessels of war of that period, have, since the introduction of rifled guns of heavy power and of armor plating in the navies of the world, become unable to cope with the modern iron or steel clad ships of war, far less to prevent their passage into the ports destined for attack.

Hence the board deem it necessary that we should commence fortifying in the way they recommend. The board also report that at this time we have a number of heavy guns available for seacoast fortifications. There are over two thousand guns of large caliber, ranging from 8 to 20 inches, and as we have those guns, as our country is at peace with the world, and as we have the fortifications which the board testify were so efficient in former years, the majority of the committee think it is not necessary for us to enter at this time upon the immense work which the board recommend. Therefore the committee have presented this bill, and my present purpose is merely to explain the objects for which appropriations are provided in the bill.

The first item is for the protection, preservation, and repair of fortifications. The sum appropriated is $100,000. The committee deem that a sufficient appropriation at this time. We have upon our seacoasts seventy or eighty forts or fortifications. Last year $100,000 was appropriated for that purpose; the committee thought we could not get along with less this year, and so have recommended an appropriation of the same amount as was appropriated last year.

The next item in the bill is for the continuation of torpedo experiments and for practical instruction of engineer troops in the details of service, $20,000. The same amount was appropriated last year for this purpose, and a larger sum might perhaps be appropriated now, but there have been improvements going on in the making of torpedoes, and the committee had also before it a proposition for the purchase of a pneumatic dynamite gun.

The committee do not recommend the purchase at this time, but it is said that that gun which is now ready for us can throw 100 or 200 pounds of dynamite or other explosive with precision against an object at the distance of over a mile, and that the projectile can be thrown at least 2 miles. In view of these facts the committee have not thought it necessary to appropriate more than $20,000 for these torpedo experiments, because that gun is now being examined and investigated by the War and Navy Departments, and if it proves a success it will be unnecessary to appropriate any more money for torpedoes and we shall turn our attention to the purchase of guns of this character.

They say they can make a ship over 200 feet long, to carry three of these guns, to go at a speed of 20 miles an hour, and to throw a missile every two minutes from each of the guns. Therefore, Mr. Chairman, the committee did not deem it necessary to recommend any larger appropriation than $20,000 for this year.

The most important item in the bill is in section 2:

For the armament of seacoast fortifications, including the procurement of steel forgings for the manufacture of heavy guns; for guns, carriages, projectiles, fuses, powder, and implements, their trial and proof, and all necessary expenses incident thereto, $500,000, to be available until expended.

The sum here appropriated is larger than the appropriation of last year; but the Committee of the Whole will notice that the money to be appropriated by this section is to be expended under the supervision and direction of a board of five persons, three of whom (one from the Navy, one from the Army, and one from civil life) are to be selected by the President of the United States, another of whom is to be selected by the Speaker of the House, and another by the President of the Senate. So that this will be a non-partisan board. The committee think this is a step in the right direction, and if this board should prove a success a larger amount of money can hereafter be appropriated, and we can enter upon a proper policy of national defense.

The only other item in the bill, Mr. Chairman, is one which reappropriates $50,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, of an unexpended balance of $400,000 appropriated by the act of March, 1883, for armament of fortifications, to pay the South Boston Iron Works on account of a contract heretofore entered into between the Government and that company. In order that the committee may fully understand this matter I will send to the Clerk and ask to have read a letter from General Benét, Chief of Ordnance, to the Secretary of War.

The Clerk read as follows:

ORDNANCE OFFICE, WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington, D. C., May 25, 1886.

SIR: I have the honor to inclose a copy of a letter received from the South Boston Iron Works stating, for reasons given, their inability to complete certain contracts for heavy guns within the present fiscal year, and asking that the unexpended balance of the appropriation made for this purpose may be reappropriated for the completion of these guns.

The appropriation was part of $400,000 appropriated by act of March 3, 1883 (22 Statutes, 471), for armament of fortifications, and the manufacture of these guns was specially provided for in said act.

Under the provisions of the act of June 30, 1874, all unexpended balances of appropriations which shall have remained upon the books of the Treasury for two fiscal years are carried to the surplus fund and covered into the Treasury.

The unexecuted contracts for guns with the South Boston Iron Works to be paid for out of the appropriation of $400,000 made by act of March 3, 1883, and the amounts involved in each case are as follows, namely:

(1) Contract of September 24, 1883, for one cast-iron body for a 12-inch breech-loading rifled gun, finished in readiness for the insertion of a steel tube, &c., expires June 20, 1886, $25,657.93.

(2) Contract of June 30, 1884, for completing the above 12-inch rifle with steel tube, breech mechanism, &c., the parts to be supplied by the United States, $10,000.

(3) Contract of June 30, 1884, for completing one 12-inch cast-iron breech-loading rifle, hooped and tubed with steel, expires June 20, 1886, $12,961.

Making a total of $48,618.93, to which is to be added the customary incidentals, as additional test specimens, minor changes incident to such experimental constructions, which would increase the amount a few hundred dollars. I would therefore recommend that Congress be requested to reappropriate $50,000 of the unexpended balance of the appropriation made for this purpose.

I recommend that the following be incorporated into the fortification appropriation bill for the next fiscal year:

"The sum of $50,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, of the unexpended balance of $400,000 appropriated by the act of March 3, 1883, for armament of fortifications, is hereby reappropriated and made available for the construction and payment of the guns authorized by said act, and now being constructed by the South Boston Iron Works, under contracts dated September 24, 1883, and June 30, 1884, and the extension of said contracts is authorized accordingly."

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

S. V. BENÉT,
Brigadier-General, Chief of Ordnance.

The SECRETARY OF WAR.

Mr. FORNEY. Mr. Chairman, the committee are satisfied that these guns contracted for ought to be ready for trial within a very short time, and if they should prove a success, this money should be paid. Hence the propriety of this reappropriation. I reserve the remainder of my time for this side of the House.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee rose informally; when a message from the Senate, by Mr. MCCOOK, its Secretary, announced that the Senate requested a conference with the House of Representatives on the bill (H. R. 5003) for the relief of Mary E. Casey, and the amendment thereto, and had appointed as conferees on the part of the Senate Mr. PLUMB, Mr. VAN WYCK, and Mr. BERRY.

The message further announced that the Senate insisted on its amendments numbered 2, 17, 88, 179, and 180, disagreed to by the House, to the bill (H. R. 8974) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887, and for other purposes; had agreed to the further conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses, and had appointed as conferees on the part of the Senate Mr. ALLISON, Mr. DAWES, and Mr. COCKRELL.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I deem it a duty to call the attention of the House, and so far as I may of the country, to what I regard as the gross remissness of Congress in failing to appropriate what not only this House but the country must recognize as indispensable if we are to have anything which is even suggestive of adequate coast and harbor defenses. This bill is called "the fortifications bill;" but there is nothing in it or about it, except the title, which could possibly suggest that it had any such mission in the earth as providing the means for securing to this country proper coast and harbor defenses.

It is fair to say that the committee did one thing in the right direction, but I shall be greatly surprised if some gentleman, imbued with the idea of what he esteems economy, does not secure the elimination of that item from the bill on a point of order; in other words I shall be agreeably and happily surprised if the best feature in the bill, provided full appropriations are made, is not thrust out of it upon a point of order by gentlemen who are still willing to trust the defense of our country to the Fourth of July oratorical pyrotechnics and vain boastfulness as to our power and greatness as a people. The section to which I refer is the one which was discussed briefly by my honorable friend from Alabama who has charge of this bill. It looks to the appointment of a board of five members, one officer of the Navy, one of the Army, and one person from civil life, the three to be selected by the President, together with one person to be selected by the Speaker of this House and another by the President of the Senate. The five thus selected to constitute a board, not merely to devise a plan, for there are many plans, but to pursue the work of providing suitable and proper coast and harbor defenses.

I will not stop to discuss at any length the necessity which in the judgment of the committee requires the appointment of such a board. I submit to the House that there can be selected in this country five men equal to the emergency of adopting a proper system of coast and harbor defense—a board competent to determine upon the character of the enginery of war to be used as a part of that system of defense, and to supervise the expenditure of any appropriation which Congress may make for carrying on the work. The board, if it shall be appointed, will be charged with the duty first of adopting the best plan of coast and harbor defense; and next, all expenditures providing ordnance, guns, torpedoes, &c., will be under the direction and supervision of that board. The only objection to this proposition possibly is that we are not able in this country to find five men equal to the discharge of this duty. Everywhere else than on this floor that suggestion would be resented as an insult to the ability and genius of our country. That such a board can and will be selected, if ample appropriations are made, I have no kind of doubt; and then we shall enter upon the discharge of a high public duty which we have neglected during all these years.

This bill, and I want to be parliamentary, presents hardly a decent apology for an appropriation to provide a proper coast and harbor defense for this country. How much is here appropriated? Half a million dollars.

Now, gentlemen, I desire to call your attention to one or two facts in that connection. Statistics are dry. While I shall, with the permission of this House, insert some statistics and evidence in my remarks, I shall not read them, because they are dry, although instructive. I shall state what I understand to be the logic of the statistics and evidence I cite, and which I would read if I had time, and let the House judge whether they have been cited timely and to the purpose.

Five hundred thousand dollars is appropriated to provide a suitable system of coast and harbor defense in the United States. Let me ask how much has been estimated by competent engineers, by Government experts in this line, to be necessary to provide proper ordinary and legitimate coast and harbor defense? One hundred and twenty-six million dollars is the estimate submitted. What per cent. does this committee propose to appropriate of the amount absolutely necessary to carry on that work effectually and with efficiency? Fifty per cent.? Twenty-five per cent.? Ten per cent.? Five per cent.? One per cent.? No, sir; but less than one-half of 1 per cent. of that which is found to be indispensably necessary to provide a sufficient and adequate system of coast and harbor defense is to be appropriated by this bill.

Let me ask, what can be accomplished in the direction of providing that system of defense with the sum appropriated by this bill? Can you provide an adequate defense for the great city of New York? No, sir. Can you provide adequate defense for any city or village along our whole 4,000 miles of coast? No, sir.

What can you do according to the testimony submitted by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL], as chairman of the committee, to investigate this matter? Some progress could be made in securing one gun; and I speak now by the record when I say you can only make suitable progress in securing one gun suitable for coast and harbor defense. I say this in view of the plant and labor essential to produce that single gun.

And this is called economy! I want it to be understood that in making this statement I speak strictly according to the record, to be found in the reports made to this House by the committee appointed to investigate the subject of our present ability to provide an adequate and efficient system of coast and harbor defense. There is the testimony of the committee of this House and of the committee of the Senate that we are not able in this country to-day to manufacture above an 8-inch steel gun, and our ability to do even that is called in question. The concurrent testimony of every committee which has investigated this subject and made a report to Congress or to the President, the concurrent testimony of every engineer who has made investigation into this subject is that in order to make any substantial progress in the direction of defense of the great city of New York alone it will require more than two years and the expenditure of a sum vastly greater than you propose to appropriate for the defensive works of our whole coast line.

Mr. BROWN, of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman from Ohio permit me to ask him a question whether the letter of the Sage of Gramercy Park was taken into account in this matter?

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I have the letter of the Sage of Gramercy Park in my pocket and will read it.

Mr. RANDALL. The gentleman used the word guns; he ought to have said 8-inch steel guns.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Eight-inch steel guns. I state it properly because the testimony shows that we are not situated in this country to supply this class of guns, which it is asserted are absolutely indispensible to successfully resist attacks from across the water in case of war. In other words, the meanest power on earth that floats that which serves as a fifir apology for a navy can to-day sail inside the harbor of New York and place that city under tribute and compel the payment of a sum which would more than pay the cost of girting our whole land with steel and iron. Yet this House hesitates to provide even funds enough to supply one armored turret at the entrance of the harbor of New York.

And that is accounted to them for economic righteousness!

What is at stake? Gentlemen, the interest left in jeopardy by your neglect, in case of war with a foreign nation, in property along our coast, and I do not speak now of our coastwise trade, but of the vast property along the coast of the United States from Portland coming down along the coast to Boston, New London, New York, Philadelphia, Baltimore, Charleston, Savannah, Mobile, New Orleans, Galveston and going around to San Francisco, over $5,000,000,000, all under the range of the enemy's guns, while we are as helpless to resist the attack or repel the enemy as it is possible for a nation to be.

Think of it for a moment; we have under the range of the enemy's guns and without the power of offering effective resistance property worth over $5,000,000,000, and yet to meet the great emergency, having to protect these great interests, the Committee on Fortifications in this House, guided by the gentleman from Pennsylvania and the gentleman from Indiana, in their wisdom and magnanimity, suggest the magnificent sum of half a million of dollars—less even than enough to provide a plant to manufacture the guns which they admit to be absolutely indispensable to make an adequate defense against the navy even of decayed and worn-out Spain. Does some one suggest to me that we already have a system of fortifications all along our coast line?

I read from the reports of these various committees, from the officers of the Army and the Navy, and from your civil engineers, men who are competent to judge, that we are absolutely defenseless; and while our fortifications were able to meet the emergency that arose in 1860 and 1861, now as against modern artillery they are not only worthless except as a defense in case we are attacked by land, in which event they may possibly be useful, but so far as our coast defense is concerned against the navies of the world they are, according to the judgment of all these authorities, absolutely worthless. I have said that the old fortifications, as shown by competent evidence, are not only absolutely worthless but they are worse than useless. And why? Because, Mr. Chairman, they seem to serve as an excuse for men pretending to be economists to say to the people of this country away inland and at other places that we already have our seacoast lined with fortifications now, and thus the otherwise suspicious and impatient public are lulled into a false sense of security. I now call attention to the report of the board appointed to investigate and report upon the subject under consideration; and also other pertinent evidence.

REPORT OF THE BOARD—ORDER OF THE PRESIDENT.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, Washington, May 12, 1885.

Under a provision of an act of Congress entitled "An act making appropriations for fortifications and other works of defense and for the armament thereof for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1886, and for other purposes," approved March 3, 1885, a board, to consist of the officers and civilians hereinafter named, is appointed to "examine and report at what ports fortifications or other defenses are most urgently required, the character and kind of defenses best adapted for each, with reference to armament," and "the utilization of torpedoes, mines, or other defensive appliances:"

Hon. William C. Endicott, Secretary of War, president of the board.
Brig. Gen. Stephen V. Benét, Chief of Ordnance.
Brig. Gen. John Newton, Chief of Engineers.
Lieut. Col. Henry L. Abbot, Corps of Engineers.
Capt. Charles S. Smith, Ordnance Department.
Commander W. T. Sampson, United States Navy.
Commander Caspar F. Goodrich, United States Navy.
Mr. Joseph Morgan, jr., of Pennsylvania.
Mr. Erastus Corning, of New York.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

The board convened by order of the President has the honor to submit the following report:

The reports of the Chief of Engineers of the Army have annually laid before the country the condition of the national defenses, and attention is specially invited to those of 1880, 1881, 1882, and 1884.

Without enlarging upon this subject, it suffices to state that the coast fortifications, which in 1860 were not surpassed by those of any country for efficiency, either for offense or defense, and were entirely competent to resist vessels of war of that period, have, since the introduction of rifled guns of heavy power and of armor plating in the navies of the world, become unable to cope with modern iron or steel clad ships of war; far less to prevent their passage into the ports destined for attack.

Prior to 1860 the largest gun in service was the 10-inch Rodman smooth-bore, the energy of whose projectile was 2,000 foot-tons. The forts of that period were more than competent to resist its projectile; it should form, therefore, no subject of reproach because at present they can not withstand the shock of 20,000, 30,000, and 45,000 foot-tons of energy, without mentioning the new guns under construction expected to deliver 61,000 foot-tons of energy. On the other hand, the assumption should not be made that existing fortifications may not be effective at short range against unarmored or light-armored ships. At many sites, also, they are of indispensable value as citadels or keeps to secure the position against attacks by land, and as flanking works for torpedo lines.

Some idea of the wonderful change in guns since 1860 may be obtained from comparing the weights of the projectiles, which, during this period, have increased about twenty-fold. This increase in power of guns necessitates the use of large masses of armor in important parts of the defensive works and largely increases their cost compared with the old works.

It is of no advantage to conceal the fact that the ports along our seacoast—a length of about 4,000 miles, not including Alaska—invite naval attack; nor that our richest ports, from their greater depth of water and capacity to admit the largest and most formidable armored ships, are of all the most defenseless.

The property at stake exposed to easy capture and destruction would amount to billions of dollars, and the contributions which could be levied by a hostile fleet upon our sea-ports should be reckoned at hundreds of millions.

It is impossible to understand the supineness which has kept this nation quiet—allowing its floating and shore defenses to become obsolete and effete without making an effort to keep progress with the age, while other nations, besides constructing powerful navies, have not considered themselves secure without large expenditures for fortifications, including armored forts.

Our nearest neighbor, though, reasoning from the past, she should have no occasion to dread a naval attack from us, has nevertheless constructed armored forts at Halifax and Bermuda, both as a refuge for her fleets and as outposts for offensive operations.

In the mean time we have acquired great riches and apparently dreamed that prosperity should inspire friendship and not envy in less favored peoples—forgetting that riches are a temptation, and that the plunder of one of our seaports might abundantly reimburse an enemy for the expenses of a war conducted against us.

Had another policy prevailed and been consistently pursued toward the formation of a suitable coast defense, we should at the present moment have nothing more serious to engage our attention than a measured development in the strength of the works of defense and in the power of guns, in order to keep pace with the gradual progress in the means of attack.

Unfortunately the immense labor of novel constructions must be undertaken under circumstances where careful workmanship is required and haste would be impossible. Under the most favorable conditions a long period would be required to place the defense upon a secure basis, and who shall guarantee that this can be effected free from complications with foreign powers? The gun-foundry board has estimated that it would require at least three years to establish proper plant for the construction of modern guns. It would in all probability require two years more to get out and prove the first 16-inch gun. That there may be no delay in mounting the guns as fast as completed, the work upon the extensive foundations for the gun emplacements, as well as magazines, shell-rooms, engine-rooms, and other constructions necessary for the service of the guns, should be commenced at the earliest moment.

[Extract from the annual message of the President.]

* * * * * * *

The Secretary of War submits the report of the Chief of Engineers as to the practicability of protecting our important cities on the seaboard by fortifications and other defenses able to repel modern methods of attack. The time has now come when such defenses can be prepared with confidence that they will not prove abortive; and when the possible result of delay in making such preparation is seriously considered, delay seems inexcusable. For the most important cities—those whose destruction or capture would be a national humiliation—adequate defenses, inclusive of guns, may be made by the gradual expediture of $60,000,000, a sum much less than a victorious enemy could levy as a contribution. An appropriation of about one-tenth of that amount is asked to begin the work, and I concur with the Secretary of War in urging that it be granted.

WAR DEPARTMENT, November 21, 1884.

ENGINEER BUREAU.

The Chief of Engineers presents in his annual report a review of the modern requirements for the defense of our important seacoast cities, and in his comprehensive, but brief discussion, shows not only the urgent necessity of beginning the defensive works which can not be improvised, but their small cost in comparison with our national resources. Steel forts and turrets to resist guns which can send a projectile weighing a ton through 60 feet of sand, and which must themselves have like guns, with steam machinery to load and manipulate them, can not be built in the short time which would be given us by an enemy for preparation after the cessation of diplomatic intercourse; and, as is said by the Chief of Engineers, "the contribution which could be levied from New York alone would probably pay four or five fold the cost of all the fortifications of the important harbors of the country."

I quote from Admiral Porter's report to the Secretary of the Navy:

Our entire system of arming ships must be changed if we expect the Navy to be of any service in case of war with a foreign power.

It is of little use to build ships when we are without guns of proper caliber to mount on them.

We possess no Government workshops of sufficient magnitude to supply even the small navy we have at present with large guns.

The indifference of our Government to this matter of arming our forts and ships must strike other nations with astonishment. It looks as if we supposed ourselves exempt from the dangers of war which beset them. A few converted rifle guns have been placed upon our principal forts, but nothing of a character that would keep a single powerful ironclad from passing them in broad daylight, to say nothing of a night passage, which could be made with wooden vessels so far as the forts are concerned.

An enemy could come on our coasts to-morrow, and commencing in Maine could take possession of every harbor as far as Texas. Our poor little wooden vessels would have to run away for safety, and our old quasi ironclads would with their present armament be more than useless. The enemy would sink them as "worthless after he had obtained possession."

And now let me refer you to the readiness of other nations in case of war to force their way into our great harbors and compel payment of tribute sufficient to build a dozen fleets and line our coast with steel-clad fortifications.

England owns 70 armor clads, of which 13 are building; France, 50, of which 12 are building; Russia, 24, of which 6 are building; Italy, 19, of which 5 are building; Turkey, 15; Germany, 14; Austria, 13; Denmark owns 7 armor clads; Holland, 7; Spain, 6; Japan, 3; Chili, 3; China, 3.

To oppose the entrance into our harbors we have no defensive works, and our Navy is not worthy the name.

These citations, which are needless since all our people are well advised of the defenseless condition of our coast line and lake front, indicate the great necessity of large appropriations and prompt effort to atone for the delay of which the country with good reason complains.

My honorable friend from Alabama, General FORNEY, says we are at peace with all the world. Yes; and so is every other nation at peace with all the world immediately preceding the condition of war. Yes; we are at peace. We are not only at peace with the world, but we are held in just contempt by the world so far as our power to resist any suggestion of defensive or aggressive warfare is concerned. How do you know that peace will last an hour? Is there anything connected with affairs in the Northeast where our vessels are being seized for a supposed infraction of law by the British nation; is there anything suggestive of ultimate possibilities of war in that quarter? Are the suspicions of the people or their apprehensions lulled by the fact that France assumes to take charge of the great highway across the Isthmus as a matter of right?

Do you find any reason to believe that we can maintain peace when we contemplate the fact of the impulsive disposition of our people to manage the affairs of other nations as if we were the proprietors? I do not know anything so utterly humble or shrinking in the bearing of the American people as to suggest that we can long remain at peace with other nations.

Mr. Chairman, is it necessary that I read further from expert authority or is it so notorious that it be taken for granted that our coast line is defenseless? Will it be taken for granted or will some one be courageous enough to rise in his place, and without blushing assert that there is a proper condition of defenses along our coast line? I take it to be admitted, sir, on all hands that our defenseless condition is a crying shame, and should be remedied. When shall we begin, I ask my friends from Pennsylvania and Alabama, to put ourselves in proper condition for defensive warfare? Suppose war should come to-morrow, and the experience of the world teaches that the supposition is not violent, are we prepared to offer as ramparts against the enemies' shot and shell the bodies of our children? Either we will gird our lines with ramparts of steel and iron or we must offer to the ememies' shot and shell the bodies of our citizen soldiers; one or the other must be furnished to resist the assault—iron and steel or flesh and blood.

Is the time to begin this work auspicious or not? That the Government must provide full and adequate coast and harbor defense this House can not for one moment doubt. That the work must be begun and completed is known to the people of the whole country. I put the question to this Democratic House, controlling as it does the only means by which this work can be accomplished. Why delay? What excuse or apology can be offered? Are the conditions upon which our judgment must be based such as prompt and justify immediate action? Have we the means? Undoubtedly we have. There is small reason to hope that our financial condition will ever be more auspicious for beginning and prosecuting to completion this great work. Have we the skilled labor, the willing and capable workmen? Never can the conditions touching labor be more suited to the work. Throughout the land strong, willing men are standing idle around the forges and furnaces. In the great mills and shops of the country mechanics and artisans of rarest skill and cunning in their several fields of labor are waiting with folded hands to begin this labor.

Behold our nation exposed and defenseless in the presence of ample revenue, unused capital, unemployed artisans, mechanics, and laborers. This Democratic House refuses to permit the employment of either the capital or labor of the country to provide defensive works sufficient to enable our own to cope with the weakest among the nations of the earth. So far from meeting and providing for the crying needs of the country in the matter of ships of war and coast and harbor defense, the effort has been in the other direction. Our Secretary of the Navy has used the power of the Government to crush out the only great plant in the country, capable of meeting in substantial degree the demands of the hour, to crush and ruin John Roach, who seemed to appreciate the needs of his country and was able and willing to meet them. This man, whose genius and enterprise, the admiration of every land except his own, enabled him to compete in building war ships with his competitors of the Old World was crushed and his business scattered to the winds by the Secretary of the Navy, and twenty thousand persons, workmen and their families, turned out on the common to starve. Not only have we in this country no adequate plant to provide needed enginery for offensive and defensive warfare, but such as we have it seems to be the especial mission of the Navy Department to stamp out.

Is the time auspicious, I ask again, to begin this work? You do not know, I repeat, that our nation will be long at peace, since war may come at any time and find us wholly unprepared to defend the vital interests at stake. Our coasts are as destitute of needful engines of war as a meadow brook, and yet you delay. The engineers whose duty it is to study and suggest plans for offensive and defensive warfare, recognizing our defenseless condition, are eager to begin the work. Our mines, our forests, and quarries present exhaustless supplies. Ten thousand skilled and unskilled workmen stand ready to engage in the service. The people have provided the money, but this House refuses to appropriate it for the purpose.

My Democratic friends, I do not expect that my admonitions to you in this behalf will receive your favorable consideration. Plain as the duty seems to me, I can hardly hope to influence your action; then let me read the language of a statesman for whose judgment in the matter in question you ought to have great respect.

I propose to read a letter, Mr. Chairman, with which I know you are familiar. It is a communication from the Hon. Samuel J. Tilden. We Republicans are glad to profit by the wise utterance of Mr. Tilden in this behalf. I regret to say that there is too much reason to be apprehensive that his party friends have less concern about and less interest in his wisdom and experience than they have in his ability to provide the ready cash to defray the expenses of a political campaign. [Laughter.]

That Mr. Tilden has carefully studied the question of which he treats in this letter is clear. His words are full of wisdom. Though not accustomed to quote from Hon. Samuel J. Tilden anything that appertains to politics, I am glad in this instance to read his tistimony, because of the careful consideration he has given the subject and in view of the influence his suggestions ought to have with the majority in this House. The letter is, in effect, addressed to the Democratic majority upon this floor, urging them to provide for a crying need with which even the schoolboys of the country have become familiar, because it has been forced upon their attention.

Mr. VIELÉ. Do I understand the gentleman regrets Mr. Tilden was counted out?

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. No; I do not regret that he was counted out, as you term it. But I will tell you what I regret, since you force me to refer to the matter. I regret that there should be a man in this country who could feel reconciled to having the candidate of his party walk to the Presidential office winning his way in one part of the country by a bloody savagery and unscrupulous fraud unequaled and without a parallel in any land where enlightened civilization has a foothold. [Applause on the Republican side.] I was not proposing to discuss that aspect of the case, however, nor refer in any wise to a matter so utterly disconnected with the subject under consideration.

But hear what the Sage of Gramercy Park, the idol of Democracy, says concerning the matter now being considered by the House:

GREYSTONE, YONKERS, N. Y., December 1, 1885.

DEAR MR. CARLISLE: As public opinion points to you as the Speaker of the next House of Representatives—

We have lived to rejoice that the probabilities in that behalf were realized. We take great pleasure in congratulating you on having selected a Speaker conspicuous alike for his eminent ability and thorough impartiality in the discharge of his duties [applause]—

I desire to submit a suggestion as to one of the public objects for which an appropriation ought to be prompt and liberal.

In considering the state and management of the public revenues the subject involves the questions whether we shall extinguish the surplus by reducing the revenue or whether we shall apply the surplus to payments on the public debt, or whether we shall seize the occasion to provide for our seacoast defenses which have been long neglected. I am of the opinion that the latter is a paramount necessity which ought to precede the reduction of the revenue and ought also to precede an excessive rapidity in the payment of the public debt.

Mr. Tilden, in entertaining that opinion, I regret to say, so far as the representatives of the people upon the Democratic side of the House are concerned, you stand almost solitary and alone.

The property exposed to destruction in the twelve seaports—Portland, Portsmouth, Boston, Newport, New York, Philadelphia, Baltimore, Charleston, Savannah, New Orleans, Galveston, and San Francisco—can not be less in value than $5,000,000,000. To this must be added a vast amount of property dependent for its use on these seaports. Nor does this statement afford a true measure of the damage which might be caused to the property and business of the country by a failure to protect these seaports from hostile naval attacks.

They are the centers not only of foreign commerce but of most of the internal trade and exchanges of domestic productions. To this state of things the machinery of transportation of the whole country has become adapted. The interruption of the currents of traffic by the occupation of one or more of our principal seaports by a foreign enemy or the destruction of them by bombardment or the holding over them the menace of destruction for the purpose of exacting contribution or ransom would inflict upon the property and business of the country an injury which can neither be foreseen nor measured. The elaborate and costly fortifications which were constructed with the greatest engineering skill are now practically useless. They are not capable of resisting the attacks of modern artillery.

But why repeat this? As I said before, every school-boy in this country has learned that our coast-line defenses are worthless. Our school books, our philosophies teach our boys the power of guns and the range and destructive energy of projectiles. So we are not acting in ignorance of what the truth is when we refuse to provide what our country demands for the maintenance of its rights, dignity, and the proper protection of its coast-line cities. But I read on:

A still greater defect exists in our coast defenses. The range of the best modern artillery has become so extended that our present fortifications, designed to protect the harbor of New York, where two-thirds of the import trade and more than one-half the export trade of the whole United States is carried on, are too near to the great populations of New York city, Jersey City, and Brooklyn to be of any value as a protection.

To provide effectual defenses would be the work of years.

If my honored friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] questions the other authority from which I quote I know he will not question the authority of Samuel J. Tilden, whose experience he must acknowledge and whose wisdom he concedes.

It would take much time to construct permanent fortifications. A small provision of the best modern guns would take several years.

Yes, sir; the concurrent testimony of all who are advised in the premises is that even "a small provision of the best modern guns would take several years."

It is not only the witness borne by Mr. Tilden, but it is the evidence of the officers of the Army and Navy, as well as of the civil engineers, that to construct even a few modern guns would be the work of several years. And yet this House proposes deliberately to appropriate hardly enough to provide for the manufacture of one gun.

Neither of these works can be extemporized in presence of emergent danger. A million of soldiers with the best equipments on the heights surrounding the harbor of New York in our present state of preparation, or rather in our total want of preparation, would be powerless to resist a small squadron of war steamers.

Thus we observe that the testimony of the Sage of Gramercy Park, supplementing that of all the experts on the subject, is that the expenditure of a million dollars would be inadequate even to approximately furnish a proper defense for the city of New York, and yet we appropriate for the defense of 4,000 miles of coast and all the great cities on that coast but half a million of dollars, and we do that in presence of the fact that we can not in this country to-day make a single gun adjudged suitable for use in connection with such defenses!

I read again from Mr. Tilden's letter:

The state of things is discreditable to our foresight and our prudence.

Our foresight! Has he not yet learned that his party is not guided by its foresight? [Laughter.] Its gaze is fixed steadily on the hindsight. There is my honored friend from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] whom I do not see in his seat, one of the leaders in this House, who does, perhaps, as much if not more than any other member on this floor to shape what he is pleased to term its economic policy. Observe him take his seat in the tail of the wagon of progress, and from that point of observation he never sees anything till it is passed; never turns his eyes to the waking glories of the future, or catches a glimpse of the great possibilities and opportunities that lie in front. Able and good as he is, that is his fixed habit, and he represents the advance thought and the peculiar methods of the great party which is shaping the destinies of our country. The appropriation of less than one-half of 1 per cent. of the amount required to provide that which is confessedly indispensable to the country is a fair measure of the capacity of that party to deal with the great questions that confront us.

Mr. WILSON. And yet you said the other day that we were always "on the cow-catcher."

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Ah, yes, when the work is accomplished, when you are forced forward in spite of yourselves, then it is that you pose in the front and rejoice over the success achieved. When we come into power again and build these defenses, as we will, and show the enemies of this country, if it has any, that we are rich and powerful enough, patriotic enough, to provide all the means and instrumentalities to resist every attack from whatever quarter it may come, then you will with characteristic modesty rush frantically forward to take charge and challenge the admiration of the world to our wonderful achievements. You may then be heard to exclaim with pride, "See what we have done." [Laughter.] That is thoroughly characteristic of your party, and my reference the other day to your getting on the cow-catcher was not at all inappropriate.

What else does Mr. Tilden say?

The best guarantee against aggression, the best assurance that our diplomacy will be successful and pacific, and that our rights and honor will be respected by other nations, is in their knowledge that we are in a situation to vindicate our reputation and interest.

Now, I put it to this House, and especially to the majority side of the Chamber, suppose to-day England should in defiance of law and right seize and forcibly remove from the deck of an American vessel a half-dozen citizens of the United States, citizens whose rights our Government would be bound to protect; what would we do? Suppose we demanded an apology and satisfaction. Are we in any manner prepared to enforce a recognition of and proper respect for the rights of such outraged citizens or to properly resent such an indignity to our flag? Certainly not. We could adopt a series of resolutions condemning in strong language the outrage, and could also serve notice that as soon as we can establish a plant and manufacture the necessary guns and armament, and as soon as we can build armed ships and generally make suitable preparation, England shall hear from us further, and we may hold her to a rigid accountability. [Laughter.] What else could we do? We would be powerless to do anything else except engage in vivid verbal exercises here and on the stump, and generally on the 4th of July. And just here I wish to call your attention to the length of time that our Democratic friends would require to fit us for such an emergency as I have described—that is, if allowed to proceed unmolested at the present speed and with the appropriations they make annually. It is a matter of easy mathematical solution, since we know the amount required, the amount of the annual appropriations, and the work that the annual appropriations will do. The whole estimated cost is $126,000,000; the annual appropriation, less than half a million, and we know what can be done with that sum. I have been at some pains, Mr. Chairman, to ascertain just how long it would take, at the present rate, to put our country in a condition for defensive warfare, to say nothing of offensive war. If allowed to continue the work unmolested, the Democratic party, administering the Government, would complete the work in about two centuries. It would take something beyond that period, but I give my friends the benefit of the doubt. [Laughter.] Now, what excuse is there to offer for this? That our people are poor? No, sir. They are at least not so poor that they are willing to give the blood of their children instead of the steel and iron that are required for a proper national defense.

But I read on:

The notoriety of the fact that we have neglected the ordinary precautions of defense invites want of consideration in our diplomacy, injustice, and arrogance and insult at the hands of foreign nations. It is no more than sixty years since we announced to the world that we should resist any attempts, from whatever quarter they might come, to make any new colonization on any part of the American continent; that while we should respect the status quo, we should protect the people of the different nations inhabiting this continent from every attempt to subject them to the domination of any European power, or to interfere with their undisturbed exercise of the right of self-government. This announcement was formally made by President Monroe, after consultation with Mr. Madison and Mr. Jefferson. It was formulated by John Quincy Adams.

Then he goes on to show how perfectly helpless we are to assert and maintain the doctrine to which the American citizen is thoroughly devoted—that American thought, American civilization, the American form of government shall be supreme to the extent at least which we deem necessary to the triumph and maintenance of republican ideas in the western continent. The Republican party was not so indifferent to the condition of our country in this behalf. Even when we were yet staggering under the blows of a gigantic rebellion, when the young Republic was in fact reeling under a load which it could hardly bear, a Republican administration marched an army to the Mexican frontier and said to France, "Weak as we are, shattered as we are, still we are strong enough, great enough, brave enough, and determined to enforce in its letter and spirit the Monroe doctrine, and no empire shall be planted on Mexican soil." The Emperor of the French promptly withdrew his soldiers from the territory of Mexico, and Maximilian, poor dupe, was shot near the halls of the Montezumas by the people over whom he assumed to play the despot.

That was what a Republican administration did when the country was distracted and torn, weak and exhausted. Now Democracy is again in power. It remains to be seen what will be done to put the country in such condition as to be capable to assert and maintain the rights of American citizens on land and sea. Up to this hour you have done nothing in the direction of providing the means which Samuel J. Tilden, voicing the demands of experience and wisdom, points out and which every boy and girl in the country know to be indispensable to the maintenance of the ideas which are uppermost in American minds and which leaven the policy of this country, whether in dealing with the rights of individual citizens or determining the policy and authority of nations.

Now I desire to call the attention of my friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL], at whose feet I have sat at times as Paul at the feet of Gamaliel, to learn lessons of wisdom touching the tariff [laughter]—I want to call his attention to the fact that he is rebuked by the "Sage of Gramercy Park," Samuel J. Tilden, who fitly and most appropriately calls attention to the fact that while gentlemen are willing to reduce the tax upon whisky to the consumer, they are not yet willing to provide a dollar, comparatively, to defend the great cities and the vast interests that lie exposed and defenseless along our coast. Here is what he says, and he has a good deal of leisure to coin his phrases:

Second, in the questions that beset this subject, until they shall have reached a solution, we can content ourselves with adding but sparingly to the Navy.

They have taken that advice, Governor [addressing Mr. CURTIN], and have deemed that the country could observe with complacency the extinguishment of a great naval plant in your State. I read on:

But what we do add should be the very best that science and experience can indicate.

This prudential view is re-enforced by the consideration that the annual charge of maintaining a war vessel bears an important proportion to the original cost of construction. In the construction of permanent fortifications and in providing an ample supply of the best modern artillery the annual cost of maintenance is inconsiderable.

Nearly the whole expenditure is in the original outlay for construction. If we do not make the expenditure necessary to provide for our seacoast defenses when we have a surplus and have no need to levy new taxes, we certainly will not make those expenditures when we have no longer a surplus in the Treasury.

How true! Could any suggestion comport more thoroughly with the dictates of practical common sense?

To leave our vast interests defenseless in order to reduce the cost of whisky to its consumers would be a solecism.

So it would, and behold your partisan leaders here are not disinclined to do that very thing, and so proclaim it. Now, I shall insert the whole of this letter in my remarks, because it contains words of wisdom fitly spoken—timely suggestions to a great party as to what they ought to do to meet the demands of this hour in the matter of national defense.

Mr. REAGAN. And to perpetuate the national banks!

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. The letter of Mr. Tilden concludes as follows:

The present time is peculiarly favorable for providing for this great national necessity too long neglected. Not only does the surplus in the Treasury supply ample means to meet this great public want without levying new burdens upon the people, but the work can now be done at a much lower cost than has ever before been possible. The defensive works would consist almost entirely of steel and iron. These materials can now be had at an unprecedented low price. A vast supply of machinery and of labor called into existence by a great vicissitude in the steel and iron industries offers itself to our service.

We should have the satisfaction of knowing that while we were availing ourselves of the supplies which would primarily be unattainable we were setting in motion important industries, and giving employment to labor in a period of depression. With encouragement by the guarantee of work, or perhaps by the Government itself furnishing the plant, the inventive genius of our people would be applied to the creation of new means and improved machinery, and establishments would spring into existence capable of supplying all of the national wants and rendering us completely independent of all other countries in respect to the means of national defense.

I endeavored to impress these ideas on Mr. RANDALL the last time I had the pleasure of seeing him.

With my highest regards to Mr. CARLISLE and yourself, I remain,

Very truly, yours,

SAM'L J. TILDEN.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. My honored friend from Texas is distressed about the continuance of national banks. I want to say to him that we, and he with us, owe a debt of gratitude to the national banks which we shall be a long time in paying. He remembers very well when looking across the border he saw our greenbacks depreciating in value until they threatened to become almost as worthless as the treasury notes of the Southern confederacy. He will remember that at that time gold and silver had hidden themselves away; they no longer formed any part of the currency of the country. He will also remember that it became apparent that unless some quickening energy could put new life into our financial system, and thus strengthen the nation's credit, the young Republic would have staggered to its fall under the heavy blows his friends were dealing it all along our Southern border. At that time the present national banking system, the best I submit to this House the world has ever known, came to the rescue of the national credit, and upheld it until our armies battered down——

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. Nonsense!

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. It does not follow that any proposition is nonsense because you can not grasp it. [Laughter and applause.] To finish the sentence, until the armies of the Union had overcome all armed resistance to the rightful authority of the Government.

Now, Mr. Chairman——

Mr. REAGAN. Permit me to interrupt the gentleman. I will accept all the knowledge the gentleman asks us to accept, and I also hope he will accept the fact that in 1878, when we were struggling to maintain our currency and to revive business in the country, the national banks, in order to intimidate Congress and the President and to overrule the public policy, withdrew $19,000,000 in about three weeks, producing thereby almost a panic in the country. The national banks have never done anything to help the public credit.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I was going on to say that my friend from Iowa [Mr. WEAVER] belongs to that class of men who believe in the doctrine that the greater the nation's debt the wealthier it is. [Laughter and applause.] Each greenback represents a debt of this nation. It was issued as a promise to pay a hundred cents on the dollar, and their number represented our poverty not our wealth. Prudent, wise, economical business men do not entertain the idea that their wealth increases with the number of the promissory notes they issue.

Mr. REAGAN. That does not refer to me, of course.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa, rose.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I will discuss your financial theory with you some day when I have leisure.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. No; I wish you to do it now. The gentleman seems to belong to those who pay off the public debt by keeping the money in the Treasury. [Laughter.] I would like to ask him how his theory of paying off the public debt comports with his vote on the Morrison surplus resolution?

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I will do that in a few moments. I will do it now. It comes in well at this point.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. I think so.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. There are men in this country who have no conception of what the national credit is. [Applause.] They do not know what it is. They seem not to understand that it has anything to do with the national prosperity, or that it is in anywise related to the maintenance of that healthful financial condition in the absence of which our industries and general business prosperity would be paralyzed. Touching the so-called surplus in the Treasury I know, as does my friend from Iowa, that for every dollar of gold in the Treasury there are nearly $4 in paper floating around the country to the payment of which that hundred millions of so-called surplus in the Treasury is pledged, and to that pledge, which the Morrison resolution if adopted would break, is due the fact that the paper currency mentioned floats at par. The gentleman ought to know—of course he does not [laughter and applause], but it is I submit none the less the fact that if it should please the God of the universe to blight for one season the harvest by withholding the early or the latter rains so that the barns should be left empty and the resulting calamity come upon our country, the farmers having nothing to sell and hence being unable to pay their debts much less to make purchases, the life-blood that courses along the arteries of trade would become stagnant; with every storehouse full of the products of the shops, the mills, the factories, and the mines, and nobody buying, it is not difficult to see that general business paralysis would ensue, and all men holding a promise to pay would begin to feel anxious touching the real value of the written or printed promise they held, since in the certainty of its prompt payment must be involved the problem of bread and butter for those who hold them. The revenues fall off, dark clouds lower in the financial horizon, the holders of the promissory notes of the Government begin to wonder if they will be paid, and particularly when they reflect that to pay the four hundred millions of paper only one hundred millions of dollars have been retained. I am of opinion that in the presence of such conditions even my friend from Iowa with the rest would be found gathering up his greenbacks and ambling along the Avenue toward the Treasury and saying, Uncle Sam you will please let me have the specie on these notes. [Laughter and applause.] I will feel safer with the money in my pocket.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. You must not misrepresent me. The wonderful thing is with these sentiments you refused to pay out over and above $100,000,000 in the Treasury.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Why? Because the administration is bound to maintain the national credit by conducting its business according to business principles, and they require that the Secretary of the Treasury should hold trust funds according to the conditions of the trust and to the prompt discharge of the obligation the trust imposes. You do not allow the Secretary of the Treasury or the President the discretion ordinarily allowed to a bank president or cashier.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. Your idea of paying the debt, then, is to keep the money in the Treasury?

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. No, sir; my way of paying the debt is to so conduct the financial affairs of the Government as to give the world assurance that we can promptly meet our obligations at any time demand may be made upon us. And that can not be done except by keeping enough specie on hand to give the world from time to time needful assurance that the Treasury can meet promptly all demands that can be made upon it. The Morrison resolution not only awakens suspicion that the Government may not be able to do this, but by its very terms invites a condition of things against which it renders it impossible for the Government to provide. The suggestion contained in the resolution touching what may hereafter be the financial policy of the Government will provoke a storm, and when that storm comes it will find the Secretary of the Treasury helpless, crippled, shackled by the provisions of the remarkable resolution of my friend from Illinois, and which was voted for by a majority on that side of the House.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. And by a great majority on that side of the House also.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Well, I am not aware that our side of the House is required to be constantly rushing to the front to save you brethren from destroying yourselves. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. And I notice they do not follow the gentleman himself always, either.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I have not assumed to lead.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. But to return to the subject-matter of this bill, from which I have been tempted for a moment to stray. I know what the suggestion of my friend from Illinois will be touching the delinquency of his party in this matter. We will hear it said, why did not you do this yourselves when you had charge of the Government? Gentlemen, that is a proper question, but the answer to it is easy and will become apparent on a moment's reflection. The Republican party had control of the Government at the close of the war and for some years thereafter. While that is true, you all know the difficulties under which the Government was laboring in settling the thousand important questions that grew out of the troubled era of the war. You know the Government was struggling under a heavy load of debt that it was illy able to bear; there was a depreciated currency and the air was full of prophecies of repudiation. You know as well as I the condition of the South touching the newly-enfranchised race, which presented a problem not of easy solution; that the Republican party, confronted by all these momentous problems, the solution of which was threatening to destroy the integrity of the Republic, and that with possible foreign complication, all pressing for attention, there was little time and less opportunity to look after the matter of coast defenses. You will recognize also that it was a transition period, a period of evolution in the matter of enginery of war.

You know that the conflict between the Merrimac and the Monitor had not merely suggested but had worked a revolution in the matter of coast defenses; but we passed all of that, settling every question as it arose, and unfortunately during all of this period I regret to say to my brethren on the other side we had no assistance from you. While we were attempting to place the finances of the country upon a firm basis, while attempting to reach the safe harbor of resumption, you planted your greenback batteries all along the shore to drive us back into the chop-sea of inflation and financial ruin.

Mr. REAGAN. Does not the gentleman know that if it had not been for the efforts of this side of the House in its action which prevented the further cancellation of legal-tender notes, and which insisted upon and secured the recoinage of silver, that resumption could not have been secured at all, and that the Republican Secretary of the Treasury so stated?

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. There is always something so peculiar about the logic and philosophy of my distinguished friend from Texas that I am unable to understand his doctrine. I am aware that we were hindered in our efforts to reach resumption by the constant interference of our Democratic friends, who possibly thought that their efforts had the tendency and effect which my honored friend now claims for them. But just how you could reach the shore of resumption when you with both oars were pulling with all your might in the other direction is something that passes my comprehension. In the Forty-third Congress, when the question of resuming specie payment was before this House, the records will show that Democratic members voted almost solidly against it.

Mr. REAGAN. The gentleman is mistaken, and the Secretary of the Treasury, himself a Republican, acknowledged, as I have just stated, that the measures I have named hastened resumption.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Well, I think I can not yield further to my friend. But just how they could hasten resumption by staving it off will always be a mystery to practical men. The course of the Democratic party on all the vital questions pertaining to and growing out of the war is matter of history; so with the bearing of the Republican party. And the course of neither will be determined by reference to any single eddy of thought or solitary action. The record is full and complete and will leave no doubt as to which rendered the better service. The course of the great Republican party, its policy and purposes were known to every one, and all tended in the direction of resumption; and I submit that the record discloses that, at every stage of that progress, every step forward in that direction was hampered and impeded by the Democratic party.

Mr. REAGAN. Will the gentleman allow a question?

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Yes, sir.

Mr. REAGAN. If the policy of the party to which he belonged had been perpetuated, of subordinating all the interests of this country to legal tender, we would not have resumed specie payments now. He certainly forgets that the remonetization of silver, which arrested the cancellation of the legal-tender notes, was the beginning of prosperity in this country, and was so recognized by the Republican Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. My honored friend states what his party did and then assumes that the result of what it did was all that he claims. It is a very strange thing that no other nation on earth ever made such progress, and nowhere in history is there a record of such progress and development, as this country enjoyed under the administration of the Republican party; and it is equally strange that every measure which tended to add to that prosperity and healthful development met with opposition from the Democratic side of the House. I have been constrained by my friends on the other side to depart at times from the line of thought which I was pursuing.

Now, Mr. Chairman, our friends on the other side have had control and charge of this Government in the House which originates money bills for ten years or more. It has been perfectly competent for them, and within their power, to provide the means for securing proper coast defense all along our border. The judgment of this country is and has been for a decade that that ought to be done. The judgment of the wisest and most patriotic men of the Democratic party is that there is a crying necessity for appropriations equal to providing for the emergency. And yet you refuse to do it. You refuse to take the advice of Samuel J. Tilden, who, recognizing the defenseless condition of our harbors and cities, has urged the majority in this House to make suitable appropriations now while our finances are such as to enable you to do so, and when our workmen are idle and stand ready and willing. He says instead or adopting the suggestion which has been made upon this floor by gentlemen time and again to reduce the tax on whisky—he says, "Take this surplus, employ the waiting idle workmen, and put your coast defenses in suitable condition, and thus win the confidence and support of the people of the country."

Have you done it? No, sir. But in response to the request of the chosen leader of Democracy, and in spite of the palpable needs of the country, you present to the House an appropriation insufficient to provide an adequate defense for the humblest harbor along our whole coast line. Do you think your constituents will approve of that course? If you do you are mistaken, or I am greatly mistaken in the intelligence, tone, and temper of the American people. Instead of making these needful appropriations we have presented a proposition to reduce internal-revenue taxes for which there has been no demand except upon this floor. Here is a demand to reduce the tax upon whisky, not heard anywhere except upon this floor. Here is a demand that the surplus, so called, in the national Treasury, kept under a sacred promise, an express trust and indispensable to maintain the national credit, shall be wiped out to pay bonds that are drawing 3 per cent. interest. Instead of fortifying your country on the coast so as to maintain its power and dignity among nations you deal a deliberate blow at the national credit, a blow under which it staggers to-day.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. RYAN was recognized and yielded a portion of his time to Mr. BUTTERWORTH.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Instead of upholding the national credit, which is our source of strength and prosperity, the proposition I have alluded to, known as the Morrison resolution, sanctioned by my honored friend from Virginia [Mr. TUCKER], is launched against it, and when I see these two gentlemen leave the beaten highway of their fathers and along which they have heretofore been accustomed to walk, I am moved to exclaim, "Who shall be strong if these be weak? Who shall rebuke the wrong if these consent?" But, to my surprise, they have consented to the attempt to force arbitrarily from the national Treasury the reserve which has been recognized for a quarter of a century and by every administration, including the present, as being indispensable to the maintenance in the financial marts of the world of our national credit, which is, I repeat again, the foundation upon which alone we must build the sure foundations of prosperity. That surplus is to be scattered from the vaults of the national Treasury. To strengthen your coast defenses? No. To meet the crying needs of the country? No. But, as my friend from Tennessee would say, to quicken our industries by pouring into the channels of trade and commerce this vast sum. If the observation had fallen from other lips than those of my friend from Tennessee [Mr. MCMILLIN] I would think it was intended solely for the gallery on the theory that there might be among the listeners some unemployed waiting for work, and waiting in vain, who could or would be induced to believe the moment the alleged surplus was paid out to cancel the 3 per cent. bonds new industries would start into life and a thousand avenues of trade would be opened up to the watching, waiting men. And that was said in face of the fact that nearly $100,000,000 are lying idle in the city of New York unemployed, but vainly seeking remunerative investment. The gentleman on reflection will admit that the matter of quickening industry has some relation to the question of demand and supply. It seems logical to conclude that when every garner is full of grain the farmer is not tempted to plow and sow a greater number of acres; when shoes are on every shelf and the supply exceeds the demand, there is no disposition to establish another shoe factory. When the mills and factories have produced more than is sufficient to supply the wants of the people, how will the pouring of millions into the already glutted channels of trade tend to help matters?

It seems to me patriotic, intelligent men should seek in another manner to point out the highway to national prosperity than by attempting to induce the people of this land to believe there is a power in the Government, yes, in this House, which, if rightly exercised, would quicken every industry and give employment to every idle hand. I would it were so, but it is not, and all intelligent men know the power does not rest in the Government to do it. And yet, because the struggling millions of the land are anxious to get work and be about something to make their homes better and happier, the chosen representatives of the people—that is, many of them at least—stand in their places here, denounce the Government, denounce ourselves as if we were standing in and blocking the way of national prosperity, because, forsooth, we refuse to tear out the very foundation upon which rests every possibility of business prosperity. We are assailed even here, as if we could if we would loosen the wheels of our locked industries by legislative enactment; as if we could by act or resolution start the healthful current of trade and commerce which is now stagnant.

I know of but one standing menace to our industries, one impending danger that has influence to partly paralyze our vast manufacturing industries, and that comes from the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MORRISON], who constantly assaults the tariff with bills for its great reduction, thus unsettling every avenue of business which would be affected by such revision.

My Democratic friends, you make a great mistake if you suppose for one moment that I desire that you should fail in the administration of this Government. I would to God your administration should be characterized by such wisdom, such economy and frugality, such beneficial results to my country that the people of the land would be justified in continuing you in power, being assured that you had dealt better by the great interest committed to your care than my own party would have done.

I see nothing, however, in your course to inspire such hope or to justify such expectation.

On the contrary, I submit that instead of dealing with great questions in a manner consistent with ripe wisdom and perfect candor there seems to be a constant appeal to the prejudice, the passion, the appetites of men, a disposition too often to deal with them as if we questioned the wisdom of God when he created man as having put together anything beyond a mouth, an appetite, a stomach, and an alimentary canal.

Mr. Chairman, I have said, and repeat it, that for the defenseless condition of our country the Democratic majority in this House are at fault, and are without excuse. You came into power with profuse promises of accomplishing all that the people demanded. Nobody on this side of the House expected you would quicken our industries or extend our commerce; but we hoped, with reason, that you would not refuse to appropriate the people's surplus to provide needful and proper defense for our vast cities and coast line.

Governments are not made great or strong by legislation. National strength lies back of that. Our national strength will be found in the homes of our land. Our legislation is but the reflection of the teaching at the hearthstones of our country. There is where the decay of civic virtue will begin, there the foundations of our Government be undermined, if at all. Those who hold the guiding reins above the children at the hearthstones exercise a mightier influence over the destinies of the country than we who make its laws. If this Congress appealed more earnestly to those hearthstones, more earnestly to the intelligence of our people; if we sought to deserve their confidence by fearless discharge of duty, rather than to secure applause by serving merely to please those who are supposed to hold our political fortunes in their hands, we would do better for ourselves and the country, and would frequently show less promptness to vote for measures that we do not deem wise, nor exhibit such hesitation to vote for others which we know to rest in wisdom and which promise ultimate good.

I do not know what may be done touching this bill. It is my purpose to offer an amendment increasing this appropriation $3,000,000. That certainly is little enough. But it will enable this board to move in the direction of providing defenses for some of our great cities.

Will you adopt it, gentlemen? If not, why? It can not be said that we lack the money. It can not be urged that the engineers, mechanics, and artisans of the country are not able, ready, willing, and anxious to begin the work. Nor will it be said that we are lacking in material resources. It can not truthfully be said that the work can be prudently delayed. The necessity is great, the time and all conditions auspicious to begin. It rests with the Democratic majority to vote or withhold the needful appropriation from the surplus revenues, and just here I want to say, Mr. Chairman, that the talk we have heard on the stump during the past year or two about the vast balance lying idle in the Treasury was not worthy of the men who stumped the country on that issue. Now the promise to distribute the four hundred millions among the people has come home to torment you. The Morrison resolution, aimed at the national credit, is the nearest approach you can make to redeeming the delusive promise made in regard to scattering four hundred millions among the people. I am informed that some persons were actually deceived by the talk about the four hundred millions of idle surplus. You came into power and your Secretary of the Treasury found it absolutely necessary to increase the surplus, so called. He was bound by his oath of office and by his high sense of duty to protect and defend his country's credit. So he did not redeem the promise to scatter the hundreds of millions among the people. I am not criticising the administration at all upon this point.

I have no doubt that President Cleveland and Secretary Manning did what they believed to be, and what was, for the best interests of the financial credit of this country; and I say amen to what they have done. But our friends upon the other side asserted that there were $400,000,000 lying idle in the Treasury, while the result proves that that was a statement made to deceive and delude the unwary. What was the statement made for? The thousands of idlers that gathered about the various stumps from which that was proclaimed said among themselves: "If this balance be distributed among us there will be employment for us all." Even the idler will be flush. Yet the speakers knew that they were worse than mocking the men who listened to them. Not only that, but when the administration inaugurated by the Democracy seeks to do what is demanded by every consideration of private and public honor, they are slapped in the face by the Democratic majority in this House, who promptly vote a want of confidence in their own administration. And I may mention that the Secretary of the Treasury in reference to the object, purpose, and effect of the Morrison resolution telegraphs to a member upon this floor, my colleague, Mr. MCKINLEY, as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, July 14.

Hon. WILLIAM MCKINLEY, Jr.,
House of Representatives:

In reply to your telegram of this date asking what the Treasury would have left for working balance besides the fractional silver coin if the balance of seventy-five millions, as shown by the Treasurer's report of June 30 last, should be used in paying bonds, I beg to state that nothing would be left but trust funds which it would be dishonorable and dishonest to use for that purpose.

C. S. FAIRCHILD, Acting Secretary.

Was ever such a message sent by a Cabinet officer to the representatives of the people? Who is right, and who is wrong?

But all this is characteristic, and indicates that the Democratic majority in this House deals with the finances of the country as with the civil-service reform some time ago.

We heard a great deal about civil-service reform; yet when the Democratic President, who climbed up to his great office on that ladder, begins to find himself unsteady on his perch, substantially the only men who fly to his support to uphold him are to be found on this side of the House; and when he asks for clerks necessary to properly conduct the business of the Civil Service Commission, the Democratic majority in this House, without a ripple of dissent, votes to refuse the needful appropriation. This side votes to comply with the request of the President; his party friends vote against it.

Gentlemen, what can the country think of a party that comes into power with a rich profusion of promises, every one of which it breaks before the middle of its second year of administration?

Now, I have but this to add, and then I will take my seat regretting that I have trespassed so long upon the patience of the House. This bill pertains to a matter in which there is no partisanship. Its object appeals equally to both sides of the House. It is a proposition to provide sufficient and adequate coast defenses, confessedly needed, and to make an appropriation out of the abundance of the Treasury to do that which every citizen admits to be absolutely necessary and indispensable. To you, gentlemen, belongs the glory if you do it and the humiliation if you neglect it; and I assure you we will help you to vote the needed appropriation.

I confess, however, that as to you I am almost as one without hope. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. HISCOCK. Before the gentleman closes I would like to ask him this question: has he explained what good reason there is for the creation of the commission that this bill proposes? And further, I would like to ask the gentleman if in his judgment all of this work can not be as well done by the Army and the Army engineers as by this new commission which it is proposed to create?

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I will answer the gentleman, categorically, no; I do not think it can. That is the judgment of the committee; and I think they were unanimous in the opinion that what we need is a little new blood, a little aggressive energy, some new material selected with wisdom, which will appreciate the wants of the country. I am assuming that just and liberal appropriations will be made.

Mr. REED, of Maine. I think the bill needs a little more money more than anything else.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. So it does.

Mr. REAGAN. Mr. Chairman, what disposition has been made of the time?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. RYAN] was recognized, and yielded a portion of his time to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BUTTERWORTH].

Mr. REAGAN. Is the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. RYAN] willing that I should proceed now?

Mr. RANDALL. Mr. Chairman, I have something to say on this subject. Whenever the committee is again recognized I desire to proceed on behalf of the committee. If there should be an extension of the time desired, so far as I am concerned I shall be perfectly willing to concede it.

Mr. REAGAN. If the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] wishes to go on now on behalf of the committee of course I have nothing to say, but if he does not, I wish to say a few words on this subject.

Mr. RANDALL. Well, Mr. Chairman, let us have a clear understanding about this. We have agreed that the general debate shall close at 4 o'clock. That gave two hours and three-quarters of debate, two hours of which were generously conceded to the other side. Fifteen minutes I think have already been occupied on this side, leaving but thirty minutes more. How much of those thirty minutes I desire I can not say. I do not often talk at great length.

Mr. REAGAN. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania want to go on now or may I?

Mr. RANDALL. How much time does the gentleman desire?

Mr. REAGAN. I may require half an hour to say what I want to say.

Mr. RANDALL. That is all the time there is left.

Mr. REAGAN. I understand there is an hour and a quarter left on this side.

Mr. WILSON. Only half an hour.

Mr. REAGAN. Does the debate close at four o'clock?

Mr. RANDALL. The general debate closes at that time.

Mr. REAGAN. I should like then to occupy fifteen minutes.

Mr. RANDALL. With the concurrence of the gentleman from Alabama in charge of this bill I ask unanimous consent that the general debate may be extended fifteen minutes, so as to accommodate the gentleman from Texas.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks that the time for general debate be extended fifteen minutes for the accommodation of the gentleman from Texas. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. REAGAN. Mr. Chairman, there are two questions which I desire briefly to discuss. From my participation in the colloquy with the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BUTTERWORTH] it might be inferred that I am opposed to the policy he was advocating of preparing for efficient national defense. I desire to say that it has been my hope that at this session of Congress liberal appropriations would be made to strengthen the Navy of the United States. I am prepared now, and shall be at all times whenever a suitable plan for the fortification and defense of our seacoast is presented, to vote whatever money may be necessary for that purpose. I recognize that as our country grows older, and as its relations with other commercial countries grow more extensive, we become complicated with the world's questions, and it is necessary for our country to be in a condition to take care of the property and lives of its citizens and the honor of the nation. I shall do my duty toward securing these ends.

If we should lag behind and fail to do the duty which we owe to this country and the world by securing a transit across the Isthmus of Panama, the interests of the commercial world demand that transit, and it will be secured by some other country if not by ours; and whether it be secured by some other government or by ours, it will bring the commerce of the world with western Europe and Asia and the islands of the Pacific by our doors. It will extend our commerce and business relations with the world, and make it necessary for us to have a stronger navy in order to protect our interests upon the seas and in foreign countries. At the same time I think a proper system of fortification ought to be adopted. If I had time, though I am not an engineer, I think I could suggest a system much cheaper than the cumbersome and costly systems of fortifications heretofore adopted, and one which would be much more efficient—a system of defense in the form of revolving turrets at proper places so strengthened that the most powerful guns could not break them down.

I have thought it proper to say thus much, so as to have it understood that I am prepared now and shall be in the future, so long as it may be my duty to act here as a Representative, to take every appropriate step necessary to strengthen the defenses and promote the welfare of the country. I see that this bill which the gentleman from Ohio has criticised so severely makes provision for the creation of a commission and for the preparation of plans looking to secure the defense of the country as he suggests; but he seems to think that the work ought to be done at this session of Congress—immediately. That would be very well if we had the power to speak a system of fortifications into existence without the great expenditure and labor and skill and scientific knowledge necessary to build up a system of national defense. But this work takes time. I agree with him that we should avail ourselves of every means which may promote the rapid construction of necessary national defenses both by land and by sea. With these remarks I leave that subject.

The gentleman has chosen to arraign in terms of great bitterness, and it seems to me great injustice, the Democratic party for its policy, for its failure, in his view, to meet the demands of this country. He stands here as a representative of that great political party which during the twelve years when it had sole control of both branches of Congress, as well as of the executive department, voted away about 200,000,000 acres of the public lands to corporations, as well as passed many other political measures wholly unjustifiable in a moral or political sense. He stands here the representative of a party which undertook to reach specie payments by what they called "getting down to hard pan." They worked on the problem of procuring specie payments until the country was bankrupt and the people substantially ruined; their property was being sold in every township from Maine to California for taxes. Merchants were failing in business; distress spread over the commercial portion of the country, and labor was sunk in poverty and sorrow. That was the result of the policy of "getting down to hard pan."

One plan of bringing about specie payment was to redeem and cancel the $400,000,000 of legal-tender notes; and that party was proceeding to do this at the rate of $2,000,000 or $3,000,000 a month, I believe, when there was no specie in circulation and when the paper circulation was inadequate. It is this policy of resuming specie payments by taking currency out of the country, by bankrupting the people and making specie payments forever impossible, that the gentleman [Mr. BUTTERWORTH] on this floor to-day boasts about.

The country was saved from the calamity which that policy had brought about by a Democratic majority returned to this House by the people of the United States. That Democratic majority with the aid of some Western Republicans stopped the redemption and cancellation of the legal-tender notes, secured $346,000,000 of them as a part of the volume of the currency of this country, re-established confidence, gave stability and prosperity to business.

More than that, while our country is the largest silver-producing country in the world, producing about 40 per cent. of all the world's silver, the Republican party, in the interest of the bondholders and bankers, had demonetized silver, had taken it away from the people as a part of their currency.

The Democratic party represents the traditional policy of that party from the foundation of the Government until the present time. The use of silver as money has been the policy of the commercial world through all its history. It was the safe commercial policy of the world, until rich men in this country and in Europe undertook, in their own interest, for the purpose of enhancing the value of their bonds and other securities, increasing the interest to be paid them on their money, to stop the coinage of silver. In order to enhance the interest of the bondholders and to increase their profits the interests of millions of toilers of this land were sacrificed and the fortunes of our merchants were wrecked.

Now, the Democratic party remonetized silver, as I have stated, by the aid of a portion of the Western Republicans. They not only remonetized silver, but, by the coinage of $2,000,000 a month of silver and by making $346,000,000 of legal-tender notes a part of the volume of currency, they gave confidence to the public mind, they gave stability to trade, they gave employment to the poor, and, as stated by Mr. Sherman in his report as Secretary of the Treasury to Congress, they thereby enabled the Treasury of the United States to resume specie payment.

From that day to this, Mr. Chairman, the Democratic party has been endeavoring to enforce a policy of giving ample circulation of gold and silver coin and paper redeemable in coin and based on coin to promote the public prosperity and advance the business interests, and especially to protect the interests of the millions of toilers of this land. By so doing we have redeemed the country from the policy of being run in the interest of corporations, railroads, and national banks, grinding down the people in the interest of the money power.

It is right for me to say in this connection that every movement of the Republican party on these subjects for the last twenty years has been to build up the strength of the money interests and the power of the corporations of this country. While its bids for popular favor have to be paid for out of the public Treasury, the Democratic party stands here representing the people and not the plunderers and corporations. Yet because they vote against extravagant appropriations, they are denounced by gentlemen on the other side for want of statesmanship, want of progress, want of capacity to deal with the problems involved in carrying on this Government. Whenever it becomes the policy of both the great political parties to bid the money in the Treasury for the votes of the populace the Government of this country will go as that of Rome did, into the hands of the highest bidder.

If you would protect the rights of the people you should guard carefully against the allowance of extravagant appropriations. If that be done, and we also preserve a proper volume of currency, we need have no fear as to the continued prosperity of the country and no apprehension as to the perpetuation of our liberties. [Applause.]

Mr. RYAN. I yield now fifteen minutes of my time to the gentleman from Maine [Mr. DINGLEY].

Mr. DINGLEY. Mr. Chairman, I agree with the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BUTTERWORTH] in his judgment of the utter inadequacy of this appropriation for the defense of the country. He has presented that subject so ably and justly that I do not propose at this time to repeat what he has already so well said.

It seems to me, Mr. Chairman, the great difficulty in all these matters in reference to appropriations for objects of public importance lies in the disposition which there is among members of this House to vote in the negative simply for the purpose of preserving what they term an economical record. Economy is always essential, but a wise economy is not parsimony.

Adequate appropriations for any object of public concern is economy and not profligacy of expenditure; and the withholding of necessary appropriations is waste and may result in injury to the public interests. It seems to me that the withholding of appropriations to put the nation in a state of defense in case of war, which is sure to come to all nations, is anything but statesmanship. Those who vote to withhold these appropriations to make a record of apparent economy I believe are mistaken as to the public sentiment of the country. The withholding of a single million of dollars of expenditure in the direction of preparing for adequate defense of the nation may result in the destruction of property amounting to hundreds of millions of dollars.

Those of our Democratic friends who look upon the record of a reduction of expenditures where they are needed for public objects as something that commends them to popular favor overlook the fact that the great majority of the people are willing to support the proper employment of the public money in furthering whatever will advance the prosperity and strength of the nation.

The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] the other day took occasion in the course of a speech upon the deficiency bill to claim great credit for Democratic management because of what it had saved during the past year in the administration of the Government. I endeavored at that time to interrupt him for the purpose of making a suggestion, but was not permitted, and therefore take this earliest opportunity to make a few remarks in response to what the gentleman said. He stated:

> The Democrats have made a net reduction of $16,000,000 in the expenses of the Government during this year, and, exclusive of pensions, a reduction of $24,000,000 have been secured during the first year of Democratic administration.

Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Illinois claims that the fact that the expenditures of the Government during the past fiscal year were $16,000,000 less than in the previous fiscal year has been because of a Democratic administration. But why did the gentleman claim that this reduction had been the savings of the Democratic administration? Why did he compare the expenditures of the last fiscal year with the expenditures of the previous fiscal year, four months of which had been also Democratic; for if there was extravagance in expenditures in the fiscal year ending June 30, 1885, it was extravagance in which the Democratic administration had shared. If the gentleman intended to be fair in his comparison why did not he select the last fiscal year which comprised an entire year of Republican administration, namely the year ending June 30, 1884? If he had done that he would have discovered the fact that the expenditures for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1886, were one and one-half millions of dollars larger than they were in the fiscal year ending June 30, 1884. The expenditures for the last fiscal year under the present Democratic administration were $245,615,745, but the expenditures for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1884—the last entire year of Republican administration—were only $244,126,244.

Now, I do not make this comparison for the purpose of drawing any conclusions in favor of superior economy on the part of a Republican administration, but simply to show that the effort of the gentleman from Illinois to claim superior economy for the present Democratic administration has no foundation. I think, Mr. Chairman, and gentlemen will certainly concur with me, that there has been in the past as in the present a disposition on the part of gentlemen whether representing one side or the other of this House to exercise at all times a due degree of economy consistent with the highest efficiency of the public service; and that there can be no well-founded claim of superior economy on either side. There have been, it is true, and will continue to be differences of opinion as to whether this or that expenditure is wise, or whether it will secure results that justify a particular appropriation.

I have obtained somewhat in detail a table showing in what items there was a reduction of expenditure in the fiscal year ending June 30, 1886, as compared with the preceding year of part Republican and part Democratic administration, an account of which the gentleman from Illinois lays claim to a large reduction of expenditures by a Democratic administration; and I will print the table in connection with my remarks.

It will be seen by this comparative table that there has been almost no reduction of expenditures for ordinary purposes or in directions under the control of the administration. The reductions have been almost entirely in directions where Congress, or the course of the administration of the laws of Congress, happened to call for payments in the prior fiscal year and did not call for such payments in the last fiscal year.

For example, the gentleman from Illinois claimed that the Democrats had reduced the expenditures of the War Department $8,344,869. Now, of this so-called reduction, $6,868,000 was in expenditures for rivers and harbors, and was the result of the fact that at the first session of the Forty-eighth Congress a river and harbor bill was passed; and at the second session of the Forty-eighth Congress the river and harbor bill passed by the Democratic House was defeated by the Republican Senate. If the Senate had concurred in passing the bill the expenditures under this bill alone would have covered nearly all the reduction claimed by the gentleman from Illinois in all departments. Surely the gentleman will not pretend that a Democratic administration is entitled to the credit of a saving made by the Republican Senate.

But again, over a million of dollars of other items of reduction claimed arose simply from the fact that certain States were reimbursed for war expenditures or certain payments were made for war claims and soldiers' homes in the former year that were not made in the latter year. This surely had nothing to do with a change of administration.

Take the Navy Department, in which the claim is set up that the Democratic administration has saved $2,406,585. Over one-half of this so-called saving arises from the fact that less work was done and paid on the new war vessels in process of construction in the former year than in the latter year. The fact that there has been an increase in pay of Navy and miscellaneous of $889,000 is hardly consistent with the claim that there has been a reduction of expenditures in items to a certain extent in the control of the Department.

The gentleman claims that there has been a reduction of over $4,000,000 in diplomatic expenditures, when the fact is that the ordinary expenditures for the two years were substantially the same. The so-called reduction of expenditures is due to the fact that in the former year nearly $4,000,000 of Alabama claims and French claims were paid from funds placed in the Treasury by Great Britain and France for the payment of claims against those governments, while in the latter year none were paid. Would the gentleman have us understand that this is a reduction of expenditures made by the administration?

Turn to the expenditures of the Treasury Department and for the customs service, and it will be seen that there has been very little reduction in items of ordinary expenditure. But I have not time to enter into details. The table which I will print in connection with my remarks will exhibit them and will show that nearly all the so-called reductions have been in extraordinary payments, outside of ordinary expenditures, which happened to be larger in the fiscal year ending June 30, 1885 (which, however, was in part under Democratic control), than in the fiscal year ending June 30, 1886.

The following is the table referred to:

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. REAGAN took the chair as Speaker pro tempore.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, informed the House that he had approved bills of the following titles:

An act (H. R. 1462) granting a pension to Addie L. Macomber;

An act (H. R. 3463) granting a pension to Hannah Babb Hutchins;

An act (H. R. 4544) granting a pension to Ann E. Cooney;

An act (H. R. 6311) for the relief of Mrs. Maria Walker;

An act (H. R. 7165) to increase the pension of Manhattan Pickett;

Joint resolution (H. Res. 202) to continue the provisions of a joint resolution approved July 1, 1886, entitled "Joint resolution to provide temporarily for the expenditures of the Government;"

Joint resolution (H. Res. 199) providing for printing eulogies delivered in Congress upon the late Michael Hahn; and

An act (H. R. 1840) granting a pension to Samuel F. Garrett.

Mr. RYAN. I yield for ten minutes to the gentleman from California.

Mr. MORROW. Mr. Chairman, a year ago Congress passed an act entitled "An act making appropriations for fortifications and other works of defense, and for the armament thereof, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1886, and for other purposes." This act provided, among other things, that the President of the United States should appoint a board, of which the Secretary of War should be a member and president, to be composed of two officers of the Engineer Corps, two from the Ordnance Corps, two officers of the line of the Navy, and two civilians.

This board was required to examine and report at what ports fortifications or other defenses were most urgently required, the character and kind of defenses best adapted for each, with reference to armament, the utilization of torpedoes, mines, or other defensive appliances. It was clearly not the purpose of the statute to require merely an elaborate preparation for the effective and complete defense of our seacoast; but it was provided specially that the board should examine and report upon the urgent and present absolute needs of the country in the way of defensive appliances. And it was mainly to meet this pressing emergency that the law was passed and the board constituted.

This action of Congress was in response to the demand of the people that something should be done toward protecting our exposed ports and harbors.

A board was appointed as directed by the act, and in accordance with its terms a full and comprehensive report has been submitted to Congress covering the whole subject. From this report we learn that the ports at which fortifications or other defenses are most urgently required are as follows:

1. New York.
2. San Francisco.
3. Boston.
4. Lake ports.
5. Hampton Roads.
6. New Orleans.
7. Philadelphia.
8. Washington.
9. Baltimore.
10. Portland, Me.
11. Rhode Island ports in Narragansett Bay.

In the order of the urgency and importance New York stands first and San Francisco second. As representing in part the city of San Francisco I would be derelict in the duty I owe to my constituents if I should refrain from protesting most vigorously against the action of the Committee on Appropriations in refusing to provide for the construction of defensive works at the ports and places named in accordance with the recommendations of the board on fortifications or other defenses.

The board recommends the appropriation of $21,500,000 for the present year. The Committee on Appropriations provide in this bill for the expenditure of only $620,000 for but little more than continued experiments and investigations. The board recommends an aggregate expenditure of $126,000,000 for the twenty-seven principal ports and harbors of the United States in annual appropriations of $9,000,000 each year after the first, until the work is completed. The Committee on Appropriations gives no heed to this recommendation.

The amount of property in the city of San Francisco exposed to the guns of any hostile vessel that may see fit to come within reach of the city has been estimated for the year 1884 at $181,000,000. Is it right or just that a community paying its taxes and cheerfully bearing its share of all the burdens of the Government should be allowed to remain with the lives of its citizens and the greater portion of its wealth exposed to the mercy of the first marauder that may come along? Certainly the cities of San Francisco and New York are entitled to the protection of the General Government, and they ought not to be allowed to remain longer without defensive works.

In a paper entitled The Policy of the National Defense, written by D. M. Taylor, captain of ordnance, I find the following very plain statement of the necessity for fortifications in the harbor of San Francisco. He says:

> Lieutenant Griffen, of the engineers, in an able paper showing our lack of proper defensive dispositions, read in New York a short time ago, spoke of the monetary value of property there lying so defenseless as almost to court an invader, and showed what poor economy it was to economize upon guns and fortifications and all defensive dispositions. The same line of argument would apply here (San Francisco), but I will not localize it; but, disregardjng entirely the financial aspect of the case both as to what is to be protected and as to the cost of such protection, I state the broad fact that if the Pacific coast is to remain an integral part of the United States the national honor demands that its main harbor be so protected that the almost irreparable misfortune and disgrace of its loss, with the probable consequent loss of the whole of the Pacific States for a time at least, may be avoided, and that the possession of the key of this coast may not be allowed to slip from our hands through our apathy or parsimoniousness in not properly fortifying it.
> The question here is, or should be, not one of cost but simply of what will be most effective and how soon it can be applied, and it is to be hoped that the Representatives and Senators from this section of the country will begin with the beginning of the next session of Congress, and, remembering and applying the parable of the unjust judge, give their fellow-Congressmen no rest in House, or Senate, or committee-room, or in the seclusion of private life, until an appropriation has been made and the business of properly and amply protecting San Francisco Bay with guns, forts, and torpedoes, at least had a beginning.

We are following these suggestions with all the vigor and earnestness we can command, but so far we have had but little to encourage us in the hope of success.

I call the attention of the gentleman from New York [Mr. VIELE], who is a military man, to the fact that the great city of his State, the largest city in the United States, is exposed to the shot of almost any gun carried by almost any war vessel afloat on the ocean to-day.

What will you do when an enemy's vessel shall menace your city? As the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BUTTERWORTH] has so eloquently said, you will place your young men upon your improvised fortifications to defend your lives and property and expose them to certain slaughter or you will meekly surrender at the sound of the first gun.

Sir, the people of this country demand that we shall provide the necessary fortifications for a proper defense, and with the information now before us we have no excuse for further delay.

I understood the chairman of the sub-committee who reported this bill to give as one of the reasons for the action of the committee in refusing to make larger appropriations for fortifications that we are at peace with the whole world. So we are. But suppose, as has been suggested, that a controversy should arise between us and some of our neighbors, how long do you suppose it would take to prepare ourselves to repel an attack and maintain our rights? The able report of this board to which I have already referred informs us that it would require five years. Let me read this part of the report. The board say:

> Unfortunately the immense labor of novel constructions must be undertaken under circumstances where careful workmanship is required and haste would be impossible. Under the most favorable conditions a long period would be required to place the defense upon a secure basis, and who shall guarantee that this can be effected free from complications with foreign powers? The gun-foundery board has estimated that it would require at least three years to establish proper plant for the construction of modern guns. It would in all probability require two years more to get out and prove the first 16-inch gun. That there may be no delay in mounting the guns as fast as completed the work upon the extensive foundations for the gun emplacements, as well as magazines, shell-rooms, engine-rooms, and other constructions necessary for the service of the guns, should be commenced at the earliest moment.

From this statement it apears that should we to-morrow have a difficulty or misunderstanding with any of the leading powers of the world we would most likely be compelled to surrender our position or ask a suspension of the controversy for the period of five years until we could construct cruisers, build fortifications, and make guns to enforce and defend our rights as a nation. The predicament would, of course, be absurd. It is not with nations as with individuals. There is a sort of chivalry among men by virtue of which when you say to your threatening antagonist that you are unarmed he will give you a chance to procure a weapon in self-defense, but with nations the declaration of war and the first blow come very nearly together.

There is no chance for preparation. If any of our controversies with foreign nations should result in a rupture we would find hostile fleets on our coast within twenty-four hours after the declaration and every dollar's worth of property of our citizens at exposed points would be at the mercy of the enemy. This is the position in which we would be. And now I ask is it the spirit of American manhood and American statesmanship that continues us in this faltering attitude? I do not think so. And yet the Democratic party, representing the Government, comes before the country with the proposition that only $620,000 shall be appropriated for the year 1887. And what is this sum for? To commence the building of fortifications in a feeble way? No. It is to enable the committee representing the party in power to continue to think upon this subject.

For five years the leaders of the Democratic party have been refusing to make appropriations for this purpose, telling us that they wanted time to consider what they should do. They wanted to determine what kind of guns we should have and ascertain the best system of defensive work. And now that they have the information they propose to appropriate the sum of $620,000 more, simply that they may make the pretense of doing something.

I submit the time has come for practical results. The country is prepared to accept the best judgment of this Congress upon the able reports and recommendations that have been made from time to time by the various committees and boards appointed to consider the question of defenses. We ought to do something; and I for one am prepared to vote for an appropriation in accordance with the recommendation of the board on fortifications. If not the $21,500,000, then I favor the appropriation of $3,000,000 as proposed by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BUTTERWORTH], but let us do something in response to the demand that the country shall be properly defended.

Another statement made by the gentleman having this bill in charge is that there are now two thousand guns in our fortifications, and the intimation he threw out was that these two thousand guns were available as a means of defense and could be relied upon in an emergency. Now, what is the actual condition of these guns? Some of them are too small to be effective against modern war ships. It is true that there are a few large guns mounted in different parts of the country. Some of these are in the fortifications at San Francisco, and I desire to call the attention of the committee to a statement concerning these the largest and most effective guns we have in our fortifications. I again read from a paper written by Captain Taylor. The article is entitled "Are we protected?" He says:

> The 15-inch smooth-bore, which will ever remain as a monument to General Rodman's skill and knowledge as a worker in metal, was a most formidable weapon against wooden ships or stone fortifications, but against armor-clads was classed as a gun of the "racking" rather than of the "punching" school. That is to say, its effect was supposed to be rather to jar, shatter, or "rack" the whole side of the vessel, breaking off bolt-heads and cracking plates, than to penetrate the armor, and this gun, while useful against the light armor-clads, which were contemporaneous with its introduction, is almost innocuous against the heavily armor-clad vessels of to-day.
> Recent experiments, however, have shown that owing to the admirable construction of this gun, it is possible to fire it with largely increased powder charges and obtain the very respectable penetration in wrought iron of 10 inches at 1,000 yards' distance. But in order to fire it with this charge—130 pounds of powder—it is necessary to have an entirely different carriage from its present one, and of the few of these carriages in existence there is not one on this (the Pacific) coast. A few months ago an attempt was made to fire one of these guns in this (San Francisco) harbor with a charge of 100 pounds of powder, 30 pounds less than that needed to produce its maximum penetration of 10 inches; and the gun was at once dismounted, and lies on the ground to-day, a melancholy witness to the inefficiency of our present defense.

That is a sample of one of the best guns you have in the fortifications to-day. The firing of a heavy charge of powder will dismount the gun and render it useless for a time at least. In the case cited we will have to wait until Congress in its wisdom shall appropriate enough money to build a derrick and a gun-carriage before that gun can be again got into place.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Those guns appear to be as dangerous at one end as at the other. [Laughter.]

Mr. MORROW. Yes, with the present worthless gun-carriages they are so. I venture to say that there is not a gun-carriage on any of our fortifications that will carry one of these heavy guns loaded and fired properly. Now, Mr. Chairman, is it treating the country fairly to bring forward this bill appropriating only $620,000 for 1887 when it is known that the work to be accomplished requires over twenty millions? It is not economy; and it is not enough to say that everything is all right, because we are at peace with all the world and have got "two thousand guns" in our fortifications.

It appears to me that this question ought not to be one of political controversy.

The national security is a matter in which there should be no divided opinion and no delay in action, and yet it seems that gentlemen on the other side of the House are not in accord with the sentiment of the country even in their own party upon this important subject. You have not only disregarded the advice of Mr. Tilden, although he spoke as one having authority, but you have ignored the warning of your leading newspapers charging you not to neglect your duty in this respect. And in this connection I beg leave to commend to your consideration the following editorial from the New York Sun of July 15, 1886:

THE FORTIFICATIONS BILL.

Considering the great amount of preliminary work performed by a great many persons with a view to preparing the Forty-ninth Congress for final and intelligent legislation on the important subject of coast defense, the House Committee on Appropriations will hardly startle the country by the magnitude of the expenditure it proposes.

For many years past the annual fortifications bill has been one of the easiest of the regular appropriations to prepare and hurry through Congress, because it did little more than provide for taking care of the forts without attempting new construction. But the present Congress not only assembled with a quite unprecedented public call for immediate and liberal outlays upon the protection of our seaports, stimulated by the letter of Mr. Tilden on this subject, but it has had a remarkable series of committee investigations to guide its legislation. It has had, in the first place, the very elaborate report of the gun foundry board, representing years of the labor of experts. It has also had the reports of the House Select Commission on Ordnance and Gunnery, sometimes called the public defense commission, and the Senate's Select Committee on Ordnance and War Ships, both representing months of labor in taking testimony and in visiting foundries and navy-yards by some of the ablest men in Congress. It has also had the very elaborate report of the board on fortifications and other defenses. Finally, on the subject of heavy guns and harbor-defense batteries it has had the important report of the House Naval Committee. Perhaps there never has been in any Congress such a collection not only of documentary evidence as to the needs of our coast defense, but so specific a statement of the precise method of beginning the work and the exact appropriations required. But more remarkable still, if possible, has been the substantial unanimity of these reports in describing the foundation-work needed for providing heavy guns and impregnable forts.

Perhaps there may have been an impression that the long delay this year in reporting the fortifications bill was due to the magnitude of the scheme thus proposed, and to the necessity of great care in providing the money for carrying out the system of works and guns described with so much detail in these various reports. Mr. Tilden, indeed, in his famous letter of December 1, 1885, to Mr. CARLISLE, had pointed out that the appropriation for seacoast defenses should be prompt as well as liberal, being "a paramount necessity." But delay for a few months could be ascribed to careful study of the details of this vast project. Now, however, after more than seven months of the session are gone, in its last days the great fortifications bill is reported to the House and proves to be a measure proposing to expend $620,000, which is a full sixth less than even last year's appropriation.

The plain truth seems to be that, with the annual pension bill necessarily increased this year to $75,000,000, being $15,000,000 more than last year's; with $5,000,000 and eventually $6,000,000 a year added by a bill for a general increase of pensions; with unknown millions possibly to be called for by the Mexican pension bill, now under consideration; with a river and harbor bill of over $15,000,000 passed by the House, and increased to $18,000,000 by the Senate against no bill at all passed at the last session, an "appropriation prompt and liberal" for coast defense, such as Mr. Tilden urged, had no chance whatever this year, at least at this stage of the session. Possibly, also, when so much of the year had been expended in passing little pension bills for the benefit of individuals, which the President no less laboriously vetoed, it was thought that a great national project of protecting our seaports could not possibly receive suitable attention from either Congress or the administration in the few weeks of midsummer heat, already largely preoccupied, with which the session will close.

So we get, instead, a proposition for one more board to look into the coast-defense question, with half a million dollars devoted to its expenses and experiments.

It is inadequate. The delay is a mistake.

In my judgment it is a very grave mistake. I think it is the duty of Congress to proceed at once with the preparations necessary to place the country in a proper position of defense against attack, from whatever direction it may come.

Mr. RYAN. Mr. Chairman, how much time have I remaining?

The CHAIRMAN. Twenty-seven minutes.

Mr. RYAN. I yield fifteen minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CUTCHEON], and the remainder of my time to the gentleman from New York [Mr. VIELE].

Mr. CUTCHEON. Mr. Chairman, what I shall say at this time will be upon the subject of fortifications and our coast defenses. I shall not discuss the silver question, or the national bank question, or the general question of Government expenditures, or any other question except that of fortifications.

I think that the title of this bill ought to be "A bill to provide how not to do it." It comes so far short of what seems to me to be the emergency and the demand of the hour, that it can be in no sense called a fortification bill. At the very best it is a bill to get ready to prepare to begin to fortify. But beyond that it does not go.

The gentleman from Alabama who has charge of the bill said in his opening remarks as excusing the meagerness of the measure that we are at peace with all the world. That is true; and for that very reason we ought to be utilizing the present opportunity to get ready for a different state of affairs. As has been said by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BUTTERWORTH], when the hour of danger comes it is too late to make preparation for war. Human nature, Mr. Chairman, is the same to-day that it has ever been. International intercourse is the same it has always been. Human selfishness, human greed, and human ambition have not changed with the lapse of years. And as in ages past one nation has ever stood ready to take advantage of the unpreparedness of another, so to-day our great commercial and political rivals stand ready to seize the opportunity of our nakedness to fall upon us and destroy us. The millennium has not yet come; and until it does come, it will never be safe for a great commercial nation, a rich nation like the United States, to be unprepared for war.

As to when war may come—soon or late—that is a mere question of years; it may be a mere question of months. At all events, it is only a question of time when this nation shall again be plunged in war. It is as certain as any future and contingent event can be; and when it comes where is it going to fall? With the present military power of this nation, its strength in men, its command of resources, no great foreign army will ever again be marched into the interior of this country. No foreign flag will ever be borne across our territory. But the war will be waged on our sea borders. Upon the great commercial centers on the seacoast the blow will fall.

Therefore it is, Mr. Chairman, that we need to provide not interior defenses, not great standing armies, but adequate defenses along the sea margin. I think it was Talleyrand who said that nothing happens but the unexpected. War never yet, or very rarely, came to a nation when that nation was fully prepared, armed, equipped, and expecting the assault. In 1871, when the matter of a submarine tunnel to connect France and England was under discussion, Colonel Maurice of the English army undertook an investigation of the manner in which great wars have originated. He commenced his investigation with the year 1700 and brought it down to the year 1871, covering a period of one hundred and seventy-one years.

He found as a result of his investigation that during those one hundred and seventy-one years one hundred and seven wars had commenced without any previous declaration of war or announcement of hostilities. He found that during that time there has been forty-one cases of war commenced without the declaration of hostilities, not only evidently, but in many cases avowedly for the very purpose of gaining the advantage that was to come from a blow for which the enemy was unprepared. He found that of those one hundred and seven wars commenced without previous declaration sixty had occurred in the present century, and that in thirty cases important fortresses had been seized by sudden movements because of no previous declaration of hostilities and inadequate preparation on the part of the enemy. This is the history of modern warfare. It almost always comes in a day, as did the Franco-Prussian war and as have other wars of recent date. We know not, therefore, when war may come; but when it does come it will come suddenly "as a thief in the night."

Now, what preparation have we for war at the present time? In the report of the commission on fortifications, to which reference has been made several times to-day, the commission state that in 1860 this nation was as well fortified and as well prepared for war as any nation in the world in the then state of the art of war. But what is our condition to-day? We are absolutely helpless; we are wholly deficient in any modern armament; we are absolutely stripped of any navy; we are totally without the best modern guns of heavy caliber. In other words, we are not prepared to cope with the meanest European power.

Even the "sick man," Turkey, to-day could send a fleet of war ships into New York Harbor that the United States of America with all its armaments could not withstand, and which could dictate terms to that great commercial metropolis and lay it under contribution for hundreds of millions of dollars. We have not the means for capturing or destroying any one of those which they could send against us. The little South American republic of Chili has more than one and more than two ships of war which could steam through the Golden Gate into the harbor of San Francisco and lay that great Western metropolis in ashes in spite of all that we could do.

This is the deplorable and disgraceful condition we are in. The board, composed of the Secretary of War, of the Chief of Ordnance, of the Chief of Engineers of the Army, of two able ordnance officers, of two well-known naval officers, and two distinguished citizens from civil life, say in their report to this House, under date of January 23, 1886:

It is impossible to understand the supineness which has kept this nation quiet—allowing its floating and shore defenses to become obsolete and effete, without making an effort to keep progress with the age, while other nations, besides constructing powerful navies, have not considered themselves secure without large expenditures for fortifications, including armored forts.

That is what their report says; that is what the Secretary of War subscribes to, because his name is appended to the report.

The new navy which we have not built and have made no appropriations to build is the coefficient of coast defense, goes along with it, and is a part of the system. The Navy is the movable factor and the coast defense the permanent factor.

It is said we have no present need of these defenses. I said a moment ago the time when we have no present need is the time when we must prepare for the time of need. As the board says, it would take three years to create the plant and then two years more to fabricate the first great gun—five years before we can begin to turn out our armament. It would take fifteen years with the utmost expedition we can make to carry out the system of fortification this plan has evolved. Not less than fifteen years will suffice to put our 4,000 miles of coast in a condition of sufficient defense.

Along the Atlantic coast, along the Gulf coast, and along the great Pacific coast are the great entrepôts and depots of the nation, through which its vast wealth goes out to the world and the wealth of the world comes to us. Close these great ports—Portland, Boston, New York, Baltimore, Philadelphia, Hampton Roads, Charleston, Savannah, and the mouth of the Mississippi River—and the commerce of this nation is absolutely paralyzed until the blockade is raised; and we have not yet the first ship, the first gun, the first battery with which to raise the blockade. We would have to go to work to create the ships, to create the guns, to create the armament before we could raise the blockade of the first of these ports.

Mr. Chairman, I desire to speak especially for one moment on the condition of our lake frontier. We not only have this great Atlantic coast fronting Europe, the great Gulf coast fronting South America, and the great Pacific coast fronting China, Japan, and the Orient, but we have a great lake coast of a thousand miles from Rouse's Point, on Lake Champlain, to Duluth, on Lake Superior. Right across the border we have a flourishing, strong, and vigorous young nation of five millions of people, with the British Empire back of it, with the St. Lawrence open to them so that British iron-clad gunboats could be sent to them through the canals on the Canadian territory, while we have not a ship-canal or water way on American soil through which any war vessel could pass from tide water to the lakes.

On these lakes are more than a thousand millions of property within range of any one of a fleet of gunboats that can get access to them. On Lake Michigan alone is approximately a thousand millions of property within range of any gunboat that can reach that lake; and as you come down along the lakes there are Detroit, Toledo, Sandusky, Cleveland, Buffalo, and Oswego, with hundreds of millions more of property liable to destruction by gunboats that could come up through the Welland Canal.

By the treaty of 1817 we are forbidden to maintain more than one revenue-cutter upon Lake Ontario and two upon the upper lakes with one 18-pound gun on board. That is the only protection that is now afforded to this vast amount of property. But you say there is no danger on our northern frontier because we could walk over and take Canada any morning before breakfast.

Gentlemen do not remember perhaps that we have to cross this great water boundary first. Canada has control of the canals, and it would not take over twenty-four hours for a British gunboat fleet from Kingston to come up through the Welland Canal and reach the upper lakes, and once there we would have no means to stop them. Fort Wayne is little better for this purpose than an earth bank with a popgun on it.

Once there they would have "the world before them where to choose." There would be nothing to prevent their devastating the shores and laying their great cities under contribution at will.

The board of fortifications in its report places the lake frontier as fourth in point of urgency of all the great fortifications required; only New York, San Francisco, and Boston taking precedence.

The board recommends the construction of four principal works on this northern frontier:

First. A work at the outlet of Lake Champlain, to prohibit the entrance of naval vessels of an enemy into that lake.

Second. A work with heavy armament upon the St. Lawrence to command the entrance into Lake Ontario.

Third. The strengthening and supplying of modern guns to Fort Wayne upon Detroit River, which commands the entrance to the three upper lakes, with all their populous and opulent cities.

Fourth. The construction of works at the Falls of the Sainte Marie for the purpose of protecting the great ship-canal through which passes the vast commerce of the new Northwest. For these purposes the board recommends an expenditure of $4,136,800.

If it is said that Great Britain will never declare war against us because we have a mortgage on Canada, I would ask if we are prepared to surrender our vast seacoast of 4,000 miles to be ravaged and desolated for the sake of an ultimate possibility of the aquisition of Canada? Will not a great iron-clad fleet off New York, Boston, Philadelphia, and Baltimore be quite as likely to dictate terms to us as we would be to dictate the terms of settlement to them with a hundred thousand men on Canadian soil? They would have us by the throat while we have them by the heels.

The idea that the proper place to defend New York city from an iron-clad fleet is beyond the Canadian border is, to say the least, a novel and striking one.

The great seaport towns, Portland, Boston, New York, Philadelphia, Baltimore, New Orleans, and San Francisco, are the nerve-centers or ganglia at which national life resides. Here the great railroad lines, internal water lines, foreign commerce, and coastwise trade concentrate.

The possession or destruction of these by an enemy would paralyze the entire commercial system of the country.

This is so clearly pointed out in the letter already read by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BUTTERWORTH] from Samuel J. Tilden to the Speaker of this House, on the 1st of December last, that I need not again repeat it. He says:

> The property exposed to destruction in the twelve seaports of Portland, Portsmouth, Boston, Newport, New York, Philadelphia, Baltimore, Charleston, Savannah, New Orleans, Galveston, and San Francisco can not be less in value than $5,000,000,000. To this must be added a vast amount of property dependent for its use upon these seaports.

The distinguished writer whose voice and counsel should at least be potential on the Democratic side of this Chamber, advises the immediate application of the surplus in the Treasury to our seacoast defenses.

The board of fortifications most emphatically re-enforces that counsel.

The President in his annual message says:

> The board on fortifications or other defenses appointed in pursuance of the act approved March 3, 1885, will in a short time present their report, and it is hoped that this may greatly aid the legislation so necessary to remedy the present defenseless condition of our seacoast.

This is a substantial indorsement of the report of the board. So we have both the intellectual head and the political head of the Democratic party urging them in one direction and yet they hesitate to go. They are deaf to their own Secretary of War.

But what is the plan of the board? It is the construction of a system of iron and steel armored forts; some with revolving turrets, others consisting of metal casemates, and others yet with barbette emplacements, and all armed with the best modern breech-loading rifled guns of heavy caliber.

These works are to be supplemented by floating batteries and submarine mines and torpedo boats.

It is hardly needful to say that all these should be the correlative of a first-class armored navy, prepared to contest the approach of a hostile fleet to our coast.

COST OF THE PROPOSED DEFENSES.

The next question is what is the estimated cost of this system.

The following is the estimate of the board:

CONSOLIDATED ESTIMATE.

For masonry and earthworks	$31,863,000
Armor	20,300,000
Structural metal	3,320,000
Guns and mortars	28,554,000
Carriages for armament	9,411,000
Floating batteries and armament	18,875,000
Submarine mines, &c	4,334,000
Torpedo boats	9,720,000
Total proposed cost	126,377,000

This seems like a very large sum. But let us not forget that it is to be spread over not less than thirteen years, and will amount to less than $9,000,000 per year. Our present population is estimated at 60,000,000, and averaging the population for the period of expenditure and it would beyond doubt average upward of 63,000,000, or the average annual expenditure per capita would be only 14 cents.

In 1840, when our population was but 17,000,000, we inaugurated a system of fortifications that cost us $57,131,000. This in like manner spread over thirteen years would average $4,394,000 per year, or 25 cents per capita upon the population of 17,000,000. So that we see that though the sum is large it is not relatively so large as that expended for a like purpose in the last generation. Of the total cost the board recommends the following initial and annual appropriations:

Appropriations recommended.

	First year.	Annual thereafter.
A. Gun steel	$8,000,000	.....
B. Gun factory	1,000,000	.....
C. Masonry, &c	4,000,000	$2,000,000
D. Armor, &c	2,000,000	2,000,000
E. Gun-carriages	1,000,000	1,000,000
F. Floating batteries	3,000,000	2,000,000
G. Submarine mines	1,000,000	500,000
H. Torpedo boats	1,500,000	1,500,000
Total	21,500,000	9,000,000

This is the recommendation of your administration through your Secretary of War.

The board conclude their report in the following words:

> After mature consideration, and with all the information before it, the board is of the opinion and recommends that the above-named amounts should be appropriated without delay for the purposes mentioned, and it further states that nothing less will suffice, even for a beginning.

ERASTUS CORNING.

And what a lame and impotent conclusion is this bill, with its paltry $600,000, where $21,000,000 were asked. But, Mr. Chairman, aside from the urgent need of this great system for the protection of the nation's commerce and aggregated wealth, there are certain which should be taken into account. We are passing through an industrial convulsion the cause of which lies in the insufficient employment of our industrial population. A great number of men are said to be out of work, or unable to make living wages. It is but rarely that the Government can create work. In this case it can.

INDIRECT BENEFITS

Almost every dollar of these $21,000,000 would go for wages. It would be expended in the mines, in the furnaces, in the forges and the machine shops, in ship-yards and gun founderies, in building forts and furnishing armament. These $21,000,000 put in circulation in wages would furnish employment for thirty-five thousand men at average wages of $600 per year, and estimating that each of these would have four dependents, it would provide a living for 175,000 of our industrial population.

It is hardly possible to estimate the effect that this creation of work would have upon the industrial situation.

I regret for this reason, as well as for the greater reason growing out of our defenseless condition, a sense of national insecurity and anxiety for the national honor, that the Committee on Appropriations has not responded more patriotically to the urgent appeal of their greatest leader, their political head, and the recommendation of the Secretary of War and board of fortifications. What we expend for the honor of the Republic is never wasted.

[During the delivery of the foregoing the hammer fell.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. CUTCHEON. I ask leave to extend my remarks.

There was no objection.]

Mr. RYAN. I yield the remainder of my time to the gentleman from New York [Mr. VIELE].

Mr. VIELE. Mr. Chairman, I regret very much that in the disposition of the time alloted to this debate there is not sufficient allowed to me for a discussion of the question in a manner which I conceive its importance merits. As a representative, sir, of that profession which has made for its study the science of war, and as a representative of that great city which has more at stake in this question than all of the rest of the country together, I enter my solemn and earnest protest against the whole tone and tenor of this bill.

I do not impugn in the slightest degree the motives of the members of this committee; but, sir, I am satisfied that they have allowed the tentative policy to get the better of their judgment. What is this question? It is simply a practical question of national defense. It is not a question of policy. It is not a question with which any political party has any essential connection; nor does the question of politics enter into its consideration; but it is simply a question, pure and simple, of our national defense and of national intelligence.

What is the position to-day? On the 3d day of March, 1885, Congress passed an act precisely similar in all respects for the accomplishment of precisely the same purposes for which this bill provides a commission of three civilians and two military officers. That board appointed under the act of March 3, 1885, was composed of the most intelligent men in this country upon the question which they were called upon to discuss; and I am free to say that you might search the whole country over, you may search the whole of Europe, and you will not find a board of more intelligence than that which composed the board whose report is now upon our desks. What is more, they made the most valuable report upon this subject that has ever been made upon any subject submitted to this or any other Congress. It is full, complete, and ample in every respect, and has all the plans, almost the specifications of a complete system; and as a truthful statement of the condition of our fortifications to-day, that they are of no use whatever. Why, sir, if this bill began by appropriating a sufficient amount of money to pay for the dynamite that would blow every fort that we have into the Atlantic, it would have more common sense than anything else it now contains. These forts are worthless, shams, and most deceptive. They are good for no purpose and must be substituted by something that is necessary and adequate for our defenses.

Now, what is necessary? We have now all the information that can possibly be obtained on this question. If the new board composed here were to sit fifty years and discuss the matter it could not add to it. We, by the advance and through the inventive genius of the age in the manufacture of projectiles and in the construction of guns, we to-day find ourselves where the Chinese were when the European powers took their determination to acquire possession of their country, and did it with the slightest possible resistance. We are in the same condition that China was in when the English and French nations determined to throw open their ports against their will. We are utterly and entirely defenseless. The question is, what shall be done?

It is a fact that there exists, as defenses of the ports of England and of France, a species of armored works which is recognized as the most complete system in existence and the most effective. These are known generally as monitor turrets. England has put them up at her seaports and France has done the same. This report tells us that is what we want; that our stone forts are of no use whatever; that the millions of treasure they have cost has been thrown away so far as their present usefulness is concerned.

We are asked to make an appropriation of half a million of dollars both for the purpose of paying expenses and to provide another board to take the facts which have been collected by the old board and report some years hence—1889—and then, we are told, we will go to work to do something.

Why, sir, what has been the policy of the intelligent nations of the earth in this respect? England has spent more money in the construction of ships for experiment that never went to sea than this Government has ever spent upon her entire Navy. What we want is to recognize the fact that the intelligence of the age has placed before us all the knowledge that we want.

Have we read this report or not, as a collective body or as individuals? Do we know what it contains? If we do we should not hesitate one hour, one moment, before we appropriate at least $10,000,000 to carry into effect the recommendations of that board. If we do not do it we do a wrong to this country. We fail to recognize the necessity. If there is any necessity for further discussing the question, if there is any necessity for another board, it is for the purpose of gaining information. But they can not gain any information that is not already presented in the report before us.

Are we to throw this into the fire? Are we to say these men knew nothing? Read the list of them. There were two eminent civilians. Talk of new blood; there was new blood there. Two of the most eminent civilians were selected. There are the facts; and I give it as of my own personal knowledge that this report is even with the age. It tells the story up till to-day; and we have no reason to hesitate for one hour to go foward and carry out the recommendations of that board and make the necessary appropriations.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. If my friend will allow me to interrupt him I call his attention to the fact that the bill on page 3 authorizes the board not merely to investigate but also to purchase.

Mr. VIELE. But it gives no money wherewith to purchase. What do you want them to purchase? A stick of candy? We want to purchase guns.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I propose to insert an amount to enable them to purchase guns.

Mr. VIELE. I hope that will be inserted. But I am talking now about what is not inserted. I am talking for the insertion.

Mr. HISCOCK. I suppose my colleague will be willing to compromise and give the committee this legislation if they will give $3,000,000?

Mr. VIELE. No doubt.

Mr. RANDALL. But he wants $10,000,000.

Mr. VIELE. What I want to impress on the committee is this, that all the facts are before us on which to act; that it is not necessary to delay another year or two years in this matter. We have got all the information we want and can go right on. And it will be a glad day for this country when it recognizes that Congress has understood the situation and made the appropriation. The men and women of this country will go to bed with calmer hearts and more contented souls when they know the property of this country is not at the mercy of any freebooter that may come along. I assure you we must be always ready for these great questions that present themselves. Of the antagonisms of peace have always come the horrors of war, and it is against those antagonisms of peace that we must protect ourselves.

It is a well recognized fact that England and Germany and France are expending enormous sums of money for the purpose of increasing their trade with foreign countries. They are absolutely appropriating countries all over the world and constituting colonies of their own where they can send their surplus products. And it is this strife among the industries of the world that is to bring about the next war we are to have, and we know not how soon it may come.

We have the materials in this country to construct these turreted monitors. They have the plans in the War Department. They can construct them to-day as readily as they could a chicken-coop from the plans made for it. There is no occasion for the delay. It is absolutely necessary we should recognize the facts before us and act upon them.

Mr. RANDALL addressed the committee. [See Appendix.]

The CHAIRMAN. If no further general debate is desired, the Clerk will proceed to read the bill by paragraphs.

Mr. RANDALL. I have agreed to yield five minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER].

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Chairman, I desire to reply briefly to the remarks made by the gentleman from Maine [Mr. DINGLEY] in regard to the statement furnished by the Treasurer of the United States and printed in the RECORD of July 10 in connection with remarks submitted by me on the day previous. That statement of the Treasurer of the United States, which is published on page 6699 of the RECORD, shows that the expenditures of the Government for ordinary purposes, for pensions, and for interest for the year ending June 30, 1885, were $260,226,935, and for the year ending June 30, 1886, $243,480,941, the net decrease being $16,745,993, which net decrease would have been $25,346,179, but for an expenditure of $8,600,186 for pensions. The Treasurer on the next page itemizes the expenditures for ordinary purposes, this itemized statement disclosing the fact that the decrease in the War Department was $8,344,869. This is in part accounted for by the table presented by the gentleman from Maine, showing that there was a decrease of $6,868,000 in the expenditure for the improvement of rivers and harbors, this reduction resulting from the fact that Congress failed to make any appropriation for that service.

In the diplomatic service this report of the Treasurer shows a decrease of $4,107,288. In connection with this it should be stated that there was paid during the year 1885 for judgments of the Court of Alabama Claims $3,301,000, and for awards of the French and American Claims Commission $594,000.

[Here the hammer fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania has still seven minutes remaining.

Mr. RANDALL. Then I yield to the gentleman from Illinois the remainder of my time.

Mr. SPRINGER. I concede that the items to which I have referred—the river and harbor appropriations, the judgments of the Court of Alabama Claims, and the awards of the French and American Claims Commission—are not properly chargeable to expenditures of the year 1885; but if I had opportunity to analyze the ordinary expenses for 1886 as the ordinary expenses for 1885 are here analyzed, I presume the analysis would show that in all other respects there had been an equal amount of extraordinary or accidental expenses for that particular year. So that, giving the most liberal construction on account of the matters to which I have referred, I maintain that these two tables will show that, leaving out the item of pensions and the other items mentioned, there has been a net reduction upon the ordinary expenditures of the Government of $14,583,000 during the year 1886 as compared with the year 1885. Now, I will not claim that this reduction is entirely attributable to the fact that there was a Democratic administration; but I do claim that most of these items of reduction are directly traceable to that fact. I want to call attention to two of these items.

The honorable gentleman from New York [Mr. HISCOCK] took occasion a few days ago to refer to the fact that there was a great increase during last year for expenses of United States courts.

This table shows when we get at the expenses of the United States courts there was a decrease in the year 1886 as compared with the year of 1885.

Mr. DINGLEY. That was because a deficiency was carried over.

Mr. SPRINGER. I beg the gentleman's pardon. I will show what it was. The decrease was first in the fees of supervisors of elections—$255,000. That was what the gentleman's party expended, through partisan agents, to help in electing their candidate for President in 1884.

Mr. HISCOCK. All right.

Mr. SPRINGER. You say it is all right. If we were to spend that much in the Congressional elections this fall you would say it would be all wrong. I would say it was all wrong, too. It will be seen that $255,000 was expended in the election of 1884 through partisan agents of the Republican party to aid them in electing their President. The amount of that expense was cut off during the year 1886.

There was a decrease in the expenses of the United States courts and in miscellaneous items to the extent of $381,000. These items went to the ordinary expenses of the courts.

There are a number of items to which I would like to call attention if opportunity was afforded to show that the present administration is economizing in the ordinary expenses of the Government. I would cite the discharge of a large number of useless officials in the Internal Revenue Department. I might cite also a great reduction in supplies for the Indian service. The reduction in other like items discloses the palpable fact that in carrying on the Government the present administration has been reducing expenses. That reduction is creditable to the Democratic administration, because it was predicted by gentlemen on the other side of the House in the last Presidential election, that the election of a Democratic President would result in a large increase of the expenditures of the Government, that it would pay a large amount of rebel claims, that it would pay off the rebel debt, that it would in effect result in the general bankruptcy of the Government. None of these predictions have turned out to be true. On the contrary, they have not only turned out to be untrue, but the present administration of the Government has been carrying it on with great efficiency, while at the same time the expenses of the Government have been reduced to an economical basis and are much lower than they have been under preceding Republican administrations. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time for debate has expired, and the Clerk will now read the bill by paragraphs for amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the following sums be, and the same are hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for fortifications and other works of defense, and for the armament thereof, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887, and for other purposes, namely:

For the protection, preservation, and repair of fortifications and other works of defense for which there may be no special appropriation available, $100,000, the same to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War.

Mr. REED, of Maine. I should like to have some explanation as to the necessity for this appropriation.

Mr. FORNEY. It is the same amount that was appropriated last year, and it is supposed to be sufficient for the protection and preservation of the fortifications we have, between seventy and eighty.

Mr. REED, of Maine. If these fortifications are good for nothing, what is the necessity for repairing them?

Mr. FORNEY. That is what the other side say.

Mr. REED, of Maine. What is the object of repairing them?

Mr. FORNEY. Some one should be there to take care of the public property.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will proceed with the reading of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 2. For the armament of sea coast fortifications, including the procurement of steel forgings for the manufacture of heavy guns; for guns, carriages, projectiles, fuses, powder, and implements, their trial and proof, and all necessary expenses incident thereto, $500,000, to be available until expended.

Mr. VIELE. I move to strike out "$500,000" and insert "$3,000,000."

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. During the course of my remarks I indicated a purpose to move to increase the amount to $3,500,000, and I offer that amendment now. I only desire to say that while we believe it is a ridiculous sum, nevertheless it is a move in the right direction, and the provision for its expenditure is one which ought to commend it to the fair consideration of the House.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment to the amendment.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 47, noes 73.

So the amendment to the amendment was rejected.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. I move to strike out the last word.

In the interest of historic accuracy I want to say a word or two upon a subject which, although not exactly germane to the bill, is, I think, as much in order as the argument of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BUTTERWORTH], to which I wish simply to reply for a moment.

The gentleman from Ohio said that when the war was flagrant in the land the national banks sprang to the defense of the country. I want now to call his attention to a table which I hold in my hand, and which gives the circulation of the national banks from their first organization down to the present time.

The national-bank act was passed on the 23d of February, 1863, and not one dollar of national-bank circulation was issued during that year. During 1864 there were issued only thirty-one and a quarter millions of this kind of paper, and during the next year, 1865, which is the year the war closed, there were only one hundred and forty-six millions of national-bank notes outstanding, one hundred and fifteen millions of it being issued during that year.

Now, Mr. Chairman, how the national banks could have sprung to the defense of the Government under the circumstances I am stating I can not perceive. They were not authorized until February, 1863, and did not commence issuing notes until 1864, and then only in small quantities. I am only speaking now in the interest of historical accuracy. The springing they did was after the soldiers had sprung into line and saved the Government and showed that the Government bonds and Government notes were good fat investments.

They had been made good by the blood and sufferings of the soldiers of the country, and then the national banks sprang into the financial breach, but not before, and then only to plunder the people. From that hour to this they have speculated upon public and private misfortune, and their attitude has been one of hostility toward the people. They have occupied a hostile attitude toward the Treasury and the whole country when Congress has dared to thwart their plans.

So far as the personal remarks of the gentleman are concerned I wish only to say that he was undoubtedly provoked to say what he did by a remark that I made. I never squeal. [Laughter.]

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I may have seemed a little hasty in the reply to my friend from Iowa; but certainly there was no intention of offense. There were no barbs upon the shaft I sent, and such sallies never find their place in the RECORD.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. Put them right in.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Oh, no; it was not intended. Sometimes we say things in the heat of debate—many times indeed—which are not always well-considered.

But, touching this matter to which my friend from Iowa referred, I still insist, and the truth of history will affirm the fact, that I am correct in saying the national-bank system came to the rescue of the Government and strengthened it by taking its bonds, currency, &c., in its hour of need, but I do not care to discuss that question now, but will leave it to another occasion, when I may have something to say upon the subject at a time when it is more fitting to the bill under consideration than it is to the present one. Then I may pay my respects to the question.

Now I want to ask my friend from New York what is the point of order against this section?

Mr. VIELE. The point of order is withdrawn.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

Mr. McADOO. Mr. Chairman, I renew the pro forma amendment for the purpose of saying a word or two, and that not by way of any special criticism on the bill. Representing as I do one of the large cities that would be subjected to naval invasion, and thus aware of the danger, I would be unfaithful to my trust if on this floor I did not call the attention of the House to the fact that this is not a local question. I have often observed that when matters relating to the Navy or to our system of seacoast fortifications are under discussion here some gentlemen seem to suppose it is an Eastern or local question.

There are $5,000,000,000 worth of property in round numbers from San Francisco to Portland, Me., around our coast, as shown by careful estimates based on assessed valuations, which to-day is endangered by any foreign naval invasion. That property is the common wealth of the Union. Its destruction by a foreign invasion does not fall solely as a loss on any locality, but it comes from the pockets of all of the people of the United States, and not, as some seem to suppose, from New York, Brooklyn, Jersey City, San Francisco, Charleston, New Orleans, or Portland, Me., but from the common produce, wealth, industry, and common labor of the whole people of the entire United States. Besiege New York, and the wheat-growers of Minnesota and the cattle-raisers of Texas, whose products come to and go in part from that great port, will pay the greater part of the damage.

I do not desire now to criticise this bill, although it is not to me entirely satisfactory. It is in wise, cautious, and conservative hands; but I do hope that when the Congress of the United States, representing the various States and sections of this great country, shall come to deal with the Navy and the fortifications of this Union, it will do it in the proper spirit of defending the interests of all the people and all our territory and not specially the people along the coast. Such narrowmindedness is unbecoming and unjust. As a very high and patriotic officer said to me the other day, the coast ports are the mouth and the interior the stomach. As well might the human anatomy begin unnatural contention as this great question become sectional.

I agree with all that has been so well and eloquently and frequently said on this floor, that the United States was able to defend itself successfully against any nation on the face of the earth. So long as we are a united people—which I thank Heaven we are, and put the accent on "united"—there never will be an invasion of our soil, and no foreign nation, however powerful and great and warlike, that has trouble with the United States will ever undertake to land an army on our shores. The armies of Napoleon and Wellington combined could not invade the United States with its sixty million free people and its enormous territory and great wealth. But our seacoast cities and harbors are in peril.

A navy and a proper fortification of our coast is not in the line of monarchical government. A standing army affects our own people, but the navy and seacoast defenses only menace foreign powers. I am opposed to paternal government and for the man against the State just as much as the upright defender of the Constitution from Texas [Mr. REAGAN] or the able gentleman (Judge HOLMAN) from Indiana. But a government ceases to be a government when at its border lines it is not, as against foreign interests and foreign arms, protective, defensive, and paternal in the broadest and most sacred sense in guarding the lives, liberties, rights, and properties of its citizens and in upholding its own dignity and honor.

That is the very essence of government—to protect its citizens; and as against foreign nations or foreign interests I would provide the strongest defenses that can be produced by the energy and skill of man. Full freedom within, but unyielding, determined, undying, and eternal protection and defense against foreign interference in whatever form it may come. I do not advocate wild and extravagant navies and forts looking to foreign intermeddling and conquest, but sufficient to assert our rights and defend our coasts. Let the robber governments of Europe maintain tremendous military establishments. They need them; free and contented people do not.

The importance of this question of the defense of our coast can not be exaggerated. Its only defense to-day is in the shallowness of the waters of our harbors and in the growing draught of the great war-ships that are being constructed in the Old World. In my opinion it is not a matter of speculation as to what kind of defense we can make. It is demonstrated, as the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] says, that the old fort is obsolete, and that the old smooth-bore muzzle-loading gun is likewise obsolete. But it is also demonstrated that turreted forts and vessels and rifled cannon show the high-water mark in the rise and progress of naval skill and modern science, and we are bound to take a step in advance, that we may put ourselves in a position of defense and prevent war by not inviting attack. I hope on another occasion soon approaching to present some facts and tables on this important question.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. CUTCHEON. I wish to say a word only as to the fortifications on the Northern frontier. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] made light of the idea that any danger could by any possibility threaten us from that direction. In accordance with the act of March 3, 1885, the President of the United States appointed the commission already spoken of, which consisted of the Secretary of War, the Chief of Ordnance, the Chief of Engineers, Lieutenant-Colonel Abbot, of the Engineers; Capt. Charles S. Smith, of the Ordnance Corps; Commander Sampson, and Commander Goodrich, of the United States Navy; and from civil life Joseph Morgan, jr., of Pennsylvania, and Erastus Corning, of New York. Their report is before us. They have made their report in regard to the objects of fortifications, as they say, in the order of urgency. They place first in the order of urgency the harbor of New York; secondly, San Francisco; thirdly, Boston; and, fourthly, the lake ports; and they recommend an appropriation for the fortifications of the lakes of $4,131,000. And this is the language in which the commission urges the appropriations in the conclusion of its report:

> After mature consideration, and with all the information before it, the board is of the opinion and recommends that the above-named amounts should be appropriated without delay for the purposes mentioned, and it further states that nothing less will suffice even for a beginning.

This is signed by W. C. Endicott and the other members of the board.

Now, if I am foolish, Mr. Chairman, I am foolish in good company.

Mr. RANDALL. I did not say you were foolish.

Mr. CUTCHEON. I know you did not. That is merely an inference. If this is an unreasonable fear that we may ever be attacked or approached from the northern frontier, I share it with the Secretary of War, with the Chief of Ordnance, with the Chief of Engineers, and with these other distinguished gentlemen. And they recommend an immediate expenditure of more than $4,000,000 for the protection of that frontier.

It may be that we have taken securities from Great Britain, and that we hold a mortgage on Canada which we can foreclose any morning before breakfast. But while we are foreclosing our mortgage they can do well-nigh infinite mischief to our ports on the lakes. And although in the fullness of time Canada may fall like a ripened pear into our hands, yet while it is ripening, and until it falls, these frontier States—Wisconsin, Illinois, Michigan, Ohio, Pennsylvania, and New York—may suffer the greatest damage.

Mr. RANDALL. Does the gentleman recollect the treaty stipulation between Great Britain and the United States as to the armament on the lakes?

Mr. CUTCHEON. By the treaty of 1817 it was provided that each power might maintain on each of the lakes one revenue-cutter of 100 tons burden, carrying one gun and no more.

Now, while Great Britain can muster a squadron of any dimensions in the St. Lawrence and have her gunboats ready to cross the frontier through the canals which are under her control, we can not muster one single gunboat, nor have we one single canal through which we can pass a gunboat into the lakes.

[Here the hammer fell.]

The pro forma amendment was withdrawn.

Mr. STONE, of Kentucky. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will first report the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. VIELE].

The Clerk read as follows:

> Insert after the word "thereto," in line 5, section 2, "$3,000,000," instead of "$500,000."

Mr. BURROWS. Has the second section been read?

The CHAIRMAN. That paragraph has been read, and is subject to amendment.

Mr. BURROWS. I understood both sections were to be read. I desire to make a point of order against the section.

Mr. HISCOCK. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HISCOCK. I inquire whether the Clerk is not reading the second section by paragraphs, and whether as each paragraph is read a point of order or an amendment can not be made to it?

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. BLOUNT). That is the opinion of the present occupant of the chair.

Mr. BURROWS. I understood the Chair to say the Clerk would read the bill by sections.

Mr. RANDALL. The point of order was made by the gentleman from New York [Mr. VIELE] and was withdrawn, and there have been amendments adopted since.

The CHAIRMAN. There is no point of order pending on this paragraph. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. STONE].

Mr. RANDALL. I am unwilling to have this section considered except as a whole.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has ruled on that question.

Mr. HISCOCK. I desire to make the point of order that it has been ruled in this House always, that when a section contains a number of paragraphs each paragraph as it is read is subject to amendments and points of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has so ruled and will enforce the ruling unless the committee reverses it.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. The point of order was made against the entire section and after that discussion was had. Now, when the point is made upon the entire section, and admendment and debate intervene, is it competent to make a point of order against the paragraph after that?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks that the several paragraphs or subdivisions of the section are considered separately, and are subject to points of order as they are reached. The amendment of the gentleman from Kentucky will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend section 2 by inserting after the word "proof," in line 4, the words "and the testing of improvements of the same."

Mr. FORNEY. There is no particular objection to that.

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is on the amendment of the gentleman from New York [Mr. VIELE].

The question was taken; and there were—ayes 38, noes 72.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

That all money appropriated by this section shall be expended under the direction and supervision of a board composed of five persons, one of whom shall be an officer of the Army and one an officer of the Navy; both of said officers shall be designated by the President; three members of said board shall be appointed from civil life; the President shall appoint one, the President of the Senate one, and the Speaker of the House of Representatives shall appoint one; the five persons so designated and appointed shall constitute said board; members of Congress shall be ineligible to serve on the board. The necessary and proper expenses of said board and the compensation of the three civilians, at $10 per day while so employed in the discharge of said duty, shall be paid from the sum herein appropriated.

Mr. BUCK. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order on that paragraph that it changes existing law. If the bill should be passed with only the first paragraphs which we have already considered, the expenditure of the money appropriated would fall within the jurisdiction and control of the War Department. But by adding the paragraph upon which I now make the point of order we take the control of the expenditure of this money from the War Department, where the existing law puts it, and place it in the hands of a board which is to be appointed under the provisions of this paragraph and the paragraphs following.

It is unnecessary for me to read the statute to show that this authority belongs to the War Department. It grows out of the incidental powers of the Department under the law, and also, I believe, out of an express provision in the statutes (section 1164) that the Ordnance Bureau shall make the purchases and contracts for munitions of war. The paragraph is also new legislation.

Mr. RANDALL. I hope the gentleman will not insist upon that point of order. If he does, he will only make necessary an effort to reduce the amount very considerably.

Mr. REED, of Maine. The amount now in the bill?

Mr. RANDALL. Yes. We are not willing that this money shall be expended under the control of the department.

Mr. BUCK. It is perhaps not germane to this question to allude to the paragraphs that follow, but there is another paragraph on the next page which takes a very radical step forward in the line of enlarging the powers given to boards. It authorizes this proposed board not only to investigate, but to make purchases of guns and to establish a plant for the manufacture of guns.

Mr. RANDALL. To the extent of this appropriation.

Mr. BUCK. To the extent of this appropriation.

Mr. RANDALL. Well, that is the direction in which we want to go. We want fresh intelligence, fresh energy, fresh blood.

Mr. BUCK. I want no intelligence any more fresh than that which is furnished by what is called the "Randall board," which has made a report to this Congress on all the questions that are covered by this paragraph and the following paragraphs with the exception of the purchase of the guns and war materials. We already have all the information on these subjects necessary for intelligent action.

Mr. RANDALL. We want somebody to direct in that line. The present Ordnance Bureau does not direct in that line.

Mr. BUCK. Permit me to say that the fittest persons to do that are William C. Endicott, the Secretary of War, and General Benét, Chief of Ordnance.

Mr. RANDALL. I have nothing to say about Secretary Endicott, but he is not a manufacturer of guns.

Mr. BUCK. They are both entirely qualified to control the expenditure of this money wisely.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I do not know how this paragraph stands with reference to the statute, but if the amount to be appropriated is to be insignificantly small, and that seems to be the temper of the House, I apprehend that it is not very important whether we have a board or whether we have not, as there will be nothing for them to expend.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. RANDALL. That takes all out of the first section of the bill after the paragraph stating the amount appropriated?

The CHAIRMAN. It does.

Mr. RANDALL. Now, Mr. Chairman, can I move to amend the amount in the first paragraph of this section?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks that is not in order, as that paragraph has been passed.

Mr. RANDALL. Then I will move to recommit the bill, if I have an opportunity, in the House.

Mr. HISCOCK. Do I understand that the whole section is ruled out?

Mr. RANDALL. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair did not so rule, because the succeeding paragraphs of the section had not been read; but if there is no objection to the Chair ruling upon those paragraphs before they are read, with the view of saving time, they will be considered as read and ruled out.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 3. That the sum of $50,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, of the unexpended balance of $400,000 appropriated by the act of March 3, 1883, for armament of fortifications, is hereby reappropriated and made available for the construction and payment of the guns authorized by said act, and now being constructed by the South Boston Iron Works, under contracts dated September 24, 1883, and June 30, 1884; and the extension of said contracts is authorized accordingly.

Mr. FORNEY. I move that the committee rise and report the bill as amended to the House.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. BLOUNT reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 9798) making appropriations for fortifications and other works of defense, and for the armament thereof, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887, and for other purposes, had directed him to report the same back with an amendment and to recommend its passage.

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HERBERT. I ask unanimous consent that the naval appropriation bill, which has been returned from the Senate with amendments, be referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs and ordered to be printed.

The SPEAKER. The bill has already been ordered to be printed. If there be no objection, it will be referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs. The Chair hears no objection, and it is so ordered.

FORTIFICATIONS APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. RANDALL. I ask unanimous consent that this afternoon's session be extended after 5 o'clock until we can dispose of this bill.

Mr. PRICE. I object.

Mr. HISCOCK. Before we decide to extend the session, I desire to inquire of the gentleman from Pennsylvania whether it is the intention to withdraw this bill or to press it to passage.

Mr. RANDALL. I have not charge of the bill; but I will say it is the intention to try to change it.

Mr. HISCOCK. In that case, the final disposition of the bill might take longer than we would be willing to stay this afternoon.

Mr. RANDALL. Prior to the gentleman from Alabama demanding the previous question, I desire to move to amend the second section by striking out "$500,000" and inserting "$100,000," which is the amount given at the first session of the Forty-seventh Congress. I want to test the sense of the House on that proposition.

Mr. REED, of Maine. You do not propose to ask a vote of want of confidence in another Department of the Government without giving some reason for it?

Mr. HISCOCK. I make the point of order that amendment should be considered in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. REED, of Maine. It ought to be considered in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. It is a reduction; it does not propose to make an additional appropriation.

Mr. SPRINGER. And the paragraph has already received its first consideration in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. REED, of Maine. I think we ought to have discussion before voting to condemn the War Department.

Mr. RANDALL We do not know that the War Department is opposed to our suggestion. No communication has been received from that source.

Mr. REED, of Maine. This seems to me a proposition to vote a want of confidence in the constituted authorities. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

Mr. HISCOCK. Mr. Speaker, has consent been given to extend this afternoon's session?

The SPEAKER. Objection was made by the gentleman from Wisconsin.

The question being taken on ordering the previous question, there were—ayes 76, noes 35.

Mr. HISCOCK. I make the point that no quorum has voted.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. HISCOCK and Mr. FORNEY were appointed.

The House proceeded to divide again; but before the tellers had reported,

The SPEAKER said: The hour of 5 o'clock having arrived, the House, in accordance with its previous order, takes a recess until 8 o'clock, the session of this evening to be devoted exclusively to the consideration of reports from the Committee on Printing.

EVENING SESSION.

The recess having expired, the House reassembled at 8 o'clock p. m.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. The session of this evening is to be devoted, by order of the House, exclusively to the consideration of bills and resolutions authorizing public printing, reported from the Committee on Printing.

Mr. BARKSDALE. I move that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union be discharged from the further consideration of bills and joint resolutions embraced in the order for this evening's session, so that they may be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

There being no objection, it was ordered accordingly.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the title of the first bill on the Calendar under this order.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 598) to provide for the distribution of the statutes of the United States and the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD to designated incorporated bodies and associations within the several States and Territories.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state that under the order of the House these different measures are not necessarily to be taken up in the order in which they stand on the Calendar, but the committee may designate such as they desire to have considered.

Mr. BARKSDALE. Then I ask that the bill just read by title be passed over for the present.

NAVIGATION AND CUSTOMS COLLECTION LAWS.

Mr. FARQUHAR. I call up the concurrent resolution (report 612) for printing 5,000 copies of the navigation and customs collection laws.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That there be printed 5,000 copies of the navigation and customs collection laws relating to vessels, including the laws relating to merchant seamen, and the regulation of steam-vessels, compiled by the Bureau of Navigation in the Treasury Department; of which 1,000 copies shall be for the use of the Senate, 2,000 copies for the use of the House of Representatives, and 2,000 copies for the use of the Bureau of Navigation.

The resolution was adopted.

Mr. FARQUHAR moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

REPORT OF GREELY EXPEDITION.

Mr. BARKSDALE. I ask that concurrent resolution (Report No. 834) to print the report of the Greely expedition to Lady Franklin Bay be taken from the Calendar and laid on the table, for the reason that a resolution covering the same subject-matter has already been disposed of.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, that order will be made.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

REPORT OF INTERNATIONAL MONETARY CONFERENCES.

Mr. FARQUHAR. I ask to call up House joint resolution No. 87, providing for the printing and distribution of documents of the monetary conferences of 1878 and 1881.

The joint resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That there be printed and bound in cloth —— thousand copies each of the Reports of the International Monetary Conferences of 1878 and 1881; —— thousand copies of each for the use of the House of Representatives, and —— thousand copies of each for the use of the Senate; and that the Public Printer hold the remaining —— thousand copies of each for sale, at 10 per cent. advance on cost-price, to any person applying for the same, a notice stating the price of each report to be inserted in the daily edition of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD until the edition be disposed of.

The committee recommend the following amendments:

In line 3 insert before the word "thousand" the word "five;" so that it will read "five thousand copies."

Also in line 6 insert "three," so as to read "three thousand copies."

In line 7 strike out the word "thousand" and insert "fifteen hundred."

In line 9 strike out the word "thousand" and insert "five hundred."

Strike out all in line 11 after the word "same" down to the end of the resolution.

The amendments were agreed to.

The joint resolution as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. FARQUHAR moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

REPORT GOVERNMENT DIRECTORS UNION PACIFIC RAILROAD.

Mr. FARQUHAR. I now call up Miscellaneous Document 42, of March 2, a concurrent resolution relating to the reports of the Government directors of the Union Pacific Railroad.

The concurrent resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That in addition to the usual number there be printed of the letter of the President of the 4th instant, communicating to the Senate copies of the reports of the Government directors of the Union Pacific Railroad Company, together with said reports, 2,000 copies; 1,000 for the use of the Senate and 2,000 for the use of the House of Representatives.

The concurrent resolution was agreed to.

Mr. FARQUHAR moved to reconsider the vote by which the concurrent resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ASTRONOMICAL AND METEOROLOGICAL OBSERVATIONS.

Mr. FARQUHAR. I now call up the resolution of March 2, providing for printing the annual volumes of the astronomical and meteorological observations of the Naval Observatory for 1883, 1884, and 1885.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate of the United States (the House of Representatives concurring), That the annual volumes of the astronomical and meteorological observations of the Naval Observatory for 1883, 1884, and 1885 be printed, and that 1,800 additional copies of each report be printed; of which 300 copies shall be for the use of the Senate, 700 copies for the use of the House of Representatives, and 800 copies for the use of the Navy Dpartment.

Mr. DINGLEY. I would like to ask a question in reference to this resolution. I observe that the word "printing" is used in the report. I desire to ask a member of the committee if this is understood to include binding also?

Mr. FARQUHAR. It does include the binding. If only the usual number of copies was printed, which is 1,900, it would not include binding; but in all other cases where additional copies are ordered these books are bound.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. FARQUHAR moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

REPORTS SMITHSONIAN INSTITUTION.

Mr. BARKSDALE. I call up the resolution providing for printing the last annual report of the Smithsonian Institution.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate of the United States (the House of Representatives concurring), That there be printed of the last annual reports of the Smithsonian Institution and of the National Museum, in two octavo volumes, 16,000 extra copies of each; of which 3,000 copies shall be for the use of the Senate, 6,000 copies for the use of the House of Representatives, and 7,000 copies for the use of the Smithsonian Institution.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. BARKSDALE moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was agreed to; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

DISTRIBUTION OF CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

Mr. BARKSDALE. I call up the joint resolution (H. Res. 129) directing the Public Printer to forward the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD to our legations abroad.

The joint resolution is as follows:

Resolved, &c., That the Public Printer be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to forward, free of charge, through the Department of State, one copy of the daily CONGRESSIONAL RECORD to each of our legations abroad, commencing at the beginning of the present session.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. BARKSDALE moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

REPORTS ON CATTLE-BREEDING AND DAIRY-FARMING.

Mr. BARKSDALE. I now call up the concurrent resolution to authorize the printing of the reports of the United States consuls on cattle-breeding and dairy-farming, my object being to move to lay it on the table, as the matter has been already disposed of.

There being no objection, the resolution was laid on the table.

AWARDS UNDER TREATIES WITH FRANCE AND SPAIN.

Mr. FARQUHAR. I call up the concurrent resolution of the Senate provided for printing 5,000 additional copies of the statement relative to the awards under treaties with France and Spain.

I will state, Mr. Speaker, that there are two dates to this resolution as it appears on the Calendar. There is one of date of March 23, and the last resolution that was passed by the Senate was on the 5th of April. The latter resolution is the one the committee desires to pass to-night.

The concurrent resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That 5,000 additional copies of the revised list of papers touching unpaid claims on account of French spoliations prior to July 31, 1801, transmitted by the President of the United States on the 17th instant, be printed; of which 1,000 copies shall be for the use of the Senate, 2,000 copies for the use of the House, and 2,000 for distribution by the Department of State.

The concurrent resolution was agreed to.

Mr. FARQUHAR moved to reconsider the vote by which the concurrent resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. DOCKERY in the chair). Without objection the concurrent resolution of March 23 will be recommitted to the committee.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

BULLETINS OF THE BUREAU OF ETHNOLOGY.

Mr. REID, of North Carolina. I ask now to call up the joint resolution (H. Res. 120) to print the annual bulletins of the Bureau of Ethnology.

The joint resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, &c., That there be printed at the Government Printing Office 10,000 copies of any matter furnished by the Bureau of Ethnology relating to researches and discoveries connected with the study of the North American Indians, the same to be issued in parts, and the whole to form an annual volume of bulletins; 4,000 copies of which shall be for the use of the House of Representatives, 1,500 copies for the use of the Senate, and 4,500 copies for the use of the Bureau of Ethnology.

Mr. REID, of North Carolina. I ask for the reading of the report.

The report (by Mr. REID, of North Carolina) is as follows:

The Committee on Printing, to whom was referred the joint resolution (H. Res. 120) to print the annual bulletins of the Bureau of Ethnology, have duly considered the same, and recommend its adoption.

This printing will be in addition to the 15,000 copies of the annual report of the Bureau of Ethnology, and will be different in matter.

It will be a report, in detail, of the operations and researches of the bureau, to be published in parts as bulletins, as the said operations and researches transpire. There will be from three to six parts per annum, costing about $500 for each edition, or from $2,500 to $3,000 per annum, the whole to form an annual volume of bulletins.

Mr. RANDALL. Mr. Speaker, I would like to inquire of the gentleman from North Carolina, who is on the Printing Committee, what year this report is for, and how far the printing already ordered in connection with ethnology has been advanced? In other words, whether we now need to authorize this printing in advance of the year not yet completed?

Mr. REID, of North Carolina. In response to the gentleman from Pennsylvania I will say that as I understand it this is for the current year. It has been issued in pamphlets, and the cost as I have estimated it, and as the estimate was furnished by the Chief of the Bureau of Ethnology, Major Powell, is about $2,500 to $3,000 a year. As he collects the material he proposes to issue it as a bulletin. We went to the office and made an estimate. He exhibited to the Committee on Printing specimens of one of the bulletins and the way he proposes to issue it from month to month. It will cost from $2,500 to $3,000 per annum.

Mr. RANDALL. For which year?

Mr. REID, of North Carolina. For the present current year.

Mr. RANDALL. How far back has the ethnological report been printed?

Mr. REID, of North Carolina. I do not know.

Mr. RANDALL. If I recollect aright not later than 1884.

Mr. DUNHAM. Not later than 1883.

Mr. RANDALL. I do not think we ought to authorize the printing of reports for 1885 until we know how far advanced and what is the result of the printing of the report for 1883.

This is one of the abuses, as I think, in connection with the scientific bureaus of the Government. It will be remembered that in the sundry civil bill we have endeavored to restrict this matter. While we have given every dollar that is essential to the bureau, we ought to restrict the printing, which has come, as the commission showed, to be an abuse.

Mr. REID, of North Carolina. I will withdraw the consideration of the joint resolution for the present.

Mr. RANDALL. This is for data not yet collected. We are providing for the printing of matter that has not yet come from the hands of those people who are being sent to the field to gather it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from North Carolina withdraws the joint resolution.

Mr. DUNHAM. Can that be done without unanimous consent?

Mr. DINGLEY. Let me say that the report of the bureau for 1884 is now being printed.

Mr. RANDALL. And this is to authorize the printing for two or three years in advance.

Mr. DINGLEY. Not the annual report.

Mr. RANDALL. This is for prining bulletins which are the advanced copies of the matter contained in the reports. I hope the Committee on Printing will not suppose for a moment that I wish to interfere with their getting their business through.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair understands the gentleman from North Carolina proposes to withdraw the joint resolution?

Mr. REID, of North Carolina. Yes, sir.

Mr. DUNHAM. Is it the understanding that every bill objected to by any one member, although the rest of the House might wish it passed, is to be withdrawn?

Mr. RANDALL. The gentleman from North Carolina does not lay this aside on my objection, but on an objection which might attract the attention of the House and be confirmed by the House. Here is a proposition to print or authorize the printing of a report away in advance of the collection of the facts.

Mr. REID, of North Carolina. If the gentleman will allow me, I will say that I proposed to withdraw the joint resolution because I thought he would make the point of no quorum on it.

Mr. RANDALL. I will not do that.

Mr. REID, of North Carolina. Then I will not withdraw it. I do not wish to postpone the consideration of it; but I do not wish, by pressing it, to defeat the object for which we are assembled this night, as there are other measures to be considered to which I think there will be no objection.

I wish to make this statement: There will be from three to six parts of this bulletin issued each year. It will be in addition to the 15,000 copies of the annual report of the Bureau of Ethnology, and will be entirely different in matter. It is a report of the operations and researches of the bureau, and will be more in detail than the annual report. The bulletin will consist of the reports from the members connected with this department sent out in different parts of the country to collect ethnological matter, and will be issued as that is gathered.

Mr. RANDALL. I understand that. The joint commission in connection with the subject of the scientific bureaus reported a recommendation that the printing be abridged. I want to show the gentleman what has been the cost of printing these reports. There is work charged for 1881 in connection with the Bureau of Ethnology amounting to $9,955.14. For 1882 the work charged amounts to $55,137.12. For 1883 the work charged amounted to $9,123.27. In 1884 the work charged amounts to $41,152.66. In 1885 the work charged amounted to $4,110.44. The whole aggregated $119,478.63 charged but not yet completed. And yet we are asked to go on and make further charges and authorize further printing in this connection when the work is not yet completed for 1881, 1882, 1883, 1884, and 1885.

I do not think these facts could have been in the possession of the Committee on Printing, or that the recommendation of the commission appointed to examine into the expenditures of this department could have been fully examined. They recommend not to proceed further with the printing until there is a completion of the prior work.

Now, what are these bulletins? They are scraps that are subsequently to make part of the report. Now it is asked that these scraps shall be printed as they come in. If they are printed as scraps they ought not to be reprinted in the regular report, and if they are printed in the regular report they ought not to be printed as scraps. I think that they would be of more service to science if they were brought together, and not printed separately in this disjointed way.

Mr. REID, of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I have just this to say: This report was made on March 25, 1886, when the joint commission referred to by the gentleman from Pennsylvania had not yet made their report, and the Committee on Printing was in possession of none of the facts reported by that commission as the result of their inquiries concerning the printing done for the Geological and Ethnological Bureaus. I will state, however, that this printing is in addition to the regular annual bulletin issued by the bureau. As the persons who are sent out by the bureau to make researches make their reports it is proposed to issue those reports in pamphlet form, thus giving the scientific world the benefit of those researches as they are made.

Mr. DUNHAM. Something like the Patent Office Gazette?

Mr. REID, of North Carolina. Something in that order. These are not intended to be published in the annual reports at all. We went over the matter very carefully with the chief of the bureau, and according to the best estimate we could make they will be printed in from three to six parts annually, and the cost will be from $2,500 to $3,000 per annum. That would be in addition to the regular annual bulletin printed by the bureau.

Mr. BARKSDALE. Mr. Speaker, I call the previous question on ordering the joint resolution to be engrossed and read the third time.

Mr. RANDALL. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. BARKSDALE. I withdraw the demand for the previous question. I did not know that the gentleman from Pennsylvania desired to speak further on this subject.

Mr. RANDALL. Mr. Speaker, I am glad to hear the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. REID] say that when this report was made the Committee on Printing were not in possession of the recommendations of the joint commission in relation to the scientific bureaus of the Government.

Mr. REID, of North Carolina. The gentleman from Pennsylvania

[Mr. RANDALL] will remember that it has been only a few weeks since that commission reported.

Mr. RANDALL. I know that, and I desire to say now that in anything I have said on this subject it has not been my wish, purpose, or intention to reflect in even the slightest degree upon the recommendations of the Committee on Printing. On the contrary, without making an invidious distinction, I might say that the present Committee on Printing of this House has been perhaps more assiduous in its efforts to save money than any of its predecessors. At the same time I think the committee ought to stop right here, and not ask us to appropriate for the printing of these bulletins in view of the state of facts I have presented.

Mr. REID, of North Carolina. I will add, Mr. Speaker, that if we send out these employés to make these researches and to report upon them, I think the scientific world ought to have the benefit of their reports. As I have already said, these bulletins are not to be published in the annual report, and therefore the only way in which the scientific world can get the benefit of them is by printing them in the form here proposed.

Mr. RANDALL. If they are printed in this form they ought not to be subsequently republished at great additional cost in the annual report. Can the gentleman inform us when these bulletins will reach the public?

Mr. REID, of North Carolina. Just as soon as the order is made to print them.

Mr. RANDALL. I think not.

Mr. REID, of North Carolina. That is my information from the bureau.

Mr. JAMES. Will the gentleman from North Carolina please tell us how much money the bill carries for this purpose?

Mr. REID, of North Carolina. Twenty-five hundred or three thousand dollars; the highest limit will be $3,000 per annum.

Mr. RANDALL. Each of these bulletins costs about $2,500 or $3,000, but when you aggregate the cost it comes to a great deal more.

Mr. REID, of North Carolina. No; that is the aggregate cost per annum. Mr. Speaker, I now call the previous question.

Mr. DINGLEY. Before the gentleman does that, I wish to make an inquiry with reference to the issuance of the reports of the Bureau of Ethnology. I think the report that is now being distributed is the one for 1882–'83; that is, three years behind the present date, and the inquiry I wish to make is (if the Committee on Printing have investigated the matter) why it is that these reports are so much delayed.

Mr. RANDALL. I can answer the question. It is because the men who are engaged in the field service for any particular year do not report in full in time to make their work a part of the report for that year. We are now two or three years in advance in the authorization of printing the reports of the Bureau of Ethnology.

Mr. REID, of North Carolina. The gentleman speaks of the annual bulletin.

Mr. RANDALL. No; the annual report. The report on the mineral resources of the United States is a different matter.

The previous question was ordered.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time—ayes 26, noes 13.

Mr. RANDALL. I do not call for a quorum, Mr. Speaker. I am satisfied with the statements that have been made.

The joint resolution, being engrossed, was read the third time and passed—ayes 22, noes 14.

Mr. REID, of North Carolina, moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

SPECIAL REPORTS OF GEOLOGICAL SURVEY.

Mr. REID, of North Carolina. I call up for consideration the joint resolution (H. R. 130) to distribute copies of special memoirs and reports of the United States Geological Survey.

The joint resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives, &c., That there shall be distributed from the number of special memoirs and reports of the United States Geological Survey now authorized by law one copy of every such publication to every public library which shall be designated to the Secretary of the Interior as follows: Two public libraries to be designated by each of the Senators from the States respectively, two public libraries by the Representative in Congress from every Congressional district, and two public libraries by the Delegate from every Territory; such public libraries to be additional to those to which the said publications are distributed under existing law.

Mr. REID, of North Carolina. Let the report be read.

The report (by Mr. REID, of North Carolina), was read, as follows:

The Committee on Printing, to which was referred joint resolution (H. Res. 130) to distribute copies of special memoirs and reports of the United States Geological Survey, have duly considered the same, and recommend its adoption.

By the act of March 3, 1879, 3,000 copies of the memoirs and reports of the United States Geological Survey were authorized to be printed for scientific exchanges and for sale to the public. Of this number the annual publications on hand that have accumulated since 1879, and which have not nor will be disposed of under the provisions of said act, are sufficient to make the distribution provided in the resolution. A complete set of said memoirs and reports comprise 10 bound volumes, 26 bulletins, and 2 atlases. No appropriation of money is required.

Mr. RANDALL. This is a book which was authorized to be sold to those who might apply for it. There have not been a sufficient number of applications. If I remember rightly, the printing of this book cost the Government $10 for each copy. This case simply shows the folly of this sort of printing.

Mr. FARQUHAR. We did not do it.

Mr. RANDALL. No, sir; it was done by somebody else, prior to this Congress. Now we have to give these volumes away. That is the whole story.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. REID, of North Carolina, moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

REPORT OF GREELY EXPEDITION.

Mr. BARKSDALE. I ask that Senate concurrent resolution (Report 1634) providing for printing the report of the International Polar Expedition to Lady Franklin Bay be taken up and laid on the table, the matter having been disposed of.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. DOCKERY). The Chair will state that as to measures coming from the Senate it is customary where action is not desired that they be recommitted rather than laid on the table. If there is no objection the order will be made in this case that the resolution be recommitted.

There being no objection, it was ordered accordingly.

EDUCATIONAL REPORT.

Mr. BARKSDALE. I ask that House concurrent resolution (Report No. 1635) providing for printing the report of the Commissioner of Education for 1884–'85 be taken up and laid on the table, as the subject has already been acted on.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If there be no objection, that order will be made.

There was no objection.

BINDING OF CENSUS SCHEDULES.

Mr. BARKSDALE. I ask that Senate concurrent resolution (Report No. 2206) be taken up for consideration.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to have bound, at the Government Printing Office, the schedules of the second, third, fourth, and tenth censuses of the United States.

Mr. BARKSDALE. I ask that the report of the Committee on Printing, to which is appended a letter from the Secretary of the Interior on this subject, be read.

The report by (Mr. BARKSDALE) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Printing, to whom was referred the following resolution, to wit—

"Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to have bound, at the Government Printing Office, the schedules of the second, third, fourth, and tenth censuses of the United States"— report that the same has been duly considered, in connection with the letter of the honorable Secretary of the Interior, printed in Senate Ex. Doc. No. 86 of the present session, which is hereto annexed and made a part of this report, and to recommend the passage of said resolution without amendment.

The estimated cost is $3,000.

Letter from the Secretary of the Interior relative to binding census schedules.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, Washington, March 2, 1886.

SIR: The schedules of the second, third, fourth, and tenth censuses of the United States have never been bound, and, from constant use, are fast being worn and defaced to such an extent that they must soon become valueless. The Public Printer estimates that to bind them uniformly with those of other censuses would cost about $2 per volume. The volumes would aggregate nearly fifteen hundred in number, thus making a total cost of about $3,000.

The matter is respectfully submitted for the consideration and action of Congress.

Very respectfully,

L. Q. C. LAMAR, Secretary.

The PRESIDENT OF THE SENATE pro tempore.

Mr. BARKSDALE. As I presume the report just read explains this resolution sufficiently, I ask a vote on the adoption of the resolution.

Mr. RANDALL. Does that complete the printing in connection with the last census?

Mr. BARKSDALE. It is my understanding that it does.

The resolution was adopted.

Mr. BARKSDALE moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

REPORT ON ALASKA.

Mr. FARQUHAR. I call up Senate concurrent resolution (Report No. 3060) to provide for printing the report on Alaska by L. M. Turner.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the report on Alaska, by L. M. Turner, be printed, with the necessary illustrations, and that 4,000 additional copies be printed; of which 1,000 copies shall be for the use of the Senate, 2,000 copies for the use of the House of Representatives, and 1,000 copies for distribution under the direction of the Chief Signal Officer of the United States Army.

Mr. RANDALL. I would like to know the cost of printing this report.

Mr. FARQUHAR. I ask that the report of the committee be read.

The report (by Mr. FARQUHAR) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Printing, to whom was referred the accompanying Senate concurrent resolution, providing for printing the report on Alaska, by L. M. Turner, respectfully report the same back to the House, and recommend its passage.

The value of the report recommended to be printed is evidenced by the following extract from an official communication from Professor Spencer F. Baird, of the Smithsonian Institution:

"By the courtesy of the Signal Office, the natural history labors of these gentlemen (L. M. Turner and E. W. Nelson) were prosecuted under the direction of the Smithsonian Institution.

* * * * * * * *

"The results obtained are of exceptional interest and value, as furnishing the only accurate and reliable information at our command upon the vegetable, animal, and mineral resources of the region, the productivity and character of the soil, and other points of great practical interest in connection with the future of that country. Detailed notes of habits and life characteristics were secured by these gentlemen, with collections of specimens in such great magnitude and variety as to have made the National Museum pre-eminent by their possession.

"The publication of these reports is therefore extremely desirable, as representing the only detailed and extended information at our command of a large region belonging to the United States."

The estimated cost of printing 4,000 copies and illustrations is $4,556.

Mr. DUNHAM. I desire to inquire of the gentleman from New York [Mr. FARQUHAR] why it is necessary to furnish the Signal Office with 1,000 copies of this report.

Mr. FARQUHAR. In cases of this kind there is a general distribution, independently of the copies given to the Senate and House, to all these scientific departments. Very often members and Senators, after exhausting their own reports, can only obtain copies by sending to one of the departments (as, for instance, in this case the Signal Office) for any overplus copies that may be at command. This is the plan, I understand, now adopted, in lieu of the old system of laying by volumes for sale. The surplus copies are put at the disposal of the bureau that is concerned in sending the report to Congress. I can not give any special reason why there should be a greater or less number given to these bureaus.

Mr. MILLS. They have to furnish copies of their reports to a great many correspondents all over the world, from whom they receive information of the same character. I have talked with some officers of the Government in reference to this matter, and in many cases these documents are distributed all over Europe, and documents of similar character are received in return.

Mr. RANDALL. Has the Signal Office been instrumental in getting up this report?

Mr. FARQUHAR. As the report of the committee states, it was through the courtesy of the Signal Office that these two officers, Mr. Turner and Mr. Nelson, gathered all the matter for these reports. It is stated at the Signal Office, and also by Professor Baird, that the reports of these two gentlemen are the most complete ever made on Alaska; and they were made with the sanction of the Signal Office. They were made in connection with the Signal Service.

Mr. RANDALL. Within the scope of the Signal Service duty.

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Speaker, in ordinary cases I would object to printing any report of this kind. In the case of Alaska it seems to me almost any valuable information to be had should be printed for circulation among the people. It has come to the knowledge of one of the committees of the House that the publications on this subject heretofore have not been reliable; that there were persons in Alaska and elsewhere in the United States interested in giving out incorrect information in regard to that Territory.

I have been informed by reliable authority that Alaska is destined to be one of the great empire States in the Union in the future, and when the means of securing accurate information is provided I am in favor of printing that information. I met a gentleman who spent the winter there, and he told me he never spent a milder winter in his life; that the climate was almost tropical in its character; that, while he said nothing of bananas growing there or big sunflowers blooming, he did say that the winter in its mildness was extremely enjoyable.

Mr. RANDALL. Does the gentleman from Illinois state that the climate in Alaska is tropical and that sunflowers and bananas ripen there?

Mr. SPRINGER. I do not know what the report of the committee states in regard to these productions, but I do hope the report contains reliable information concerning the Territory of Alaska, which has been so much misrepresented.

Mr. RANDALL. Does the gentleman say sunflowers bloom there?

Mr. SPRINGER. It was merely stated that while sunflowers did not bloom there and bananas did not ripen there, nevertheless the winter was a mild one.

Mr. RANDALL. I know that oats do not ripen there at all.

Mr. SPRINGER. I am willing to spend $4,000 for the publication of this report.

The fish industry of Alaska is exceedingly important. It is said that a gentleman wishing to cross the mouth of a river in Alaska was unable to do so in his canoe because the salmon were so thick.

Mr. BARKSDALE. After this most voluminous exposition of the report I have no doubt the House is willing to vote. I therefore demand the previous question.

The previous question was ordered, and under the operation thereof the concurrent resolution was adopted.

Mr. FARQUHAR moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

DIGEST OF INTERNATIONAL LAW.

Mr. FARQUHAR. I call up a joint resolution (S. R. 62) authorizing the publication of an edition of A Digest of International Law, edited by Francis Wharton.

The joint resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, &c., That there be printed the usual number of copies of A Digest of the International Law of the United States, taken from the Opinions of Presidents and Secretaries of State and of Attorneys-General, and from the Decisions of Federal Courts and of Joint International Commissions in which the United States was a party; and that there be printed, in addition to said usual number, 1,000 copies for the use of the State Department, 1,000 copies for the use of the Senate, and 2,000 copies for the use of the House of Representatives; said digest to be printed under the editorial supervision of Francis Wharton, and the editing to be paid for at a price to be fixed by the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations of the Senate and the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs of the House of Representatives, acting with the Joint Committee on Printing, not to exceed $10,000.

Mr. RANDALL. I ask for the reading of the report.

The report by Mr. FARQUHAR was read, as follows:

The Committee on Printing, to whom was referred the joint resolution (S. R. 62) authorizing the publication of an edition of A Digest of International Law, edited by Francis Wharton, have considered the same, and respectfully report:

As this digest can only be published under executive and Congressional sanction, the executive permission has been given through the Secretary of State, who strongly indorses the importance of the work and urges its publication. The Chief-Justice and the judges of the Supreme Court also concur in its usefulness and great public value. The editor, Mr. Wharton, has spent the greater portion of his life in the preparation of standard legal works.

The following extract from the report of the Senate Committee on Printing will give the House an intelligent view of the scope of the work:

"The digest is a compilation, arranged analytically, of all the decisions of the several departments of the Government on international law. It is drawn from the following sources:

"1. Manuscript records of Department of State. Of these 400 volumes have been examined, and the pertinent portions, only a small fraction of which has been published, extracted.

"2. Documents published by Congress. Down to 1830 these were in the main incorporated in the American State Papers (folio), published under the direction of Congress, but now out of print. Between 1830 and the present date there have been no such republications, though in 1861, 1862, 1863, and from 1871 to the present date, certain portions of the diplomatic correspondence of the Government have been published by the Department of State, but of the documents published by Congress, as such, with the exception of those of the last few years, no copies are now obtainable.

"3. Letters and papers of Washington, John Adams, Jefferson, Madison, Monroe, Marshall, Gallatin, Edward Livingston, J. Q. Adams, Clay, Webster, and Seward, published in their works, or obtained in manuscript from private sources. The unpublished letters of Washington, Jefferson, Madison, and Monroe, on file in the Department of State, have been largely drawn on, and are of great value in filling up gaps caused by the destruction of records in 1815, as well as for other purposes.

"4. British Blue Books, and British and Foreign State Papers, which contain many documents obtained by the British legation at Washington, or otherwise, but of which the records were:

"5. Papers obtained from our legations abroad, which likewise fill up gaps in our own records.

"The editorial labor in this work has been in the examination, analyzing, and indexing of the vast mass of material thus grouped, and in the collection, in some instances by the labor of years, of a portion of it; in supplying historical memoranda to explain the text, and of legal notes to sustain and apply it."

The compilation will fill two quarto volumes, and the estimated cost of printing is $4,500.

The committee report back the joint resolution and recommend its passage.

Mr. RANDALL. I want to say in connection with this matter there is no copyright asked for by the gentleman who has during his life prepared these papers, and who recently came into official station in the State Department. He is a wonderful man so far as information on this subject is concerned. He has almost exhausted it.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time.

Mr. BENNETT. I should like to hear the resolution read again.

The resolution was again read.

The joint resolution was adopted.

Mr. FARQUHAR moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

AGRICULTURAL REPORT.

Mr. BARKSDALE. I call up a joint resolution (H. Res. 201) for printing the report of the Commissioner of Agriculture.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, &c., That there be printed 370,000 copies of the annual report of the Commissioner of Agriculture for the year 1886; 250,000 copies for the use of members of the House of Representatives, and 120,000 copies for the use of members of the Senate.

SEC. 2. That the sum of —— thousand dollars, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to defray the cost of the publication of said report.

The report of the Committee on Printing (by Mr. BARKSDALE) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Printing, to whom was referred resolution for printing the report of the Commissioner of Agriculture for 1886, have considered the same, and instructed me to report the same back with the following amendments:

In line 3 insert the words "four hundred" instead of "three hundred and seventy thousand dollars."

In line 8, by adding, after the word "Senate," "and 3,000 copies for the use of the Department of Agriculture."

In line 1, section 2, insert the words "two hundred" preceding the word "thousand."

As amended, the committee recommend the passage of the joint resolution.

Mr. DUNHAM. By the act of 1884 the members of the House of Representatives had something less than 900 copies each for distribution of this Agricultural Report. For 1885 they received less than 600 copies.

Mr. REID, of North Carolina. About 590.

Mr. DUNHAM. According to this resolution the committee are furnishing to the members of the House some 750 copies for 1886. Is that correct?

Mr. BARKSDALE. It is not quite so much; it will be about 700 copies.

Mr. DUNHAM. There are 250,000 copies provided for the use of the House?

Mr. BARKSDALE. Yes, sir.

Mr. DUNHAM. There is no document that is more valuable to the members than this Agricultural Report.

Mr. RANDALL. Why not give the increased number of copies entirely to the representatives of the people rather than to the bureau?

Mr. BARKSDALE. This is the number that has been allowed the bureau heretofore in the preparation of this bill.

Mr. REID, of North Carolina. And the increase is entirely for the House.

Mr. BARKSDALE. The bureau is always ready to supply members of the House, when they request it, after their own supplies are exhausted. I ask that the resolution be put upon its passage.

Mr. DUNHAM. The members who get them from the bureau would have to pay for them.

Mr. BARKSDALE. No, sir; they are furnished without charge.

Mr. RANDALL. I would like to hear the reading of the report, or rather of the joint resolution, as it will stand if the amendments shall be adopted.

The joint resolution was again read as proposed to be amended.

Mr. PRICE was recognized.

Mr. RANDALL. I have the law before me here——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Wisconsin is entitled to the floor.

Mr. PRICE. Mr. Speaker, I was only about to suggest that I think there is no place where such a small amount of money will accomplish so much as in the publication of these agricultural reports, nor where such a small amount of money will provide so much useful and valuable information.

The cost is only about 50 cents a copy; and I think we could well expend a little more money so as to give the members of the House more copies for distribution. None of us want to keep them; they are distributed among the people, who read them and who prize them highly.

There is much valuable information in them; and I therefore move to amend by providing instead of 250,000 that it be increased to 400,000 copies for the use of the House. The estimated cost can be easily made up by a little computation and inserted at the proper place. I shall not press the motion for the purpose of blocking business, but will leave it to the House and hope the amendment will be adopted.

Mr. FARQUHAR. Without discussing the amendment now, I wish simply to state that it has been the custom, and on a review of the last year's proceedings in the Senate it will be seen, that while the House was anxious to add to the number of copies of the annual report on agriculture, yet the Senate demanded, and will demand out of the extra copies when it comes to their consideration, a part of whatever the increase may be. That was the trouble last year when the number was required to be cut down instead of being properly increased. So that if an amendment made in the House shall provide that the increase is for the use of the House exclusively to the extent of 50,000 or 100,000 copies, very certainly the Senate will make an amendment and take part of the increase themselves or cut the whole number down.

Mr. RANDALL. I have before me the laws of 1884 and 1885, and it is quite proper to refer to them in view of the inquiry made by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DUNHAM] as to why the number of copies furnished to the members of the House was reduced. I find by the act of 1884 that there was ordered printed 400,000 copies, 300,000 for the use of the House, 70,000 for the use of the Senate, and 30,000 for the use of the Department of Agriculture. When we come to the act of 1885, and that bears exactly upon the point of the gentleman's inquiry, we find that instead of being 300,000 copies, the House has only 200,000 copies, and the Senate is put at 80,000 and the Department of Agriculture 30,000.

Mr. REID, of North Carolina. Two hundred and ten thousand, I think, to the House.

Mr. RANDALL. No, the law reads 200,000 copies for the use of the House in that year. I think then we had better go back to the law of 1884 and give to the House—and, mark you, in both years the aggregate was 400,000 copies—and give to the House membership 300,000 copies. The Senate then, instead of giving them as they propose here a hundred thousand copies——

Mr. BARKSDALE. One hundred and twenty thousand copies.

Mr. RANDALL. Give them the same number, 70,000.

Mr. DUNHAM. As bearing on what the gentleman from Pennsylvania has just read to us, I will state that the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HATCH], the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture, early in this session offered a resolution which would divide to the members of this House and of the Senate the same number of copies of the Agricultural Report for 1885 as we had for 1884. I understand the Committee on Printing are not prepared to present that resolution to the House to-night.

Mr. REID, of North Carolina. We have incorporated that in this resolution.

Mr. DUNHAM. I think not.

Mr. RANDALL. I think we had better go back to the law of 1884, which gave members of the House 300,000 copies.

Mr. DUNHAM. I wish to say further, as bearing on the suggestion of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. PRICE], that under this resolution, as here presented, the House will receive about 750 copies per member, but the Senate will receive over 1,600 for each Senator. Now it seems to me that is not exactly the way the House would like to have this matter placed. I join with the gentleman from Pennsylvania in suggesting we put this up to 300,000.

Mr. PRICE. I wish to suggest to the gentleman from Pennsylvania and to my friend from Illinois [Mr. DUNHAM] that this is a progressive age, and that we ought not to take a back track. If the number in 1884 was 300,000 and that was sufficient, the increase of population and the increase of the agricultural interest would certainly require a greater number now than were required then.

Mr. DUNHAM. We do not propose to take a back track.

Mr. PRICE. If we shall add 150,000 copies to the number now proposed by the committee, when that proposition goes to the Senate if they object on the ground that they are not getting their usual share, it will be easy to divide them on some basis satisfactory to both sides, while in any case we will have accomplished the main purpose of publication and will get a valuable work before the people at a cost of 50 cents per volume. We will be presenting that work in large quantities to the people of the United States giving them information which they need. I want the additional number voted now, and if the Senate will not let us have them for distribution, then in the name of common sense and agriculture let the Senators distribute them themselves.

Mr. RANDALL. If you go back to the law of 1884, giving 300,000 copies to the House and 70,000 copies to the Senate, there will be 900 copies to each Member and each Senator. That will be quite fair, I think, and in either case the Department of Agriculture will have 30,000 copies. The arrangement of 1884 gives exactly the same number of copies for distribution by each Member and each Senator alike.

Mr. BARKSDALE. The gentleman from Pennsylvania has stated correctly that, by the act of 1884, 300,000 copies were given for the use of members of the House of Representatives and 70,000 copies for the members of the Senate. By the act of March 3, 1885, there were given 200,000 copies for the use of members of the House and 80,000 for the use of members of the Senate. I was not connected at that time with the Committee on Printing. But on investigation I learn that the House passed a resolution in 1885 similar to that which was adopted in July, 1884, but the Senate disagreed to it. The Senate insisted that it was not a fair and just distribution to have 300,000 copies for the House and but 70,000 for the Senate.

The difference led to a conference, and the result was the adoption of the resolution in the form in which it has been read by the gentleman from Pennsylvania. To avoid this difficulty the House Committee on Printing of this session have not returned to the figures of 1884, but they have proposed what may be regarded as a compromise in the shape of the resolution that has been reported, namely, to give 250,000 to the members of the House and 120,000 to the members of the Senate.

I will add, Mr. Speaker, that the distribution usually made between the House and the Senate of documents which are ordered to be printed is one-half as many for the Senate as for the House. We have departed from that custom in this case by giving the House a larger proportion than that. In other words, Mr. Speaker, under this resolution each member of the Senate would get about 1,000 copies, whereas the members of the House would receive about 700.

Mr. RANDALL. The one-seventy-sixth part of 120,000 would give a greater number to each Senator than the gentleman from Mississippi states.

Mr. BARKSDALE. It is something over 1,000. Now, in order to avoid the necessity and the trouble of a difference between the two Houses and a committee of conference, we hoped to make a report which would be acceptable to the Senate, and that the resolution would be passed in the form in which it is reported.

Mr. RANDALL. Will the gentleman from Mississippi pardon me when I say to him the proposition to give the Senate 120,000 copies gives each Senator nearly 1,600? And if it is a matter of compromise I think we can make a better compromise than that.

Mr. BARKSDALE. Judging from the report of the committee of conference in 1884, I would say these terms are much better than can be obtained by a committee of conference.

Mr. RANDALL. I want you to go back to the figures of 1884——

Mr. BARKSDALE. I meant 1885.

Mr. RANDALL. So as to give to the House 300,000 copies. And I really think they are more generally distributed by members of the House, and more intelligently distributed than by the Senators—at least equally so.

Mr. PRICE. Better; a good deal better.

Mr. BARKSDALE. The Senators have each much larger constituencies than the members of the House. For instance, take my own State; I represent one-seventh of the State, while one of the Senators represents half of the whole State. In view of this fact I insist that the distribution proposed is not unfair to the House.

Mr. RANDALL. But the Senators look rather to the Legislatures that elect them, while we look to the great mass of the people who sent us here.

Mr. BARKSDALE. Very true, Mr. Speaker; but, after all, the people elect the Senators through the Legislatures.

Mr. RANDALL. I only wish they did. [Laughter.]

Mr. SPRINGER. I hope my friend from Wisconsin [Mr. PRICE] will withdraw his amendment which proposes to increase the number of copies to be printed, and let us have the amendment submitted which is proposed by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL], that is, the law of 1884. That law gave each member of the House and each Senator about the same number of these reports for distribution. The Senators from each State have the same constituencies that the aggregate representation in the House from that State has, and it frequently happens that copies of these documents sent out by Senators are sent to the same persons who get them through members of the House. This duplicate distribution results in the loss of a great many of the books, and the more of them you give to the Senate the more you increase the probability of this wasteful double distribution.

The aggregate representation in this House from each State covers the whole population of the State, and I have known a great many instances where a person was getting the same book or document both from the Senators and the Representatives. I am sure that the Senators do not claim these documents as a matter of advantage to themselves. The distribution of them imposes much labor upon both Senators and Representatives. The books do not belong to us; they are intended for the benefit of the people at large, and our object here should be to adopt such a mode of distribution as will cause them to reach the largest number. In other words, such a distribution as will place them where they will do the most good.

Mr. DUNHAM. I would suggest to my colleague that the amendment of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. PRICE] is intended to accommodate the increased population in the different districts since the last census. That increase has been great. Take, for instance, the district that I represent. When the apportionment was made it contained about 150,000 people, whereas to-day it contains 300,000.

The same is true in large measure of the gentleman's own district in Central Illinois and of many other districts represented here.

Mr. SPRINGER. Yes; but the district of my colleague is a city district, while mine is an agricultural one.

Mr. DUNHAM. I beg the gentleman's pardon. My district contains thirteen towns besides the city.

Mr. RANDALL. Under the act of 1884 Senators and members of the House received each about the same number of copies; Senators getting 921 copies each and members of the House 900. Under the recommendation of the Committee on Printing, taking the membership of this House and the Delegates at 333, each Member and Delegate will get 751 copies, while each Senator will get 1,578. That is, each member of the Senate will get about twice as many copies as each member of the House.

Mr. BARKSDALE. But, Mr. Speaker, a Senator in some cases has thirty times as large a constituency as a member of the House, and that is especially true of the Senators and Representatives from the State of Pennsylvania. However, believing that the House is now prepared to vote on this resolution, I have risen not to continue the discussion but to call for the previous question.

Mr. RANDALL. Before the previous question is ordered, I would like to have the privilege of moving a substitute in the language of the law of 1884, which gives to each Senator and each Member about 900 copies.

Mr. BARKSDALE. I will accept that as a substitute.

Mr. JOHNSTON, of Indiana. Gentlemen should remember that the population of the country has increased largely since 1884, and the number of farmers has greatly increased.

Mr. RANDALL. I think the increased population will be best taken care of by lodging the distribution in the Representatives rather than in the Senators.

Mr. BARKSDALE. Now, Mr. Speaker, I call the previous question.

Mr. PRICE. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a parliamentary question.

Mr. BARKSDALE. I withdraw the demand for the previous question if the gentleman from Wisconsin desires to speak.

Mr. PRICE. Mr. Speaker, I wish it to be understood that my purpose in proposing the amendment which I have proposed was not to determine which end of the Capitol should have the larger part in the distribution of these documents. My sole object was to get more copies printed, and my amendment provides for 150,000 additional copies.

Mr. FARQUHAR. For the House, or for each body?

Mr. PRICE. I have put it so as to give the distribution to the House, without caring whether it is left there or not. I think the better way would be to have them all distributed by the House, because then there would be no duplication of copies; but of course we can not have it that way.

The estimate made by the committee as to the cost of these books is 50 cents per copy, because they provide for publishing four hundred thousand volumes, and propose to appropriate $200,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

Mr. BARKSDALE. The cost will not exceed 50 cents a copy.

Mr. PRICE. I am informed by gentlemen on this floor who ought to know, and I presume do know, that the actual cost is about 32 cents per copy. Now, can you tell me how the same amount of money can be better appropriated than in publishing additional copies of this work? There is no other class of people who can be as much benefited by this small expenditure as the people for whom these volumes are intended. They circulate among a class of persons who have not a great deal of literature at command, and among these people there is, I know, a universal clamor for these volumes. Therefore I hope the House will provide for the publication of one hundred and fifty thousand additional copies. If we can not at once determine how these copies are to be divided between Senators and Representatives for purposes of distribution, that matter can be arranged in a committee of conference.

Mr. RANDALL. I desire to move an amendment to insert 300,000 copies for the House instead of 250,000.

Mr. PRICE. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. Did the Chair entertain the amendment I offered, providing for 150,000 copies in addition to the 250,000?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The amendment is pending.

Mr. PRICE. Then I apprehend it takes precedence of the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. RANDALL. I have moved to strike out the 250,000 copies to be distributed by the members of the House and insert 300,000.

Mr. PRICE. But my proposition, which was first offered, is to increase the number to 400,000.

Mr. RANDALL. I do not wish to raise any parliamentary issue with the gentleman. Let his amendment be voted on, and then I will move mine.

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. PRICE to strike out "250,000" and insert "400,000," it was agreed to; there being—ayes 31, noes 6.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is now on agreeing to the amendment of the committee as amended on motion of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. PRICE].

The amendment as amended was adopted.

Mr. RANDALL. I now move to strike out the entire section and substitute what I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

That there be printed 440,000 copies of the annual report of the Commissioner of Agriculture for the year 1886; 333,000 copies for the use of members of the House of Representatives, 76,000 copies for the use of members of the Senate, and 31,000 copies for the use of the Department of Agriculture.

Mr. DUNHAM. The gentleman from Pennsylvania proposes to give 31,000 copies to the Department. Why not make the number 38,000, which would be 1,000 for each State?

Mr. RANDALL. I think the number I propose is about right, being 1,000 for each Senator and member and 31,000 for the Department.

Mr. BARKSDALE. I ask that the second section of the resolution be read.

The second section, as proposed to be amended by the Committee on Printing, was read, as follows:

SEC. 2. That the sum of $200,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to defray the cost of the publication of said report.

Mr. BARKSDALE. My object in having that read is to show that while the gentleman from Pennsylvania increases the aggregate number of copies to be published he does not increase the amount of the appropriation.

Mr. RANDALL. As I understand, the amount expended for this publication for the first session of the last Congress was $165,000, and for the second session $200,000. If the expenditures for the last Congress are any guide, I really believe $200,000 will cover the expense of printing these 440,000 copies.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state that the second section is not now under consideration. The question is now on the substitute of the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. PRICE. I hope it will be voted down.

The substitute was agreed to, there being—ayes 33, noes 10.

The second section of the resolution was read, as follows:

SEC. 2. That the sum of ——thousand dollars, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to defray the cost of the publication of said report.

The amendment reported by the Committee on Printing was read, as follows:

In line 1, before the word "thousand," insert "two hundred;" so as to make the appropriation $200,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The joint resolution as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. BARKSDALE moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

CIVIL SERVICE COMMISSION REPORT.

Mr. BARKSDALE. I report back favorably from the Committee on Printing the following:

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES, July 6, 1886.

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the third annual report of the United States Civil Service Commission be printed, and that 26,000 additional copies be printed; of which 2,000 shall be for the use of the Senate, 4,000 for the use of the House, and 20,000 copies for distribution by the commission: Provided, That appendices 8 and 9 of the report as published by the House of Representatives, Executive Document No. 140, Forty-ninth Congress, first session, be omitted by the Public Printer in printing this edition.

Mr. RANDALL. What is the nature of this report?

Mr. BARKSDALE. It is the usual report of the Civil Service Commission. I demand the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

Mr. BENNETT. I would suggest to my friend from Mississippi and my friend from North Carolina that perhaps it would be as well not to pass this report to-night.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. A wink is as good as a nod to a blind horse. [Laughter.]

Mr. BENNETT. I demand a division on the resolution.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 16, noes 11.

Mr. BENNETT. No quorum.

Mr. BARKSDALE. I ask that this resolution be laid aside for the present.

Mr. JOHNSTON, of Indiana. I object.

Mr. BENNETT. How long does the gentleman propose to lay it aside?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Indiana insist on his objection?

Mr. JOHNSTON, of Indiana. I have objected.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman insist on his objection?

Mr. JOHNSTON, of Indiana. Is the gentleman from North Carolina going to insist upon a quorum?

Mr. BENNETT. Does the gentleman address his question to me?

Mr. JOHNSTON, of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. BENNETT. Dead certain. [Laughter.]

Mr. JOHNSTON, of Indiana. As the gentleman, a friend of the administration which went into power pledged to civil-service reform, proposes to call a quorum, I will withdraw my objection.

By unanimous consent the resolution was passed over for the present.

INTEROCEANIC CANAL REPORT.

Mr. BARKSDALE. I now call up for consideration the resolution which I ask the Clerk to read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there be printed 5,000 additional copies of the report of Mr. Menocal on the interoceanic canal, Senate Executive Document No. 99, first session Forty-ninth Congress; of which 1,000 copies shall be for the use of the Senate, 2,000 copies for the use of the House, and 2,000 copies for the use of the Navy Department; and such additional number shall contain the plates, maps, and photographic illustrations.

Mr. BENNETT. What is this going to cost?

Mr. BARKSDALE. The estimated cost is $3,175.

Mr. FARQUHAR. I ask for the reading of the letter of the Secretary of the Navy.

The Clerk read as follows:

NAVY DEPARTMENT, Washington, D. C., June 23, 1886.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 21st instant, requesting to be informed as to whether the recent report upon the proposed route for an interoceanic canal by way of Nicaragua, made by Civil Engineer A. G. Menocal, United States Navy, and called for by resolution of the Senate, contains data of sufficient value to make its publication necessary or of interest to the public.

In reply I have to state that the report, which was prepared from surveys by naval officers in 1885, contains the latest information upon the subject of canal transit across the American isthmus by way of Nicaragua, and as there seems to be considerable public interest in the successful solution of this problem, I am of the opinion that the report is of sufficient value to render its publication expedient.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

W. C. WHITNEY, Secretary of the Navy.

To Hon. E. BARKSDALE,
Chairman of Committee on Printing,
House of Representatives.

Mr. BENNETT. Has this report been published heretofore?

Mr. FARQUHAR. It has not been published. That is the object of presenting this resolution to-night.

I now move the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The resolution was concurred in.

Mr. FARQUHAR moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was concurred in; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PAYMENT OF AWARDS—FRANCE AND SPAIN.

Mr. FARQUHAR. I now report back from the Committee on Printing the concurrent resolution of March 2, and ask its adoption.

The concurrent resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate of the United States (the House of Representatives concurring), That the statement relative to the payment of awards under treaties with France and Spain, transmitted by the President of the United States in response to Senate resolution of February 9, 1886, be printed, and that 5,000 additional copies of said message and statement be printed; of which 1,000 copies shall be for the use of the Senate, 2,000 copies for the use of the House of Representatives, and 2,000 copies for distribution by the State Department.

The concurrent resolution was agreed to.

Mr. FARQUHAR moved to reconsider the last vote taken, and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

REPORT ON ALASKA BY E. W. NELSON.

Mr. REID, of North Carolina. I desire to report back from the Committee on Printing the Senate concurrent resolution with reference to the report of E. W. Nelson on Alaska, and ask its adoption.

The concurrent resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the report on Alaska, by E. W. Nelson, be printed, with the necessary illustrations, and that 4,000 additional copies be printed; of which 1,000 copies shall be for the use of the Senate, 2,000 copies for the use of the House of Representatives, and 1,000 copies for distribution under the direction of the Chief Signal Officer of the United States Army.

The report (by Mr. REID, of North Carolina) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Printing, to whom was referred the concurrent resolution of May 25, 1886, that the report on Alaska by E. W. Nelson be printed, with the necessary illustrations, and that 4,000 additional copies be printed, have considered the same, and I am instructed to make a favorable report thereon and to recommend its passage. The estimated cost of printing 4,000 copies will be $4,556.

The concurrent resolution was adopted.

Mr. REID, of North Carolina, moved to reconsider the last vote taken; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

INTERNATIONAL SHEEP AND WOOL SHOW.

Mr. REID, of North Carolina. I ask unanimous consent to take from the table the House joint resolution (H. Res. 138) to print 10,000 copies of the Report of the Commissioner of Agriculture on the International Sheep and Wool Show held in Philadelphia in September, 1880, and put it upon its passage.

The joint resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, &c., That there be printed 10,000 copies of the Report of the Commissioner of Agriculture on the International Sheep and Wool Show held in Philadelphia, Pa., in September, 1880; of which 3,000 copies shall be for the use of members of the Senate, 6,000 copies for the use of members of the House of Representatives, and 1,000 copies for the use of the Commissioner of Agriculture; the work to be subject to the approval of the Commissioner of Agriculture.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

There being no objection, the joint resolution was taken from the table, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. REID, of North Carolina, moved to reconsider the last vote taken; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

REPORT OF BOARD OF FORTIFICATIONS AND COAST DEFENSES.

Mr. REID, of North Carolina. I now report back the resolution of the Senate of May 25, 1886, relating to fortifications and other coast defenses, and ask to put it upon its passage.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate of the United States (the House of Representatives concurring), That 7,500 additional copies of the report of the Board of Fortifications or other coast defenses be printed; 2,000 for the use of the Senate, 4,000 for the use of the House of Representatives, 500 for the War Department, and 1,000 for the Navy Department.

The report (by Mr. REID, of North Carolina) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Printing, to whom was referred the Senate concurrent resolution of May 25, 1886, that 7,500 additional copies of the report of the Board of Fortifications or other coast defenses be printed, have considered the same, and its adoption is recommended.

The estimated cost of the proposed printing is $10,577.50.

Mr. SAWYER. I would like to inquire of the chairman of the Committee on Printing, not with reference to this particular resolution, but

I have a great many letters of inquiry regarding a work by Dr. Sheldon Jackson about Alaska. Has anything been done in reference to printing any copies of that?

Mr. REID, of North Carolina. We have passed to-night several reports on Alaska.

Mr. SAWYER. But in reference to this particular matter?

Mr. REID, of North Carolina. Not with reference to that.

Mr. SAWYER. Having called the attention of the committee to it I shall not pursue the subject further at this time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the adoption of the resolution which has been read.

Mr. RANDALL. Mr. Speaker, I hope some member of the Committee on Printing will tell us how many copies of that report have already been printed, and whether there is a scarcity of copies.

Mr. REID, of North Carolina. The report is recommended by the Secretary of the Treasury. I do not think that any extra copies have been printed.

Mr. RANDALL. I ask what number has already been printed? This proposes to print an extra number. I think the gentleman had better let this lie over. I do not object to it, but I would like to be fully informed. This is a large sum of money to expend.

Mr. REID, of North Carolina. I ask for the reading of a letter which gives all the information the gentleman asks. [After looking for it.] I find I have mislaid the letter. I think only the usual number have been printed. This is the additional number to the regular number of 1,900.

Mr. RANDALL. I would like to have accurate knowledge of what has already been printed before forty or fifty members authorize the printing of extra copies. I have some copies at my disposal of that report, and if there is a scarcity I will offer to supply a copy to somebody. I think we should have some more information before we venture upon printing any more copies.

Mr. REID, of North Carolina. I ask that the concurrent resolution be laid aside for the present.

Mr. RANDALL. I think that is the better course.

There was no objection.

REPORT OF NATIONAL ACADEMY OF SCIENCES.

Mr. REID, of North Carolina, from the Committee on Printing, reported back with a favorable recommendation the following concurrent resolution of the Senate; which was read:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the report of the National Academy of Sciences for 1885, with its appendices, be printed in the usual octavo form, but that the eight accompanying memoirs be printed in quarto form, and that 4,500 additional copies of the report and memoirs be printed; of which 1,000 shall be for the use of the Senate, 2,000 for the House of Representatives, and 1,500 for the use of the National Academy of Sciences.

The report of the committee was read, as follows:

The Committee on Printing, to whom was referred the Senate concurrent resolution of March 31, 1886, that the report of the National Academy of Sciences for 1885, with its appendices, be printed in the usual octavo form, have duly considered the same, and have directed it to be reported favorably and recommend its passage. The estimated cost of the proposed printing is $13,249.

Mr. RANDALL. I would like to ask what particular scientific subject this report from the Academy of Sciences embraces.

Mr. REID, of North Carolina. I send to the desk a letter to be read for the information of the House. It contains all the information we have got.

The Clerk read as follows:

UNITED STATES SENATE, Washington, D. C., April 13, 1886.

DEAR SIR: I inclose herewith a communication from Professor O. C. Marsh, president of the National Academy of Sciences, in reference to the printing of their annual report for 1885, together with an estimate of the cost of printing the report, prepared by the Government Printing Office.

Section 3 of the act to incorporate the National Academy of Sciences, approved March 4, 1863, is as follows:

"That the National Academy of Sciences shall hold an annual meeting at such place in the United States as may be designated, and the academy shall, whenever called upon by any Department of the Government, investigate, examine, experiment, and report upon any subject of science or art, the actual expense of such investigations, examinations, experiments, and reports to be paid from appropriations which may be made for the purpose; but the academy shall receive no compensation whatever for any services to the Government of the United States."

Under this provision the academy have annually reported to Congress, and its reports have always been printed, some of them being upon subjects of general interest, and others of them being in answer to demands made by the Departments of the Government.

Respectfully, yours,

JOS. R. HAWLEY,
Of the Senate Committee on Printing.

Hon. E. BARKSDALE,
Chairman Committee on Printing,
House of Representatives.

The concurrent resolution was agreed to.

Mr. REID, of North Carolina, moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was agreed to; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MAP OF THE UNITED STATES AND TERRITORIES.

Mr. BARKSDALE, from the Committee on Printing, reported with amendments the joint resolution (H. Res. 160) to authorize the Commissioner of the General Land Office to cause 15,000 copies of the map of the United States and Territories to be printed.

The joint resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, &c., That the Commissioner of the General Land Office be, and he is hereby, directed to cause to be printed, under the existing contract, at a rate not exceeding $1.35 each, 15,000 additional copies of the map of the United States, edition of 1885; and the sum of $20,925, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated for that purpose out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

The report of the Committee on Printing was read, as follows:

The Committee on Printing, to whom was referred the joint resolution (H. Res. 160), have considered the same, and have instructed me to report it with the following amendments:

In line 8, after the word "five," insert "4,500 copies of which shall be for the use of the Senate, 10,000 copies for the use of the House of Representatives, and 500 copies for the use of the Commissioner of the General Land Office."

In lines 8 and 9 strike out "$20,925" and insert "$20,250."

The adoption of the resolution as so amended is recommended. The estimated cost of the proposed printing is $20,250.

Mr. BARKSDALE. I move the adoption of the amendments.

The amendments were adopted.

The joint resolution as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. BARKSDALE moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

REPORT OF DIRECTOR OF THE MINT.

Mr. BARKSDALE, from the Committee on Printing, reported back with a favorable recommendation the following concurrent resolution; which was read:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the report of the Director of the Mint on the production of the precious metals in the United States for the year 1885 be printed, and that 6,000 extra copies be printed; 4,000 copies for the use of the House and 2,000 copies for the use of the Senate.

The report of the committee was read, as follows:

The Committee on Printing, to whom was referred the accompanying resolution, that the report of the Director of the Mint on the production of the precious metals in the United States for the year 1885 be printed, and that 6,000 extra copies be printed—4,000 for the use of the House and 2,000 for the use of the Senate—have considered the same, and instructed me to report favorably thereon and recommend its passage. The cost of printing the report is estimated at $3,000.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. BARKSDALE moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was agreed to; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. BENNETT. I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. BARKSDALE. I hope that motion will not prevail.

The motion was not agreed to.

REPORT ON THE PANAMA CANAL.

Mr. REID, of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I report back from the Committee on Printing with a favorable recommendation the concurrent resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk, and I ask that it be put upon its passage.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The report will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, June 7, 1886.

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the Committee on Printing be directed to cause to be printed for distribution by the Senate and members of the House in the usual proportion 5,000 copies of the special intelligence report, by Lieutenant Kimball and Naval Cadet Capp, United States Navy, upon the progress of the Panama Canal during the year 1885, which report was transmitted to the House by the honorable Secretary of the Navy on May 20, and referred to the Committee on Printing.

The estimated cost of the proposed printing is $3,437.50.

Mr. BENNETT. What report is this that is to be printed?

Mr. REID, of North Carolina. It is the report of Lieutenant Kimball and Naval Cadet Capp upon the progress of the Panama Canal.

Mr. BENNETT. When was it made?

Mr. REID, of North Carolina. The inspection was made in 1885.

Mr. BENNETT. Why, Mr. Speaker, Mr. John Bigelow, of New York, and the chief engineer in the French service have made reports this year on the Panama Canal.

Mr. REID, of North Carolina. If my colleague will permit me I will have a letter read which will explain the character of this report.

The Clerk read as follows:

REPORT OF LIEUTENANT KIMBALL.

NAVY DEPARTMENT, Washington, D. C., June 23, 1886.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 21st instant, requesting to be informed whether in my opinion it be advisable to print the special report upon the progress of the work on the Panama Canal recently submitted to the Department by Lieutenant Kimball and Naval Cadet Capp.

In reply, I have to state that the report in question was made from personal inspection of the work during the past winter, and that in view of the peculiar interest which the isthmus transit possesses for the people of the United States I am of the opinion that it is advisable to print the report in question.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

W. C. WHITNEY, Secretary of the Navy.

Hon. E. BARKSDALE,
Chairman Committee on Printing,
House of Representatives.

Mr. BENNETT. What is the date of that letter?

Mr. REID, of North Carolina. June 28, 1886.

Mr. BENNETT. Well, I think there can be no possible utility to the people of the United States in printing a report as old as this.

Mr. REID, of North Carolina. I will have another letter read which will throw additional light on the subject and show the value of the report.

Mr. BENNETT. If the report was made last year it has been superseded by more recent reports.

Mr. REID, of North Carolina. It was made during this last winter.

Mr. BENNETT. Well, it has been superseded by more recent performances. It will be remembered by the House that within the last three months the chamber of commerce and other bodies in New York city sent Mr. John Bigelow especially to inspect the Panama Canal, to report upon the condition of the work, the probable time that would be consumed in its construction, and the probable output of money necessary to build it. Mr. Bigelow made a report on the subject, which is doubtless known to every member of this House. That report comes from a gentleman of very great ability, and is the most recent and most thorough of all the reports that I have seen respecting that great enterprise.

I am therefore unwilling to agree that the Government shall spend $3,000 or $4,000 in printing a report which, however scientific it may be, has been superseded by others more recent and more thorough.

Mr. REID, of North Carolina. In response to my colleague [Mr. BENNETT] I ask that the letter which I send to the Clerk's desk be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

2823 Q STREET, WASHINGTON, June 3, 1886.

SIR: Learning that the honorable Secretary of the Navy has transmitted to the House a report on the Panama Canal, referred to your committee, I beg leave to submit an earnest request for its printing. This report, made by Lieutenant Kimball, United States Navy, under orders, has been placed before me in consequence of my frequent duties in the past on the problem of interoceanic communication, in connection with which my report on the Suez Canal and its relation to our own isthmus transit was made to the Department. (Senate Executive Document No. 198, Forty-ninth Congress, first session.) Of this I have the pleasure to send from the Department to you two copies.

An attentive reading of Lieutenant Kimball's report will, I believe, show an impartial account of the Panama scheme, its present status and possible prospects, his investigations having been conducted for more than two weeks over the whole line of the proposed route. While offering no conclusions as to the cost or the time of possible completion of the work, he furnished new matter of high value, including the detailed plan and calculations for the proposed "barrage" to control the floods of the Chagres.

The secretaries of several chambers of commerce have expressed their desire for the printing of the report. I believe that the Government Printer will say that it would make an octavo of not more than thirty to thirty-five pages, and that the illustrations would be inexpensive, being those only which are explicative of the history of the scheme, what it has accomplished and what it has not. The illustrations in colors can be reproduced more simply.

Allow me to add that the officer in charge at the Department, Lieutenant Rodgers, is especially qualified to superintend the printing, as he was himself on duty on the isthmus.

All of which is respectfully submitted, and with the approval of the lieutenant, except the last suggestion, which is my own prompting and unknown to him.

I am, sir, very respectfully, yours,

J. E. NOURSE,
Professor, United States Navy (retired-list).

Hon. E. BARKSDALE,
Chairman Committee on Printing,
House of Representatives.

Mr. REID, of North Carolina. This report has been prepared and sent in by the Department; it is very recent, very elaborate, and very full; it is accompanied with full illustrations and is just ready for the Printer's hands. It has been asked for, as is stated in that letter, by different chambers of commerce, and will be very valuable to the country. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

The question was taken on the adoption of the resolution; and there were—ayes 12, noes 3.

Mr. BENNETT. No quorum has voted.

The CHAIRMAN. The point being made that no quorum has voted——

Mr. PRICE. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was not agreed to.

Mr. REID, of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this concurrent resolution be laid aside.

Mr. DUNHAM. I hope the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. BENNETT] will withdraw the point of no quorum in the interest of his colleague [Mr. REID].

Mr. BENNETT. I will do anything in the world to gratify my friend from Illinois but that. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The point being made that no quorum has voted, the Chair will appoint the gentleman from North Carolina, Mr. BENNETT, and the gentleman from North Carolina, Mr. REID, to act as tellers.

Mr. REID, of North Carolina. I ask unanimous consent to withdraw the resolution.

Mr. DUNHAM. Did I understand the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. BENNETT] to say that he would do anything for me except that one thing which I asked him to do?

Mr. BENNETT. Well, I would have done it when I answered the gentleman, but it is a different question now. [Laughter.]

There being no objection, the concurrent resolution was withdrawn.

REPORT OF COAST AND GEODETIC SURVEY.

Mr. REID, of North Carolina. I call up for present consideration Senate concurrent resolution for printing extra copies of the report of the Coast and Geodetic Survey.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there be printed 3,000 extra copies of the report of the Superintendent of the Coast and Geodetic Survey, showing the progress made in such survey during the year ending June 30, 1885, for distribution by said Superintendent.

The resolution was adopted.

Mr. REID, of North Carolina moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

COMPILATION OF REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. REID, of North Carolina. The resolution I am about to call up is the last measure the consideration of which I shall ask this evening. I call up joint resolution (H. Res. 22) authorizing the preparation of a compilation of the reports of committees of the Senate and House of Representatives. The Committee on Printing have reported back this joint resolution with a substitute. I ask that the substitute be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out all after the resolving clause and insert:

"That there be prepared, under the direction of the Joint Committee on Printing, a compilation of the reports of the Senate and House of Representatives from the Fourteenth to the Forty-eighth Congress inclusive, classified by committees, arranged, indexed, and bound in suitable volumes, for the use of the standing committees of the two Houses of Congress. And the sum of $7,750, or so much thereof as may be found necessary, is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the preparation of said work, which sum may be paid by the Secretary of the Treasury upon the order of the chairman of said joint committee as additional pay or compensation of any officer or employé of the United States."

Resolved further, That the Clerk of the House and the Secretary of the Senate be, and they are hereby, directed to procure and file for the use of their respective Houses copies of all reports made by each committee of all succeeding Congresses; and that the Clerk of the House and the Secretary of the Senate be, and they are hereby, authorized and directed, at the close of each session of Congress, to cause said reports to be indexed and bound, one copy to be deposited in the library of each House, and one copy in the room of the committee from which the report emanated.

Mr. REID, of North Carolina. I ask unanimous consent that the report accompanying this joint resolution be printed in the RECORD, for the information of the House.

There being no objection, it was ordered accordingly.

The report is as follows:

Mr. REID, of North Carolina, from the Committee on Printing, submitted the following report:

The Committee on Printing, having had under consideration the joint resolution (H. Res. No. 22) providing for a compilation of the reports of committees of the Senate and House of Representatives, make the following report:

The origin of the proposed compilation dates back to the Forty-sixth Congress, at which time a number of persons connected with both branches of Congress suggested the utility of such a work. In order to bring the subject before Congress, at the first session of the Forty-eighth Hon. C. N. Brumm, of Pennsylvania, introduced the following resolution:

"Resolved, That the Committee on Printing be, and they are hereby, authorized to inquire into the expediency of procuring a compilation of the House reports of committees for the use of the several committees of the House."

Near the close of the session the committee reported as follows:

Mr. Smith, from the Committee on Printing, submitted the following report, to accompany H. Res. 285:

The Committee on Printing, to whom was referred the following resolution—

"Resolved, That the Committee on Printing be, and they are hereby, authorized to inquire into the expediency of procuring a compilation of the House reports of committees for the use of the several committees of the House"— have had the same under consideration, and respectfully report:

The reports of committees from the First to the Fourteenth Congress were not numbered in order as reports, but were intermixed with the documents and numbered with them. The reports of committees for this same period are very rare, as there is not even a complete file of them in the Congressional Library; this is owing to the destruction of the records in the Capitol in 1814.

From the beginning of the Fourteenth Congress to the present time the reports have been numbered in the order in which they were reported in each Congress, and, including the Forty-seventh Congress, are bound in 212 volumes, in numerical order, making in all more than 26,000 printed reports. In the present arrangement these reports are not practically available, for want of classification and proper indexing.

The committee find that none of the rooms in which the committees of the House meet are supplied with files of the reports made by them. And it does appear expedient for each standing committee to have at hand a complete file of the reports made by them, arranged, indexed, and bound in suitable volumes. Such a compilation will embrace about three hundred volumes, and will require forty-six separate indexes and one consolidated index.

The estimated cost of such a compilation and index will be, for preparing, compiling, and indexing, about $10,000; for printing and binding, $——.

Your committee therefore recommend the adoption of the accompanying joint resolution.

A. M. SCALES, Chairman.
A. HERR SMITH.
WM. F. ROGERS.

"Mr. Smith, from the Committee on Printing, reported the following joint resolution:

"Joint resolution providing for the collection, classifying, and indexing the reports of committees.

"Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Joint Committee on Printing be, and they are hereby, authorized to contract for the collating, classifying, and indexing the reports of the standing and select committees of the two Houses of Congress from the Fourteenth to the Forty-seventh Congress, both inclusive, to the end that each committee-room in both Houses may be supplied with one bound copy of the reports made by each committee, respectively: Provided, That the cost of the same shall not exceed the sum of $10,000."

The committee have carefully considered the design of this work, and upon investigation find that none of the committees are supplied with a complete set of their own reports; and they concur in the report made by the Committee on Printing in the Forty-eighth Congress, "That it does appear expedient for each standing committee to have at hand a complete file of the reports made by them, arranged, indexed, and bound in suitable volumes." Such a compilation as is here proposed will remove all the uncertainty concerning the facts reported on any given subject by any past committee, and also save much of the reduplication of costly and useless printing.

It is apparent to the committee that thoroughness under the present system of searching for a given report, is a matter of impossibility, from the fact that more than 28,000 House reports, scattered through 223 volumes, having 98 separate indexes, each of which must be consulted in order to determine all that may have been reported on any one given subject. In order to illustrate this fact each Congress from 1800 to the present time have reported upon the question of French spoliation. Consequently, to determine all the reports that have been made upon this one question, these 98 indexes must be consulted and these 28,000 reports handled.

With the proposed compilation this great waste of time and laborious searching in the fields of uncertainty is completely overcome, as by a single reference to the report of the committee to which this subject was referred all the information extant upon that subject can be commanded in a moment of time. We therefore call the attention of the House to the proposed plan of the work, which is as follows:

COMPILING.

The purpose is to separate the reports as they are now found in the old volumes, distributing them to the committees from which they came, or classifying them by committees so that all the reports made by one committee will be found together under the new classification. The order of classification is first chronological and then numerical, beginning with the Fourteenth Congress. All the reports of the special and select committees will constitute a separate series and be bound together.

This compiling necessitates having one complete set of these printed reports. Many of the older reports are very valuable, as some of them are not to be found even in the Congressional Library, and it is hard to estimate their value.

There can be no question involved as to the thoroughness of this work when the reports are first collected and compared, showing that there are no omissions.

INDEXING.

The reports of each committee will require a separate index, averaging about fifteen pages each, being one for each standing committee, or seventy-two indexes, requiring more than 100,000 index entries. These indexes will be bound in each volume, so that any given volume of any committee will contain an index of all reports made by such committee.

BINDING.

The compilation when complete will consist of about three hundred volumes for the House and two hundred volumes for the Senate. The greatest number for any one committee will be for the Committee on Claims, of the House, which will make about thirty fair-sized volumes; but the average number to each committee will be about seven volumes. These volumes will be arranged in chronological and numerical order, beginning with the Fourteenth Congress and including the Forty-eighth. A sample set for the Committee on the Judiciary has already been prepared, which shows the entire plan and scope of the work.

PRINTING AND BINDING.

The estimated cost for printing and binding as furnished by the Public Printer is $10,365.58; said estimate was made from samples submitted by the committee.

COMPILING AND INDEXING.

The estimated cost of preparing said work:

Material and compiling	$2,550
Indexing	5,200
Total	7,750

The committee believe this proposed work to be of great importance, and that it ought to be provided for at once, while the material is available, so that Congress may have the benefit it will afford at the earliest possible date.

The committee therefore recommend the passage of the accompanying joint resolution as a substitute for joint resolution 22.

The following statement shows the condition of the printed reports of the two Houses of Congress:

SENATE REPORTS.

From the First to the Thirtieth Congress the Senate reports are numbered and bound with the executive documents. From the Thirtieth to the Forty-ninth Congress they are numbered and bound in numerical order, and bound in separate volumes. HOUSE REPORTS.

From the Fifth Congress to the present time the House reports are numbered and bound in a separate series in numerical order.

The number of these volumes in existence is very hard to estimate, as the books in the Library have never been catalogued, and the exact number is not known.

The following table shows the number of reports and volumes of the House in each Congress from the Fourteenth to the Forty-eighth, inclusive:

The question being taken on the adoption of the substitute, it was agreed to.

The joint resolution as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. REID, of North Carolina, moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

OFFICIAL REGISTER OF THE UNITED STATES.

Mr. REID, of North Carolina. I am directed as a privileged matter to report back, with the amendments of the Senate, the joint resolution (H. Res. 89) providing for the distribution of the Official Register of the United States. I move that the House non-concur in the amendments of the Senate, and ask a conference.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. DOCKERY) announced the appointment of Mr. BARKSDALE, Mr. REID of North Carolina, and Mr. FARQUHAR as the conferees on the part of the House.

SENATE.

MONDAY, July 19, 1886.

The Senate met at 11 o'clock a. m.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. G. BUTLER, D. D.

The Journal of the proceedings of Saturday last was read and approved.

CENSUS REPORT.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The presentation of petitions and memorials is now in order.

Mr. CULLOM. A communication has, I understand, been addressed to the President of the Senate from the Secretary of the Interior in reference to a report of Fred. H. Wines, who was one of the persons engaged in taking the census of 1880, called for by a resolution submitted by me and adopted by the Senate on the 15th instant. I am informed by the messenger who brought it here that the material is in the office somewhere.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair has received the letter of transmittal, but not the accompanying documents.

Mr. CULLOM. The accompanying documents are in the building. I do not know where exactly. I wish to have the report referred to the Committee on the Census and printed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will present the letter of transmittal. The documents to accompany it have not been received.

Mr. CULLOM. The gentleman who brought them over told me he left them in the office some place, I do not know where.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting, in response to a resolution of the 15th instant, a report of Fred. H. Wines, special agent of the Tenth Census, on the defective, dependent, and delinquent classes; which was read.

Mr. CULLOM. The documents referred to are the work of that officer in preparing that branch of the census report for publication. I ask that the communication and the documents be referred to the Committee on the Census and printed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is usual to refer this class of documents to the Committee on Printing to ascertain whether they should be printed or not.

Mr. CULLOM. It will be impossible for that committee to know anything about it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection the communication, with the accompanying papers, when received, will be referred to the Select Committee to make Provision for taking the Tenth Census and ascertaining the results thereof, without printing.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. BLAIR. I have received a communication in the nature of a petition, stating that at a regular meeting of the Woman's National Industrial League, held pursuant to notice, the following preamble and resolutions were unanimously adopted:

Whereas it has come to the knowledge of this league that colored children work in the mills and factories in the South sixteen and seventeen hours per day at wages ranging from 10 to 15 cents per day, the said children, male and female, being under ten years of age: Therefore,

Be it resolved, That we deem it just and right that the colored wage-workers of the South should be properly represented in the present Labor Bureau.

Resolved further, That a committee of this league be appointed to wait upon Hon. ROBERT SMALLS, M. C., and James E. O'Hara, the colored members of the House of Representatives, and urge them to ask that two colored men and two colored women be appointed as agents of said Labor Bureau to compile statistics of the colored wage-workers of the South, who compose a large majority of the laboring population.

Be it further resolved, That copies of this preamble and resolutions be sent to all colored organizations, the colored press and clergy, asking them to petition their respective State Legislatures to pass laws against the system of child labor, and strictly enforcing the law where it already exists against the same.

I will state in this connection that there has been during the last and the present Congress a bill introduced, I do not know but both times, certainly in the present Congress, by the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LOGAN], who is not present, providing that an investigation of the condition of the colored population and its progress made in civilization, industry, and the arts of life be made, extending over the whole period of time from emancipation until the present. The bill was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor. That committee has never reported the bill, as there seemed to be objections in the way of undertaking so vast a work; but the suggestion that there be representatives of the colored population employed in the Labor Bureau, so that statistics relating to this subject may be collected in connection with the other statistics bearing upon other portions of the population of the country, seems to me to be a good one, and I hope that it may be acted upon by the powers that be.

This petition may as well be referred to the Committee on Education and Labor. I do not know what we can do with it, but I make these suggestions hoping that something may come of the suggestions if there be no legislation.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The petition will be referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

Mr. SEWELL presented a petition of dairymen and butter-makers, citizens of New Jersey, praying for the passage of the oleomargarine bill; which was ordered to lie on the table.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore presented nine petitions of citizens of Ohio, praying for the passage of certain bills in relation to the public lands, Presidential and Congressional elections, and the disbursement of a part of the Treasury surplus; which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. CAMERON. I present a petition of the Octoraro Farmers' Club, of Pennsylvania. I should like to have the petition read, so that it may go into the RECORD, as it is very short.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The petition will be read, if there be no objection.

The petition was read, and ordered to lie on the table, as follows:

ATGLEN, PA., July 13, 1886.

To the honorable the Senate of the United States:

At a late meeting of the Octoraro Farmers' Club, composed of progressive and representative farmers and dairymen of Chester and Lancaster Counties, Pennsylvania, it was unanimously

Resolved, That, in view of the great wrong of the bogus-butter traffic, a committee be appointed to impress upon that honorable body, the Senate of the United States, the importance of protecting the dairy.

This pretended butter is often an unwholesome hash, a gross fraud upon the consumers, and an unfair and injurious competitor of the old and legitimate industry of the dairy.

And the committee earnestly hope that the Senate, in its wisdom, will see fit to pass without amendment, so that its enactment may not be retarded, the oleomargarine bill of the House of Representatives. It is believed that nine-tenths of the people through all the States will approve legislation which protects them from imposition, &c.

DAVID H. BRANSOM, Committee.

Mr. CAMERON presented eleven petitions of citizens of Pennsylvania, praying for the passage of certain bills in relation to the public lands, Presidential and Congressional elections, and the disbursement of a part of the Treasury surplus; which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. EVARTS presented a memorial of the Starlight Association of Yonkers, N. Y., with a mixed membership of 500; a memorial of the Literary Association of Verplanck, N. Y.; a memorial of the Confectioners' Protective Association, No. 5705, of New York city, with a membership of 4,000; a memorial of the Machinists' and Blacksmiths' Union, No. 12, of New York city, with a membership of 1,200; a memorial of the Mixed Labor Niagara Association, No. 93, of Brooklyn, N. Y., with a membership of 1,000; a memorial of the Robert Barrett Assembly, No. 1074, of Brooklyn, N. Y., with a membership of 1,500; and a memorial of the Advance Labor Club, of Brooklyn, N. Y., with a membership of 500, remonstrating against the passage of the oleomargarine bill; which were ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented the petition of C. N. Bowne and 28 other citizens of Delhi, N. Y., praying for the passage of the oleomargarine bill; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. McMILLAN. I present evidence in the form of affidavits in support of the bill (S. 2645) granting a pension to John Dennert, heretofore introduced by me. I move the reference of the papers to the Committee on Pensions.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. BROWN. I present three petitions. They purport to be, one from the seventh Congressional district of Georgia, signed by A. W. Jordan and 99 others; one from the eighth Congressional district of Georgia, signed by John Hodges and 54 others, and one from the fourth Congressional district of Georgia, signed by Julia S. Roberts and 173 others. Numerous others have been sent to other Senators, judging from what I have heard here, by Mr. Beaumont, chairman of the national legislative committee of the Knights of Labor, Washington, D. C., who sends these to me stating that they are from constituents of mine. I therefore present them. I will remark that there is great similarity in the handwriting of all the petitioners. However, I present the petitions, and move their reference to the Committee on Finance.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. COKE presented the petition of A. J. Session and 39 other citizens of the third Congressional district of Texas, the petition of W. E. Wilson and 100 other citizens of the fifth Congressional district of Texas, the petition of J. T. Moore and 138 others, citizens of the seventh Congressional district of Texas; the petition of E. M. Harris and 128 others, citizens of the tenth Congressional district of Texas; the petition of B. F. Dewsitt and 54 others, citizens of the eleventh Congressional district of Texas; and the petition of W. H. Ogden and 94 others, citizens of the first Congressional district of Texas, praying for the passage of certain bills in relation to the public lands, Presidential and Congressional elections, and the disbursement of a part of the Treasury surplus; which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. MAXEY presented eight petitions of citizens of Texas, praying for the passage of certain bills in relation to the public lands, Presidential and Congressional elections, and the disbursement of a part of the Treasury surplus; which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. GEORGE presented three petitions of citizens of Mississippi, praying for the passage of certain bills in regard to the public lands, Presidential and Congressional elections, and the disbursement of a part of the Treasury surplus; which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. HARRIS. I present three petitions, sent me by a citizen of this District, purporting to come from the people of Tennessee, asking for the passage of sundry bills. I move the reference of the petitions to the Committee on Finance.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. CONGER. I present seven petitions from different Congressional districts in Michigan, purporting to contain the names of 1,219 citizens of Michigan, praying for the passage of sundry bills mentioned on the back of the petitions, which I move may be referred to the Committee on Finance.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. PALMER presented a memorial of Knights of Labor of Republic, Mich.; a memorial of Knights of Labor of Ishpeming, Mich.; a memorial of E. A. Johnson and 11 others, citizens of Ishpeming, Mich., and a memorial of Peterson & Linden and 24 others, citizens of Escanaba, remonstrating against the passage of the bill relative to the manufacture and sale of oleomargarine; which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. LOGAN. I present six petitions purporting to come from Illinois, and requesting the passage of eight different bills, the titles of which are pasted on the outsides. I will mention that they all seem to be in some two or three handwritings, and I do not know where they come from, but I move that they be referred to the Committee on Finance.

The motion was agreed to.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. DAWES, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2855) to authorize a change of location of a certain Indian school building in Washington Territory, reported it without amendment.

Mr. PLUMB, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2862) to provide for the entry of a certain tract of land for town-site purposes, reported it without amendment.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. WHITTHORNE introduced a bill (S. 2864) to return the tax on cotton collected by the United States in 1865, 1866, 1867, and 1868 from the people of certain States of the Union, to be held and used by said States for educational purposes; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. WHITTHORNE. I move that the bill lie on the table, and I shall ask the courtesy of the Senate within a day or two to submit some remarks thereon.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. CAMERON introduced a bill (S. 2865) granting a pension to Morgan Gordon; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. McMILLAN introduced a bill (S. 2866) to amend sections 5191 and 5192 of the Revised Statutes of the United States; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. BLAIR introduced a bill (S. 2867) to grant leaves of absence to employés of the Bureau of Printing and Engraving; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

AMENDMENTS TO BILLS.

Mr. LOGAN, Mr. McMILLAN, Mr. SAWYER, and Mr. VOORHEES submitted amendments intended to be proposed by them respectively to the general deficiency appropriation bill; which were referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. BLAIR. I submit an amendment to the joint resolution (H. Res. 126) directing payment of the surplus in the Treasury on the public debt, providing that before the payment of any part of such surplus or balance there shall be reserved and set apart the sum of $79,000,000, which shall be known as the common-school fund, which shall be paid from year to year next after the passage of this resolution, and providing the terms of the common-school bill enacted by the Senate at the present session, simply changing them so as to correspond to a joint resolution instead of a bill. I move the reference of the amendment to the Committee on Finance.

The motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. "Concurrent and other resolutions" are now in order. If there be none such, the Calendar is in order.

Mr. MILLER. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the oleomargarine bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New York moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 8328) defining butter, also imposing a tax upon and regulating the manufacture, sale, importation, and exportation of oleomargarine. The question is on the motion of the Senator from New York.

Mr. CONGER. I ask the Senate to lay that bill aside informally, and I ask unanimous consent to pass a bill providing for a bridge between the towns of Menominee, Mich., and Marinette, Wis.

Mr. MILLER. Let the oleomargarine bill be first taken up.

Mr. CONGER. I thought it was taken up.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from New York to proceed to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. INGALLS. Is there a quorum present, Mr. President?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is of the opinion that there is not a quorum present within three or four members.

Mr. CONGER. Probably there will be a quorum by the time the bill which I ask to have taken up is read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Nothing is in order until the roll is called under the rule. The attention of the Chair being called to the fact that there is not a quorum present, the rule makes it imperative that the roll shall be called.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Allison,	Dawes,	Jones of Arkansas,	Spooner,
Beck,	Dolph,	Jones of Nevada,	Teller,
Berry,	Edmunds,	Logan,	Vance,
Blair,	Evarts,	McMillan,	Van Wyck,
Cameron,	Frye,	Maxey,	Vest,
Chace,	Gorman,	Miller,	Walthall,
Cockrell,	Gray,	Platt,	Whitthorne,
Colquitt,	Harrison,	Plumb,	Wilson of Iowa,
Conger,	Hoar,	Sawyer,	Wilson of Md.
Cullom,	Ingalls,	Sherman,

Mr. CHACE (when Mr. ALDRICH'S name was called). I desire to announce that my colleague [Mr. ALDRICH] is detained from the Senate by sickness.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Thirty-nine Senators have answered to their names. The question recurs on the motion of the Senator from New York to proceed to the consideration of the oleomargarine bill.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. VANCE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from North Carolina yield to the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. VANCE. What is it that the Senator from Michigan desires?

Mr. CONGER. I had asked unanimous consent to take up a bridge bill, which had been passed by the House, for a bridge over the Menominee River, a wagon-bridge between two villages there. I should like to have it passed here as it has passed the House, and they are waiting to contract for the bridge.

Mr. VANCE. I yield for that purpose.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Michigan asks unanimous consent, pending the consideration of the oleomargarine bill, to proceed to the consideration of the bill named by him. Is there objection?

Mr. EDMUNDS. Subject to a call for the regular order.

Mr. INGALLS. And subject to the reading of the bill for information.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be read for information, subject to objection.

Mr. CONGER. I ask unanimous consent that we have until half past 12 o'clock to devote to the Calendar.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill is before the Senate.

Mr. MILLER. The bill is not objected to.

Mr. CONGER. I understood the Senator from Vermont to object.

Mr. EDMUNDS. No; it is only taken up subject to call for the regular order.

MENOMINEE RIVER BRIDGE.

By unanimous consent the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 8023) to give the assent of Congress to the construction of a bridge by the municipalities of Menominee, Mich., and Marinette, Wis., over Menominee River.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DISTRICT POLICE REGULATIONS.

Mr. CHACE. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 2600) to authorize the commissioners of the District of Columbia to make police regulations for the government of said District.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the bill is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. CHACE. I reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia an amendment as a substitute for the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That the commissioners of the District of Columbia be, and they are hereby, authorized and empowered to make, modify, and enforce usual and reasonable police regulations in and for said District as follows:

First. For causing full inspection to be made, at any reasonable times, of the places where the business of pawnbroking, junk-dealing, or second-hand clothing business may be carried on.

Second. Concerning the observance of Sunday in the carrying on of business in the District of Columbia, to designate what places may be kept open or shall be closed on that day.

Third. To regulate the storage of highly inflammable substances in the thickly populated portions of the District.

Fourth. To locate the places where licensed venders on streets and public places shall stand, and change them as often as the public interests require, and to make all the necessary regulations governing their conduct upon the streets in relation to such business.

Fifth. To make needful regulations for the orderly disposition of carriages or other vehicles assembled on streets or public places, and to require vehicles upon such streets and avenues as they deem necessary to pass along on the right side thereof.

Sixth. To establish and regulate the charges to be made by owners of hacks and hackney carriages of any kind whatsoever.

Seventh. To prohibit conducting droves of animals upon such streets and avenues as they may deem needful to public safety and good order.

Eighth. To prohibit the deposit upon the streets or sidewalks of fruit, or any part thereof, or other substance or articles that might litter the same, or cause injury to or impede pedestrians.

Ninth. To regulate or prohibit loud noises with horns, gongs, or other instruments, or loud cries, upon streets or public places, and to prohibit the use of any fireworks or explosives within such portions of the District as they may think necessary to public safety.

Tenth. To regulate the movements of vehicles on the public streets and avenues for the preservation of order and protection of life and limb.

Eleventh. To prescribe reasonable penalties for the violation of any of the regulations in this act mentioned; and said penalties may be enforced in any court in the District of Columbia having jurisdiction of minor offenses, and in the same manner that such minor offenses are now by law prosecuted and punished.

SEC. 2. That the regulations herein provided for shall, when adopted, be printed in one or more of the daily newspapers published in the District of Columbia; and no penalty prescribed for the violation of said regulations shall be enforced until thirty days after such publication.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I ask the Secretary to reread the clause about conducting animals on the streets.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Seventh. To prohibit conducting droves of animals upon such streets and avenues as they may deem needful to public safety and good order.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I should like very much to have added to the bill, if it does not exist somewhere, as this is probably the proper bill, it being a police regulation, a provision to regulate or prohibit the keeping of dogs. I propose that as an amendment, to follow right on after the clause which has just been read. I trust the Senator in charge of the bill will not object to that. There should be some power lodged somewhere among the officers of this city to provide for that, which is an intolerable nuisance I think all over the city.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Nebraska moves an amendment to the amendment, which will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. After paragraph 7, and after line 31, it is proposed to add:

To regulate or prohibit the keeping of dogs.

Mr. MILLER. Will the Senator from Nebraska consent to strike out the words "or prohibit," and simply leave it "to regulate?" It seems to me that ought to be sufficient power. We should not give such arbitrary power as the Senator proposes.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Perhaps the Senator can suggest some other word to meet the point. My object is this——

Mr. MCMILLAN. Let the bill go over for the present, until I have an opportunity of seeing it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is made, and the bill goes over.
